Mr. SWANSON. The issue in this case is not whether the cadets drank whisky or did not drink whisky; the issue is whether you shall maintain discipline at West Point by trying a cadet under the rules and regulations or whether you shall try him by rules and regulations that were not existing at that time. They had been changed on the 15th of June and they were tried in August. I say, when it is evident that the rules and regulations were not enforced and that injustice was done through a mistake of facts, the only way it can be corrected is by reassembling the court-martial and let that court-martial consider the rules and regulations in existence at that time. That is all that is asked to be done.

Mr. ROOT, Mr. JONES, and others addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield, and to whom? Several Senators are asking for recognition.

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I stand precisely with the Senator from Virginia upon his proposition. I think we ought to have a record here by a report from the Military Committee which will show that we are making a precedent in accordance with the statement of the Senator from Virginia, instead of having it appear that we are making a precedent of interference with the discipline. If these young men were tried and sentenced by a court which understood that they were bound by the regulations to impose a sentence of dismissal when as a matter of fact the regulations had been changed so that they were not bound to impose that sentence——

Mr. DU PONT. Those are the facts.

Mr. ROOT. Then I think the young men ought to have a new trial on the ground of a mistake of law. But we should have some evidence in the proper and customary form showing that such a mistake was made.

Mr. DU PONT. I agree entirely with the Senator.

Mr. ROOT. If we do not have it we will be making a precedent of simple interference with discipline.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from New York that I agree with him, and I will undertake to file a supplementary report to accompany the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield the floor?

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait until I get the floor in my own right.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DU PONT. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that a report should be filed before the joint resolution is passed. It is a strange proceeding to pass a bill and then have a report come in. The report might be different from what we considered it would be at the time the bill was passed. Why can not the joint resolution go over and let the report be filed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now pending is that the Senate will give unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the question, if the Senator is to be understood as making a motion, was that he be permitted to make a report, and that rather than have it go over——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood, but prior to that permission had been asked for present consideration, and pending the putting of that question this discussion has been had.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I have the recognition of the Chair——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho now has the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will make a statement which may be of some interest in regard to this class of cases. In 1906 a measure of this kind was introduced for the purpose of displacing the unfinished business in this body, which was then the pure food and drug act. When it became evident that that bill would succeed, two or three insignificant cases of reinstating cadets at Annapolis were brought forward with great gusto as being public measures of the highest importance, upon which the discipline of the Navy depended. I think every Senator who voted for it regretted it afterwards, and, as was suggested by some Senator here this morning, I think, perhaps, the Senator from Kansas, every Senator recognized that they had been led into making a mistake in order to accomplish a piece of diplomatic legislation. The Senator who led in that is not now a Member of this body, but I remember it well.

Now, we are asked here to review the action of the President of the United States, because it is the President's approval of the action of this board that constitutes the official act. The President approved the action of the board. The board was merely a means of advising the President in the execution of the law. There is no board that executes the law. Boards are the mediums through which facts are ascertained to enable those intrusted with the execution of the laws to perform their duty.

It is rather a serious proposition when you propose to reopen the judgment of the President of the United States, who did know that a rule existed, because he had signed it, and who did know the exact status of the case. The President knew when he approved of it the status of the law, and without impeaching his careful, accurate determination of the fact, we can not waive that question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Is it not true that the board was not informed of that fact?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not material. If the President had known it he would simply have said to the board, "Take this view; the law has been changed recently."

Mr. BACON. But he did not know that the board had acted without a knowledge of that fact.

Mr. HEYBURN. All I rose to do was to call attention to the status of these cases and suggest that when the President of the United States communicates with Congress he does not do it by talking to individual members of committees. The President has at his control a legally organized and recognized method of saying to Congress, or to the Senate in this case, "It appears to me that when the proceedings of this board were approved by me I was not advised at that time that there had been a change in the law," and saying to the Senate of the United States, through the medium of a constitutional message, "I would advise the Senate to take such action in the matter as would obviate this mistake." Now, that is the dignified way of meeting it, and not get up here and say that you talked with The Adjuant General, or you have talked with the Secretary of War, or even with the President. That is not the way messages come into the Senate.

I know nothing of the merits, so I will not even suggest the merits of this case. But let us proceed in a dignified and orderly way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for the purpose of enabling the Committee on Military Affairs to submit a report in this case, I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the joint resolution goes over.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it was my purpose to ask the Senate to consider the river and harbor bill this morning, but I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] would like to continue his remarks on the tariff bill. In view of that fact, I shall not call up the river and harbor bill (H. R. 21477) at this time.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota at what time does he expect to ask that that bill be taken up?

Mr. NELSON. I expect to call up the bill at the very earliest opportunity I can get.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But the Senator has not in his mind at this time a definite hour when he expects to call up the bill?

Mr. NELSON. I have not. I shall, however, be glad to call it up when the Senator from Iowa has closed his remarks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, has any arrangement been made regarding the consideration of the river and harbor bill?

Mr. NELSON. No such arrangement has been made.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I make the inquiry because I have just entered the Chamber.

Mr. NELSON. I have stated to the Senate that it was my purpose to call up the river and harbor bill for consideration this morning, but I ascertained that the Senator from Iowa desired to continue his remarks on the tariff bill, and on that account I shall not call the bill up until he shall have concluded.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota whether he is likely to call up the bill to-day or whether it will go over until to-morrow?

Mr. NELSON. I am unable to say. If the remarks of the Senator from Iowa should not continue beyond 3 o'clock, I might ask the Senate to consider the bill to-day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that when the river and harbor bill comes up I shall desire to address the Senate on the Mississippi River situation.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, being House bill 18642, be now taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to express my appreciation of the very generous suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I had hoped that I might conclude my remarks upon this subject before this time, but other business has intervened that seemed to be necessary. Therefore I am projected, as usual, into the very midst of the hour for luncheon.

Iron ore bears under the existing law a duty of 15 cents per ton. In the amendment which I have proposed it is put upon the free list. The existing duty is not large. It might almost be termed nominal, and yet I believe that it ought to be upon the free list for four reasons:

First. By far the greater proportion of the iron ore produced in the United States is mined by companies which do not mine it for sale, but which do mine it for conversion in their own furnaces into pig iron.

Second. It costs less in the United States at the furnace than it does abroad at the furnace.

I do not intend to pause at this time in order to establish this fact, because the whole question will finally, in a very few moments, merge into the inquiry as to the cost of pig iron.

Third. The eastern coast of the United States ought not to be burdened with the freight rate from the Lake region upon iron ore. The eastern coast of the United States, a very narrow territory along the eastern coast, is the only part of the eastern half of the United States that can by any possibility come into competition with foreign steel and iron, and we ought, for the benefit of the manufacturers of steel and iron along that coast, to admit, without any burden whatsoever, iron ore.

Fourth. As a matter of public policy it is unwise to artificially hasten the exhaustion of our supply of iron ore. It will be far better for the people of the United States to take what ore may come at this time under free importation from Cuba or from any other country than to exhaust, at large expense and with long hauls in transportation, the ores that lie in the interior of our own country.

For these reasons, which I will probably amplify as I go forward in the consideration of the proper duty upon pig iron, I have in the amendment which I shall presently offer placed iron ore upon the free list. I do not believe that any possible reason can be given for attaching a duty to its importation, except that it might raise and would raise a small revenue; but as I am not looking at this subject primarily from the standpoint of the revenue I have ventured to put it upon the free list.

I come now to pig iron, and I shall devote a good deal of time to pig iron, because it is the great basic material upon which the iron and steel industry of the country is founded, and as my amendment begins its duties at this point, I intend to digress just long enough to make some brief but general observations upon the Republican rule for the ascertainment of duties.

Broadly speaking, the system of protection intends—and I want my Republican friends to listen to and carry with them this statement—broadly speaking, the system of protection intends to so burden importations that our markets can be supplied with domestic productions with fair profit to the producer. If anyone dissents from that general statement of the doctrine of protection, I would be glad if he would dissent now, because it is upon that foundation that I build the fabric which I shall offer to the Senate in this amendment.

Every thoughtful—I emphasize the word "thoughtful"—every thoughtful Republican recognizes that there are certain limitations in the application of the doctrine. I state these limitations in this way: First, that it must be restricted to those things which we are naturally fitted to produce and respecting which our inability to sustain free competition with the world is due to a higher labor or a higher capital cost. Second, that it can not be applied to protect inefficiency—and that I shall also amplify presently as I come to deal more in detail with this subject. It is impossible for the Republican Party to long maintain the system of protection if it be intended or used for the purpose of protecting the inefficient against the inroads or the rivalry of the efficient, nor can it be used for the purpose of maintaining or sustaining industries that are unfortunately or mistakenly mislocated. We can not burden the commerce of the country in the effort to maintain industries that are not so situated that they can avail themselves of the natural, the essential economies of the time. Third, it can not be applied to protect great disparity in the cost of transportation. There comes a time when we must cease our efforts to equalize the difference in the cost of transportation when that difference is very great.

No more vivid or pertinent illustration of the limitations upon the doctrine of protection can be found than in lemons. I thought of that because I happened to be looking directly at the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who, in 1909, made so gallant a fight to prevent the increase in the duty upon lemons. We can not maintain a duty on lemons that will enable that commodity to pay a freight rate across the American Continent and supply the citizens of New York. It is impossible for us to ignore the economic reasons which require that territory to take a part of its supply of this commodity from a land that can reach New York at a freight rate less than one-half, possibly one-fourth, of the freight rate from California to New York. We must do what we can fairly and reasonably to cover the disparity in the cost of transportation, but I think there is no Republican who will claim that we must, in order to produce a commodity in the United States, give to that commodity such protection as will, under all conditions, equalize freight rates where the difference is great.

There has been a good deal of criticism—and I speak of it now as coming from the other side of the Chamber and from other sources—upon the definition of the doctrine of protection as contained in our last national platform. I believe that, technically, these criticisms are well founded, but substantially they are without merit. In 1908 we said:

> In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.

Technically and literally the platform presents a standard which is impossible of ascertainment or application. There are as many different costs of production in the United States as there are different plants or industries engaged in the production of a particular article. The cost of the article at one period of the year varies from the cost of it at another period of the year; the cost of the article varies according to the volume of the business of which it is a part. It is mathematically utterly out of the question to apply the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, for the reasons stated, and, further, because the same variety with regard to the cost of production will be found abroad as is found at home. As an illustration, pig iron, which I will presently discuss, varies in this country as much as $2 a ton in cost of production. Take wool, and, as shown by the report of our Tariff Board, it varies in the cost of production from less than nothing, with a large credit, indeed, to its production, to 19 cents a pound or more. It is apparent that no mere mathematician can take the statistics and create out of them a rule by which he can measure tariff duties. We forget sometimes, when we are clinging to the literalness of this rule, a further statement in the Republican platform of 1908. It is this:

> The aim and the purpose of Republican policy being not only to preserve without excessive duties the security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers, and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wageworkers of this country, who are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system.

As illuminated, as interpreted, by the phrase which I have just read in your hearing, the previous definition becomes altogether understandable and altogether easy of application. Therefore the criticism of our definition, of which I have heard so much, is rather technical than substantial. But what we intend to do and ought to do is to put such a duty upon the various articles that we are fitted to produce as will enable our manufacturers, living as they do, paying the wages they do, to enter our markets and there dispose of their commodities at a fair profit; and so understanding the doctrine of protection, I turn now to pig iron.

But before I enter upon the details of the process of producing it or the cost of producing it I want Senators to look at the map which has been hung upon the wall in order to better understand the part which transportation plays in the problem of protection.

This map contains a cross near the center of Indiana east and west and toward its southern border north and south, which is intended to mark the center of population of the United States. You all understand that there are as many people south of that line as north, as many people west of that line as east. There is as much steel and iron—more steel and iron—used in the United States west of a line drawn north and south through the center of population than there is used east of that line.

I have a very interesting table upon that point, which shows one phase of the consumption of iron and steel. I have here a table which shows the railway mileage of the several States in 1910. It shows that the States lying west of the center of population—and I have given the East the benefit of all territory that can not be divided; I have given the East the benefit of Indiana and the benefit of Alabama—it shows that lying west of the center of population there are, or were at that time, 142,597.04 miles of railway. Lying east of the center of population there were 97,841.8 miles of railway. I instance this simply to show that the one enterprise which is the largest consumer and user of steel and iron in our country has for its greater field the western territory.

Mr. President, I ask that the table to which I have just referred, and which I believe is authentic, be inserted in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOURNE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

West.	Miles.	East.	Miles.
Arizona	2,097.31	Alabama	5,226.16

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator an estimate showing the amount in pounds of steel rails east of the dividing line and also west of the dividing line? The reason I ask is this: Most of the railroads in the East have a great deal heavier rail than the railroads in the West, and I started to collect figures showing that the difference in the weight of steel rails in the West and in the East would about balance as to weight; but I have not the complete information.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not attempted even to estimate, and it would be an estimate largely, the relative weight of steel rails west of the center of population and east of the center of population; but the point I desire to make does not need any disparity between the consumption of steel East and West. It will be quite, I think, as apparent, if we assume that there is the same amount of steel used West as East.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe, from the answers I have already received, that that will be the case.

Mr. CUMMINS. This map further shows, and purely for illustrative purposes, seven cities, each marked with a red circle, at which the seven of the principal steel plants of the country are located. I do not want anybody to think that these are all the plants or even all the important plants, but for the purposes of the argument I am making I am content with showing the geographical location of the seven largest steel plants in the United States. The one farthest east is Bethlehem—the Bethlehem Steel Co.—the next is Baltimore, the next Harrisburg, the next Johnstown, the next Pitsburgh, the next Buffalo, then Chicago, and finally Birmingham.

The United States Steel Corporation has its largest plants at Pittsburgh and Chicago. I, of course, include Gary within the territory that I describe as Chicago, and a lesser plant at Birmingham, formerly owned by the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., of which we have heard so much. The Pennsylvania Iron & Steel Co. has one plant at Harrisburg, and I think one at Baltimore. The Maryland Steel Co. has one at Baltimore. The Cambria Iron & Steel Co. has now and has had for many years a large plant at Johnstown, somewhat east of Pittsburgh. The United States Steel Corporation and the Jones & McLaughlin Co., another very large enterprise, are at Pittsburgh. The United States Steel Corporation is at Chicago and at Birmingham. The Lackawanna Iron & Steel Co. at Buffalo.

The freight rates upon pig iron from foreign countries to the eastern seaboard will average about $2 per ton. The freight rate varies much, as is true with all ocean carriage, but I state a very low average when I say from the furnace in any foreign country to the eastern seaports of our own country the rate is $2 a ton upon pig iron and rises, of course, with the different kinds of iron and steel as they rise in value.

I have had prepared for me by the Interstate Commerce Commission certain——

Mr. SMOOT. I have carefully collected the ocean freight rates from Great Britain and the north seaports to Boston, to New York, to Philadelphia, and to Baltimore on iron ore, pig iron, rails, billets, bars, plates, structural iron, sheets and tin plates, rods, wire, and tubular products, and I wish to say to the Senator that in speaking of pig iron the ocean rate from Great Britain and the north seaports to Boston is $1.50.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know where the Senator from Utah derives his information, and do not doubt that, taking it for a particular time, it may be correct. I reassert, however, that the average rate on pig iron from foreign countries—mark you, I do not speak now only of the ocean carriage, but from the furnaces in Great Britain and Germany and France to our eastern seaboard—will average $2 per ton.

As I was about to remark a moment ago, I have had prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission sheets showing the freight rates upon all the heavy forms of iron and steel from our eastern border toward the West, and these sheets show not only the domestic rate—that is, the rate if the shipment originates in the United States, but the import rate as well—that is, the United States part of the rate if the article is brought from a foreign country. I ask, Mr. President, not to have these sheets inserted in the midst of my remarks, but printed as an appendix to the remarks, because I think they will be very useful and helpful to anyone who desires to investigate the matter in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAWFORD in the chair). Without objection, the sheets will be printed as an appendix to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa.

(For the sheets referred to see Appendix.)

Mr. CUMMINS. Assuming that the $2 rate per ton, of which I have spoken, is correct (the Senator from Utah says a dollar and a half instead of $2), let us see what effect that rate will have upon our own production and distribution of iron and steel, and especially pig iron.

Beginning with $2 at the seaboard, the import rate upon pig iron to Harrisburg, including the $2 rate from abroad, is $4.40 per ton.

Mr. SMOOT. From where?

Mr. CUMMINS. From abroad to Harrisburg. I am speaking especially of English shipments, but what is true of them is likewise true of all the other ports of Europe, or substantially true. What does that mean? It means that a manufacturer of pig iron or any other steel product at Pittsburgh, desiring to ship his product toward the West—and nearly the whole country lies west of Harrisburg—begins with that advantage. I do not intend to disparage the eastern States at all, but it is still true that much the larger part of the United States lies west of Harrisburg. So an American producer at Harrisburg—that is to say, the Pennsylvania Iron & Steel Co., manufacturing pig iron at Harrisburg and shipping it to the West for any purpose whatsoever—begins with an advantage of $4.40 per ton, and even the most enthusiastic advocate of high duties does not assert that the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad is $4.40 per ton.

I go a step further west, and take the great manufacturing establishments at Pittsburgh, which I suppose produce and turn out more iron and steel than any other district in the world. I am dealing with pig iron, although what I say about pig iron, so far as the freight rates are concerned, is true of every other product. The United States Steel Corporation or Jones & Laughlin at Pittsburgh, wanting to ship pig iron to the West or ship any of the products of pig iron to the West, begin with an advantage or a preference of $5.40 per ton, and the English manufacturer of pig iron, in order to put himself upon even terms with the producer at Pittsburgh, must first pay $5.40 per ton before he can begin the voyage of business with our domestic manufacturer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be fair to call attention to the fact that the freight rate from Pittsburg to Mobile, we will say, to-day, upon the pig iron is $6.72, or more than it is from Birmingham, England, to Mobile. The freight rate from Pittsburgh to New Orleans is $6.72.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I interrupt the Senator from Utah there? I do not want him to project a southern situation into the phase of the subject that I am now discussing. I will come to the South presently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa decline to yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not decline to yield further, but I wanted to make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will take San Francisco. The freight rate on pig iron from Pittsburgh to San Francisco is $14 to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that perfectly. And when the Senator from Utah assumes to put a duty on pig iron that will enable the producer of pig iron in Pittsburgh or Chicago to take it to San Francisco and pay $14.50 freight upon it and meet the German manufacturer of pig iron or the English manufacturer of pig iron there, who pays freight and a duty of $5 or $6, he is insisting upon a burden that the American people will not endure. I will come to the San Francisco situation presently.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to say that I am insisting upon that, because I am not. I am simply calling attention to the fact. I was going on to take up the San Francisco rate and go right through.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator wants to ask any question, I will be delighted to answer it. I will come presently to the western situation and the southern situation, and in all probability I will make admissions that will be wholly satisfactory to the Senator from Utah; that is to say, I will not hesitate to make admissions that there are some parts of the United States that we can not cover with a duty upon pig iron without so enhancing the value of that commodity as to destroy the fundamental rights of free men to do business without undue restriction.

But I am going on now with this northern and western situation. I repeat that the great iron producers of Pittsburgh, when they are brought into competition with the iron producers of the Middlesborough district of England or the Luxemburg district across the Channel, have the advantage I have mentioned in all the shipments west of Pittsburgh until they reach the zone of water influence along the southern and the western shores of America. They have the advantage of $5.40 per ton, and there is no man in this Chamber or elsewhere who dare assert that the difference between the cost of producing this article here and abroad is one-half of $5.40 per ton.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying, but I was wondering, when he speaks of a point in the western territory from Pittsburgh, if he can tell us what the import rate from Great Britain to that western point is—not to Pittsburgh.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am giving it to Pittsburgh.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not talking about Pittsburgh.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will go back. The table I have introduced shows all these rates.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course the Senator recognizes that the import rate from the seaboard to any point in the interior is much less than the domestic rate on the competing product.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not so much less as the Senator may think; but I desire to remind the Senator from Michigan of the statement I made when I was attempting to define the limitations which must be put upon the doctrine of protection in order that it may be tolerable, and one of those limitations was that we can not protect an American industry against misapplied or ill-adjusted freight rates. There is no reason why a cargo of pig iron coming from England and landing in New York should be carried toward the West for any less rate by our railroads than though that cargo originated in New York. Whenever we impose upon the American producers of steel and iron the necessity for efficiency and activity and the assertion of their own rights, there will cease to be the difference to which the Senator from Michigan has just called attention.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I quite agree with the Senator on that. I was speaking about the fact that it existed.

Mr. CUMMINS. The fact is that if they were attempting to ship to the Missouri River as between Pittsburgh and the Missouri River and England and the Missouri River, there would be a difference of about $4 a ton.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend now, if I may suggest to the Senator from Utah, to inquire into all his calculations. I have made my calculations. I have that information from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I must be permitted to rely on it during the course of my argument.

But if it were half of that, if the manufacturer at Pittsburgh had but $2 advantage over the manufacturer in England, would there be any pig iron shipped from England to the Missouri River or to Chicago? There is no pig iron shipped from abroad to any point that is beyond 50 or 75 miles west of the eastern border of the United States until you reach the western coast, where there is a small amount of pig iron brought in from China. There is not very much, but there is a small amount of pig iron brought in there, and there could be more brought there, and I expect that there will be more brought there, because unless the Panama Canal is efficient in reducing the freight rate from our eastern seaports to our western seaports, we can not take pig iron or any other product of iron and steel across the American continent on our railways and compete with a freight rate of one-half or less than one-half the amount from England or Germany or France, and we ought not to attempt to do it. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator recognizes the fact that the rate on pig iron or structural steel or any other commodity made by the mills in Pittsburgh has to find a market not only East but West as well. Is it not a fact that the manufacturer of rails or pig iron in Pittsburgh, in order to reach any of the North Atlantic ports, has a disadvantage as against the man who manufactures these articles in Birmingham?

Mr. CUMMINS. Most of them, yes; some of them, no; as I will presently show.

I have now, as it seems to me, demonstrated beyond any controversy whatever that we need no protection upon iron and steel to prevent importations from abroad to any part of the territory of the United States west of Harrisburg. I think that line might well be advanced 50 miles east of Harrisburg, but I take Harrisburg as a convenient separating line. Until we reach the Pacific coast there is no protection needed, and not one pound of iron or steel in heavy form could be introduced into that territory, even though a foreign government were to pay $2 a ton export bounty upon it.

Mark you, I am making a discrimination now between the heavier and cheaper forms of iron and steel and the more finely organized and manufactured forms of steel. We will reach a point finally where the cost of the article is so largely in excess of the cost of the material and where the value bears so little relation to the weight, that upon some of those articles without a duty our foreign competitors might get into the territory I have described. But as to the articles I am now discussing, they are as safe from invasion by any foreign producer as though they were surrounded by a Chinese wall and were guarded by all the military force of the country.

Now, I come to answer the question just put by the Senator from Utah with regard to shipments east. Taking Harrisburg again, the rate on pig iron, Harrisburg to New York, is $1.75 per ton. At times when England can import pig iron into the United States for $1.50 a ton, the Englishman would have an advantage of 50 cents a ton in New York. The rate from Pittsburgh to New York is $2.60 per ton, and if the average rate from foreign countries to New York is $2 a ton the foreign manufacturer would have an advantage of 60 cents per ton.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Pittsburgh man would have the advantage?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the foreign manufacturers would have the advantage of 60 cents per ton. To be absolutely candid about it, if the cost at the furnace abroad and at home is the same, and if we are ready to put a duty on pig iron and the subsequent materials that grow out of it that will absolutely protect, at all hazards and at all times, every inch of the territory of the United States, then we would be compelled to put some duty on pig iron. But in putting a duty on pig iron that under those circumstances will protect the port of New York, or the port of Boston, or of Baltimore, from foreign imports, we must lay a duty that rises so high, so far as the interior is concerned, that it becomes absolutely indefensible upon the doctrine of protection, as I understand it and as I have endeavored to state it during the course of these remarks. I simply want Senators to remember the barrier which transportation itself erects for the protection of the American producer as I go forward to consider the actual cost at the furnace of this material here and abroad.

Prior to 1912 the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations, Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, than whom there is no more intelligent and faithful public servant, made a most exhaustive and prolonged examination into the cost of the heavier articles of iron and steel in our own country. His examination consisted of the most thorough-going scrutiny of the books of the various iron and steel producers. There is no conjecture, there are no estimates. He reproduces what the iron and steel manufacturers themselves put down upon their books for their own guidance and their own information. I intend at this time to refer to the results of his investigation. There are many other sources of information, but I can not and I will not take up the time of the Senate by bringing into my remarks now all the investigations that have been carried forward upon this subject.

His report takes the period from 1902 to 1906. I have no doubt that immediately it will be asserted that conditions have changed since 1906, and that it costs more in the United States to produce these things than it cost then. I will give further attention to that before I close the debate upon this subject, but in order to allay any misapprehensions upon that matter I desire to read a single paragraph from the report to which I have referred. It is found on page 2, paragraph 6:

> That the costs for this period (1902 to 1906, inclusive) are substantially representative of present conditions is shown—> by a comparison of costs for a number of important selected plants for special products from 1902 to 1906, inclusive, and for 1910.

Says the author of the report—

There is in this report a very careful showing with regard to the cost of the United States Steel Corporation alone, and that showing relates to the cost of that company for 1910 and a comparison of the cost for 1910 by that company with the cost for 1902 to 1906 verifies what Mr. Smith, the Commissioner of Corporations, says in the paragraph I have just read.

I assume that every Senator here knows in a general way the process of manufacture.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Senator going to leave the question of cost?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; the question of comparative cost.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say to the Senator that Herbert Knox Smith's cost on pig iron is so near—within 1 cent a ton—of that which has been submitted by Mr. Schwab, Mr. John A. Topping, and others, that I certainly shall not make the statement that the cost is greater to-day than it was at the time Herbert Knox Smith made his report.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am deeply obliged to the Senator from Utah for the statement he has just made. I have heard it asserted a good many times here that the present cost is much greater than in former years, and I wanted to begin with a full understanding upon that point.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question in the difference of cost, as I have heard it stated, is that the ore to-day is not carrying as much iron as it did in 1902, and, therefore, carrying a less percentage of iron, of course, the metallic mixture of the pig iron or the steel rail would cost more. But, on the other hand, there are reductions that have been made which would about offset it, as far as the cost is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. And, aside from that, the mines of foreign countries are becoming exhausted just as our own are, and therefore I assume this reduced or lessened richness of the ore is true everywhere. The iron ore is brought to a furnace and there, with coke and fluxing material, is converted into pig iron by melting.

I know the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] doubts my scientific knowledge on this subject—and it is very much less than his own—but——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I know something about it and will try to describe——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRISTOW in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. I simply want to disclaim any such idea. The Senator from Iowa, I think, is very thoroughly informed upon the different processes of the manufacture of what are generally considered the rougher grades of steel. I want to concede that to him, and I do so very willingly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Pig iron is used in two general ways. First, it is remelted and used for castings without any intermediate process. I do not intend this afternoon to refer to cast iron. Second, it is melted with proper injection of other metallic mixtures and is turned into ingots. These ingots are then rolled into the various forms of rolled steel. The ingot may be rolled directly into the steel rail; it often is. It may be rolled into billets, which in turn are rolled into structural iron or steel, or bar iron, or rods, or any of the various forms of which I shall speak.

I want the Senate to hold that general process in mind while I turn now to what has been shown by the United States itself, for on this matter and so far as the investigation is concerned, Mr. Herbert Knox Smith may speak for the United States or the executive department of the United States. He examined the books showing the production of 66,816,004 tons of pig iron, covering the period from 1902 to 1906. I do not assert it as being literally true, but that must be 75 or 80 per cent of the entire production of pig iron in this country during that period. It would be most interesting to read everything he has said about it, but I do not intend to take the time.

I call your attention to the first table, not the first table in his report, but the first table that refers to the subject that I am specially discussing. It shows the result of an examination of 66,000,000 tons and more of pig iron. He has divided pig iron into three classes. The first is the Bessemer pig. The second is what he calls basic iron, although I think he has somewhat miscalled it. Anyhow, what he means to classify there is the pig iron that has been made for what is known as the open-hearth process.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I know the Senator wants to be accurate, and I will correct him in that. Basic iron is pig iron made in exactly the same way as Bessemer, but of such composition as to be used in the basic process of the manufacture of steel as against the acid, open-hearth process.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is precisely what I attempted to say. I think the Commissioner of Corporations intends the 9,573,000 tons there to represent pig iron made for the open-hearth process.

Mr. OLIVER. No; pig iron made for the purpose of being used in the open-hearth process.

Mr. CUMMINS. I mean for the purpose of being used in the open-hearth process.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the other classification is of southern ores of low grade in Alabama and that region.

Here is the cost that he gives us:

The net metallic mixture of the Bessemer pig is $7.30 a ton, of the basic pig iron $7.14 a ton, and of southern iron pig $2.35 per ton. That means the iron ore and the other metals that enter into the composition of pig iron.

The next is coke, limestone, labor. The labor involved in converting enough ore to make a ton of pig iron for the Bessemer process is 77 cents; the labor for the basic is 62 cents; and the labor in the southern pig is $1.23—that is, all the labor attending the conversion of iron ore into pig iron.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I do not say that that is all the expense of converting iron ore into pig iron. I am speaking now of the labor of the furnace and about the furnace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. About the only difference, I think, between the position I take and the position the Senator from Iowa takes is the question as to what is labor and what it amounts to.

Mr. President, on this particular matter I certainly hope I shall have a chance to prove to the Senate that instead of the labor that is in pig iron being as stated—and I will give the details of every part of it—it is $4.50 a ton. Of course, I would not attempt to take the time now, but the only difference between the Senator and myself on this whole question is as to what is the actual labor in taking the ore and making it into steel really.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, my friend from Utah, it seems to me, does not analyze this question as he should. Referring again to the table that we have just been mentioning, the cost of the metallic mixture is $7.32 for Bessemer pig. What does that mean? It means all the labor that was required to take that ore from the mine. It means the royalty which the company paid, or claimed to pay. It means the cost of transportation from the ore mine to the lake. It means the cost of transportation from the lake to the furnace. It means wages at the American price. It means more than that. This item of $7.32 includes not only all the high wages which the companies paid at the mines, or claimed to pay; it means not only the high wages of the employees of the transportation company; but it means all the profit which has been nominally derived in transferring the ore from the company which nominally mined it to the company which transported it and from the company which transported it to the company which used it in its blast furnace. That item of $7.32 includes all this labor and all this profit; and if you were to take the profit alone that is charged up to the mining company and to the transportation company from the item $7.32, you would reduce it by more than $2 per ton. Therefore I do not differ from my friend from Utah. I know that there is a great deal of labor in the item of $7.32; I know there is a great deal of labor in the item $3.89 for coke; but I am dissecting the report of the Commissioner of Corporations in order to show you what a ton of pig iron costs in this country as compared with the cost abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one minute. The cost of that item will depend, of course, upon how they keep their books; as to where they charge each item. Now, I want to say——

Mr. CUMMINS. This table has all the items, anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the items are the same as those the Senator has. This item of 77 cents, as reported by Herbert Knox Smith—and he claims that the cost is $14.01—under the esimate given by Mr. Schwab is $1.30; and yet the estimated cost of pig iron by Mr. Schwab is 1 cent a ton less than that given by Herbert Knox Smith. So I asked Mr. Schwab how he accounted for that, and he said it was merely a matter of how they kept their books. Some may say that Mr. Schwab has charged too much on this particular item of labor; but Mr. Schwab's ultimate result is a cent a ton less than that of Herbert Knox Smith. So that can not be.

Mr. CUMMINS. No matter whether Mr. Schwab and Mr. Herbert Knox Smith differ as to particular items or differ as to the result, without in the least saying anything disparaging of Mr. Schwab, I prefer to take the conclusions of an officer of the United States, selected to do this work impartially and fairly.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think it would make any difference in the ultimate result because of that fact. It only means that that much more work is included in the other items because of the fact that the results both those gentlemen reached are exactly the same.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah, however, is very far from clear. He suggested a moment ago that the labor cost of pig iron was over $4 per ton. Of course the purpose of that suggestion was to instill into the minds of Senators the idea that if the labor cost here was twice as much as the labor cost abroad, there ought to be a duty on pig iron of at least $2.50 per ton. Therein his reasoning is very fallacious, as I have endeavored to show——

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment—because in ascertaining the cost of pig iron in this country I have taken $7.30 as the cost of the metallic mixture, just as the Commissioner of Corporations did, and that includes all that the company which produced the ore paid for wages and all it paid for every expense of producing it. I have taken $3.89 for coke.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Plus their profits.

Mr. CUMMINS. And their profits; but I will come to that; I shall insist on the deduction of profit presently. But the item of $3.89 for coke includes all that was paid to the owner of the coal land for royalty, all that was paid for mining the coal, all that was paid for transporting the coal, and all that was paid for converting the coal into coke. Therefore I hope the Senator from Utah, seeing his error, will not suggest that in the table I have presented here it is necessary to allege that the labor cost of converting the iron ore into pig iron is more than 77 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, I could not help stating that it is more because of the facts.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, I give you up. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I will state the facts as to the labor cost. Take what this $7.30 represents. The lease or royalty is only 25 cents, the mining is 82 cents, and the transportation from the mines to the Lakes is 67 cents. Those are the figures given by Herbert Knox Smith.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The cost from the Lakes is 74 cents, to Pittsburgh 67 cents, the total transportation cost is $2.08, the general charges are only 16 cents on this, and that makes $3.31. It takes 1.97 tons of ore——

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Utah will not go into that subject. It is totally foreign to the question I am now discussing.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am going to bring you to the $7.30.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not need to be brought to it. It is in the report, and there it must stay.

Mr. SMOOT. We are discussing the question of what represented labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am discussing the question of how much it costs to produce a ton of pig iron, and we find it costs $7.30 for its ore.

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator exactly what it is.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know. I do not need to ask the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa says it is 77 cents.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the cost of converting iron ore into a ton of pig iron. The labor cost—the wage cost—is 77 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, of course——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BACON. I simply want to suggest, Mr. President, that this is a very interesting subject, and we are very much interested in the Senator's address. I should be very glad if we could hear him continuously, and then we shall be equally glad to hear the Senator from Utah continuously. We could appreciate it very much better than we can in this interjected way. Frequently the conversation is between Senators who are standing near each other, and we can not hear it. I do not, of course, want to interfere in any way, but I should be very glad to hear each of the Senators continuously in a consecutive way.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is really no difference between the Senator from Utah and myself with regard to this. It is merely the way of stating it. He desires to separate from the beginning to the end all the processes of labor from all other costs. He might just as well say that all of the $14.01, the cost of producing Bessemer pig iron, is labor. In one sense it is all labor. As I remarked the other day, if we could conceive a world uninhabited, with its resources unused, it would be impossible to impute to anything in such an earth any value whatsoever. Men must come and perform some labor upon these materials and create some demand for their use before there is anything of value, but if I could paint upon the mind of the Senator from Utah the picture of a blast furnaceman and hold it there, I tell him again that I am trying to find out what it costs him to convert iron ore into pig iron, and I restate that it costs him, if he desires to make Bessemer pig, $7.30 for the metallic contents of his ton of pig iron. It costs him $3.89 for his coke. In both those cases there is included every cent that the men who produced the ore or the men who produced the coke paid for the labor and paid for every other thing necessary to that production. To his men who took the iron ore and converted it into a ton of pig iron he paid 77 cents, and no more; other operating expenses, and by that is meant the general expense of the furnace, 87 cents; so that the furnace cost is $13.26 for the Bessemer pig iron and for the southern pig iron it is $9.52.

You will observe that below the general furnace cost there has been added 75 cents per ton in the one case and 13 cents in the other for what is termed "additional cost." Now, let us see if we agree on what the additional cost is. The additional cost, as added by the Commissioner of Corporations, is largely for depreciation. I want the Senate to know precisely what the commissioner says about that part of the cost.

On page 24 of this report the commissioner says:

> The items of additional cost derived from the profit and loss accounts can not be allocated except by more or less arbitrary methods of apportionment. They comprise the items of general expense and depreciation.

I especially want Senators to remember now that the 75 cents per ton on Bessemer pig includes the items of general expense and depreciation. That will be especially important when I come to refer you to a similar table with regard to the cost of making pig iron in England, where those items are not included in the estimate or in ascertaining the cost of making pig iron.

Therefore we have those costs that you see before you [indicating] in the United States, and they are the average costs. They are not taken from the large companies alone nor from the small companies alone, but from substantially all of the companies of the United States which make pig iron, and I think it absolutely fair if we assume that in our country the items there shown represent the reasonable costs of this production.

I remind you again that the total includes, first, the profits of mining ore; second, the profits of transportation, as the table itself shows; third, the profits of coal mining and coke conversion; fourth, the profits of coal transportation if the company which manufactures the pig iron owns the transportation company; fifth, all operating and maintenance expenses; and, sixth, general expenses and depreciation. All these items are in this table added to the cost of material and labor, and the total is, as you see, $14.01 for Bessemer pig iron and $9.65 for southern pig iron, the great distinction between the two qualities being that one is mainly used for casting and the other for steel rolled products.

I now beg your attention to a corresponding table, which I am sorry I have not reproduced so that you could see it. The table itself is found in the report of Charles M. Pepper, a special agent of the Department of Commerce and Labor, of his investigations in respect to the cost of making pig iron and other iron products abroad, and especially in England. Now, my Republican friends, at least, will not, I think, question the capacity of Charles M. Pepper to make such an investigation. He is, in the first place, a man of many, many years of experience. He was chosen by the present administration for the performance of one of the most delicate and one of the most difficult duties ever imposed upon a citizen of the country with reference to the late lamented reciprocity agreement with Canada. He stands deservedly at the head of men of his occupation, and I therefore submit what he has brought to the people of the United States for their guidance with the utmost confidence. He was commissioned by the Department of Commerce and Labor to inquire into this subject, and on the 2d day of April, 1909, he made a report that was intended as a guide for the Finance Committee in the preparation of the act of 1909, but which, I am bound to say in defense of Mr. Pepper, was not very influential in the deliberations of that committee.

I will read these costs so that you may know them. The pig iron is divided into two classes—the first called Cleveland pig iron, which is the product of a general district there, and, I think, largely called "Cleveland," because certain commercial warrants, which are current in England and which pass from hand to hand very much like commercial paper, are called "Cleveland warrants," although the pig iron itself may have given the name to the warrants—I am not sure about that—but, anyway, it is pig iron produced in the Middlesborough district, and it corresponds to the southern pig in our country, as you will see presently when I introduce a sheet which will show the prices of pig iron in this country and abroad during the last year or more.

The other kind of pig iron referred to here is what he calls "hematite," made from hematite ores that are largely imported into England and the pig iron produced from which corresponds to the Bessemer pig, which commands the highest price in the United States. Mr. Pepper reports that the cost factors are as follows: Iron ore, $3.89—that is for the Cleveland pig—and $6.20 for the hematite pig.

I pause there simply to say that the reason our metallic cost is higher apparently than the cost abroad is that in the figures which I have placed before you there are included the profits of the companies which are separated only by name, but which are credited with profits in the course of the transaction of the business of the integrated company.

The coke in the case of the Cleveland pig iron costs $3.89, and in the case of the hematite pig iron, $5.10—a very great advance over our cost for coke. "Limestone, 36 cents in the one case and 32 cents in the other. Wages"—and I think Mr. Pepper is perhaps more happy in the description than Mr. Smith, because he defines just what he means—"wages at furnace for the Cleveland pig, 91 cents a ton"; with us it is $1.23 a ton in Alabama; "and for hematite pig 97 cents a ton"; with us it is 77 cents a ton. The labor of converting ore into Bessemer pig in our country is 20 cents a ton less than the cost of converting the same kind of ore into the same kind of pig iron in England.

Now, it matters not about the wages. I am happy to believe that we pay more here than they do there, and, so far as I am concerned, I will always stand for a duty that will lift the wages of the men of the United States, but I do not want a duty based upon a false pretense, for in England, as you see by this report, the cost of taking these ores after they are delivered at the furnace and converting them into a ton of pig iron is 20 cents a ton more than in the United States. If anyone attempts to sustain a tariff duty on pig iron upon the assumption that it costs more to turn the iron ore into pig in the United States than in England he will be compelled first to overturn the report of Mr. Pepper, made after the most careful investigation.

I will not read all the remaining items, but I will read the last one alone, in order that the Senator from Utah, who may have this report before him——

Mr. SMOOT. I have it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will be reminded of it. The last item is fixed charges, including relining and repairs, 55 cents in the one case and 56 in the other.

The result of this showing by Mr. Pepper is that in the case of Bessemer pig iron the cost abroad is $13.45 a ton and the cost of the parallel to our southern pig iron is $9.92 a ton.

Mr. SMOOT. From what page has the Senator been reading?

Mr. CUMMINS. Page 10. This, Senators, is the result of, I assume, as careful and complete and thorough an investigation as was ever made into the subject. Standing just exactly as the tables now stand, without any further examination at all, it would appear that the cost of Bessemer pig iron in the United States is 56 cents a ton more than abroad and that the cost of producing the lower grade of pig iron is 27 cents a ton more abroad than in the United States, but all this without taking into account what it costs the man abroad to bring his product to the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is making a very interesting statement. Could the Senator explain how, in view of the fact, which the Senator concedes, that we are paying a higher rate of wage in this country than is paid in Europe, we are producing that particular product at a less cost than they are producing it abroad? Have we better facilities or better methods?

Mr. CUMMINS. The explanation is not difficult. I think it is because our material does not cost us as much as it does the producer abroad.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ah, that is all I wanted to know. I wanted to know exactly where the difference came in.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is one of the reasons, at least. There is another reason, and that is, although possibly it is not so much true of pig iron as of many other products, our superior skill in the use of machinery.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the point which I thought it likely the Senator would bring out. That, to some extent, explains it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that that applies so fully to pig iron as it does to some of the other products of steel; but the great difference is the difference in the cost of material.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question there. In the calculation of cost of English hematite pig iron at $13.45, is there an item included corresponding to the item of additional cost for depreciation?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is not. I was about——

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that if that item were included the difference would not exist, would it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to show what items are to be taken out of our table here in order to make it entirely parallel with the table abroad, and you will be, I think, somewhat surprised—I was about to say gratified—to discover that we are making pig iron in the United States for a great deal less than they are making it abroad; and if we loose a little in the basis for protective duties, we ought to supply that loss with increased pride in the American name.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator what goes into the manufacture of pig iron that is cheaper in this country than abroad? Commencing, now, with ore; the ores from Spain are delivered in England and also in Germany, where there is no transportation inland, at a lower rate than ores are delivered to any steel mill in the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not agree with the Senator from Utah about that. I assert that ore at the furnace in the greater part of Europe is higher than ore at the furnace in the United States; I assert that coke, or the fuel used in converting ore into pig iron, is much more expensive abroad than it is at home. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, my eye has just fallen upon what Mr. Pepper has said with regard to ore in England.

Mr. SMOOT. On what page?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am now reading from page 11. He heretofore says that England uses 50 per cent of imported ores.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it a Senate document from which the Senator is reading?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is Senate Document No. 42, Sixty-first Congress, first session.

Mr. SMOOT. It is also House Document No. 1353.

Mr. CUMMINS. I repeat that about one-half the ores that are used in England are imported ores, and this is what Mr. Pepper says with regard to that subject:

> The prices of foreign ore were lower—

He is now speaking, I suppose, of 1908—

> The prices of foreign ore were lower than in 1907, when as high as 25s. ($6.08) per ton had been paid for Spanish ore—

And nearly all the ore that England imports comes from Spain.

> In 1908 the range of prices for rubio ore—

That is Spanish ore—

> at Middlesborough was from 14s. 9d. ($3.58) to 16s. 6d. ($4.01). In December it was an even 16s. ($3.89).

That is per ton.

There is much more in this report of like tenor.

Mr. President, the highest price that is claimed for ores from the Lake region at the Lake ports, including all the profits of the mythical ore companies, is $2.64 a ton.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. CLAPP. That is wrong.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the iron content of the Lake-region ore is much higher—there is a greater percentage than the iron content of the Spanish ore. Therefore I assert, and I will prove it—I did not suppose it would be contested—that on an average, after eliminating the general subject of profits of ore companies which do not exist in fact, that the ore at the furnace in the United States costs a great deal less than at the furnace abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. Herbert Knox Smith's report shows that the ore costs $3.31 instead of $2.40; and not only that, but the Senator must understand that there are ores from Spain imported into this country; and why are they imported?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will tell you why they are imported. Aside now from some ores that may be imported because we have no like ores in the United States and must import them, ores are imported because of the tremendous cost of transportation from our ore-producing regions to the eastern manufacturing localities.

Mr. SMOOT. The total transportation charge, according to Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, is $2.08, and yet the ores from Spain are imported into this country.

Another thing—the cost of transportation of ore from Spain to England and to Germany is but a very, very small part of what it costs from the mines of the Northwest to Pittsburgh or to Harrisburg or whatever eastern point it may be. And so, also, if you will take the English ores and find the metallic content of the ore that is shipped from Spain you will find that the metallic content is a great deal higher than the metallic content of our ores from Michigan to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am relying upon Mr. Pepper. I have never analyzed the foreign ores, and I must accept what the authorized agent of our own Government has reported with regard to that subject.

I recall the attention of the Senator from Utah, however, to the report of Mr. Smith. He has just said that Mr. Smith reports that the cost of ore is $3.81.

Mr. SMOOT. No; $3.31.

Mr. CUMMINS. $3.31. If he will turn to page 16 of his report—table 2——

Mr. SMOOT. I have not that report. I have the other report.

Mr. CUMMINS. He will find for 106,268,728 tons of ore the following result:

	Cost per ton.
Labor	$0.45
Other mining	.37
Royalty	.25
Cost at mine	1.07
Rail freight	.67
Lake freight	.74
Cost lower lake ports	2.48
General charges	.16
Total book cost	2.64

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will add those figures up he will find it is more than that price.

Another thing: I followed him exactly down to the lower lake ports——

Mr. CUMMINS. You are disputing this report, as I understand it. You are not disputing me, but you are disputing Herbert Knox Smith, because I have just read his figures, unless there is a mistake in the addition.

Mr. SMOOT. He said $3.31, as I quoted it.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are a great many places for getting ore in the United States as well as abroad, and I concede that you can get a locality where it will cost $3.31, but I am now giving the cost of the ore from the greatest iron-producing region of the country, which produces, I suppose, more than 80 per cent of all the iron ores that are used in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I was using the figures that the Senator used to get his $7.30 metallic mixture. Those are the figures I was using.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. In this there is not included any rail freight from the lower lake ports to the furnace.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where——

Mr. CUMMINS. I expressly excluded that.

Mr. OLIVER. I wanted to call attention to that fact. I understand the Senator did not. But to get the cost at the furnace there must be added for the Pittsburgh district 96 cents a ton on the ore.

Mr. CUMMINS. At Pittsburgh that is true; at Chicago it is nothing.

Mr. OLIVER. No; at Chicago it is nothing.

Mr. CUMMINS. At Cleveland it is nothing.

Mr. OLIVER. But a large proportion of the pig iron that is made in this country is made at some point where there must be transportation from the lower lake ports to the furnace.

Mr. CUMMINS. The commissioner says in that respect:

The average book cost of lake ore at lower lake ports during the five years, 1902 to 1906, was $2.64 per ton.

I reassert on all the evidence before us, in answer to the question put to me, that the reason why we produce pig iron cheaper than it can be produced abroad is that our ore costs us less, our coke costs us less, and the item of labor is almost negligible, because it is done in such measure by machinery.

I return now to the point from which I was diverted, to compare these two tables as they ought to be compared. I take the item of $14.01 as the cost of Bessemer pig. According to that table, without including the transportation profits, the profits on the metallic mixture and on coke amount to $1.79 per ton.

Mr. SMOOT. That is speaking, I suppose, of the United States Steel Corporation, who make their own coke and their own limestone and have their own transportation?

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. SMOOT. That happens with the United States Steel Corporation, but what about the independent manufacturer who has no transportation facilities?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is in error about that. The profit to the United States Steel Corporation is quite a good deal more than the sum I have mentioned.

Mr. SMOOT. How would an independent make any profit out of transportation if he had to pay the rates charged, or how could he make any profit if he had to pay his royalty? He could not make any profit out of those items.

Mr. CUMMINS. I expressly said awhile ago that the $1.79 I proposed to deduct from the $14.01 in order to reach the real American cost did not include the profits on transportation. I know that there are many companies that do not own railroads, and therefore they must pay the cost of transportation, but there are very few companies of any magnitude which do not take their ore from the bed or which do not perform all the processes, except transportation, from the mine to the finished product, whatever it may be.

Now, I call attention to what our Government says in that respect—about the $1.79. I am reading from the letter of submittal on page xiii:

Many of these companies—

Speaking of those he had examined—were highly integrated; that is, they linked up under one control, through various subsidiaries, ore mines, blast furnaces, steel works, etc. Their "cost sheets," however, did not correspond with this integration. The cost of each subsidiary was shown as though it were independent, and included profits paid to other subsidiaries.

To illustrate, one subsidiary of a combination operating blast furnaces would pay to another subsidiary which mined ore a price for ore that included a profit to the ore company. This price would, however, be entered by the furnace company as a part of its costs. That is, they were "book costs," and they included considerable profits really received by the same interests.

All those have gone into our American table to find the cost of pig iron.

These immediate profits are very important. For example, the average "book costs" of Bessemer pig iron over the five-year period was $13.80 a ton. "Transfer" profits were $1.79, leaving a cost of $12.10.

In further answer to the Senator from Utah, I will say that a very large part of the production of pig iron is carried on by companies which take their ore from the beds and carry on the processes under the same management; and this investigation of the commissioner covered all these companies, as well as some which were not so large.

Now, then, deducting $1.79, which constituted no part of the cost of pig iron, and the result is, with regard to Bessemer pig, that it costs in the United States $12.22 a ton; and deducting a less amount from the southern pig, because the operation there is not so highly integrated—deducting a dollar—the cost would be $8.65 a ton; and the results are that Bessemer pig abroad costs $13.45 a ton, at home $12.22; the southern pig abroad $9.92, at home $8.65. But that is not all.

Mr. SMOOT. Before leaving——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the report just read about "book costs" and intercompany profits. If he had continued reading that report he would have found that Mr. Herbert Knox Smith makes this statement, following the very place where the Senator stopped reading:

The bureau deducted these intermediate "transfer" profits for all the important simpler products. The resulting "revised cost" must, however, be handled with great caution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am handling them with great caution.

Mr. SMOOT. I see the Senator is.

Mr. CUMMINS. And so is the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I want to be perfectly frank in this matter, because I think the Senator has stated there every single item as stated here, and has taken nothing into consideration on the other hand, and I do not believe he wants to do that. Mr. Herbert Knox Smith says here:

The margin between this revised cost and the selling price is, of course, much larger than the margin over the "book cost"; but, on the other hand, that larger margin must cover all the stages of production and therefore a much larger investment. The profit above the "book cost" of a subsidiary is to be applied simply to the investment of that company.

It is a cost; there is a depreciation on machinery, and the extra handling of the ore; and they caution you not to take the $1.79.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand the caution of the Commissioner of Corporations in that way. In dealing with these reports, I, of course, have neither exaggerated nor diminished them. I am taking them precisely as they are. When we come to determine how much duty should be laid upon pig iron in order to cover these rather vague and uncertain matters referred to by the Senator from Utah, that is another thing. But I am coming first to a demonstration of what it costs here, as compared with what it costs abroad, to manufacture pig iron, and I have so far, upon unquestioned statements, if the accuracy of our Bureau of Corporations be granted, reached the conclusion that in our country we make Bessemer pig for $12.22 a ton, and southern pig for $8.65, and that abroad it costs $13.45 in the one instance and $9.92 in the other.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. But that is not all, if the Senator from Utah will permit me.

In the English table of costs there is no charge for either general expense or depreciation. In our table there is a charge for general expense and depreciation, and the item of additional cost, which in our table covers general expense and depreciation, in order to make the two tables parallel and cover the same items, ought to be eliminated. If 50 cents were added to the cost abroad to cover the same element of cost that we have in this item of 75 cents, the foreign cost would be $13.95 for Bessemer pig and $10.42 for the Cleveland pig.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator is about to pass from that immediate branch of the subject, I should like for him to give an explanation as to why it is that the labor cost in the southern iron is very much greater than the labor cost in the two other grades of iron.

Mr. CUMMINS. The principal reason is that the southern ore is a very low grade of ore and requires a great deal more labor to take it from the mine and carry it to the blast furnace and convert it into pig iron than the ores which run so much higher in iron content.

Mr. BACON. It is the difference in the character of the material, is it?

Mr. CUMMINS. And possibly a little in the superior equipment of the northern blast furnaces.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator attribute it in any degree to the different character of labor?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not. I have not——

Mr. BACON. I am asking for information. It is not arguendo.

Mr. CUMMINS. I certainly understand that, and I have no other information upon the subject than is found somewhere in the commissioner's report. He explains it on page 23:

For southern pig iron the cost of coke per ton of pig iron was very high—namely, $4.48—not so much because the price of coke at the furnace was high—only $2.54 per ton with very little freight expense or transfer profit included—but because an exceptionally large quantity was required to melt the low-grade southern ores, namely, 3,523 pounds per ton of pig iron.

And again:

The labor costs for Bessemer pig iron averaged somewhat higher than for basic; this was probably due to a greater average size and efficiency of equipment for the basic furnaces. The labor costs for southern pig iron were very much greater than for either Bessemer or basic pig iron. The chief reason for this probably was that the southern furnaces, on account of the low grade of the ore, required the using of a much greater quantity of materials in the furnace per ton of product. Thus for the production shown in the above table the average quantity of ore, coke, and limestone per ton of pig iron in the Bessemer and basic furnaces combined was 3.36 tons as against 4.53 tons for the southern furnaces, or 34.8 per cent more for the latter. Other factors accounting for the high labor cost of southern pig iron were smaller and less efficient furnaces and the lower efficiency of labor itself.

This is the explanation given by the commissioner.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa, I should like to ask one other question.

I notice that the additional cost in each of the several grades is in inverse order from that of the labor cost. Whereas the labor cost in the southern iron is with the highest, the additional cost in the southern ore is the lowest. Can the Senator give any explanation of that fact?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not give any original suggestion. It is explained by the commissioner in his report, though I doubt whether it is wholly satisfactory.

Mr. OLIVER. I would suggest that this same question occurred to my mind, and that item of $1.19 in the southern column would probably include a part of what is included in additional cost in the other two. It is a matter of different kinds of bookkeeping.

Mr. BACON. I notice that the two items together, other operating expenses and additional cost, in each case make pretty near the same amount, carrying out the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have now concluded my general review of the relative costs of producing pig iron in the United States and abroad, but I fortify——

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I understood the Senator correctly, he said that the labor cost entering into a ton of Bessemer iron was negligible, owing to the fact that so much of the work was done by machinery. Is that exceptional to the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the machinery used here about the same as that used abroad?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not able to say from any personal investigation, but I assume that our blast furnaces are somewhat better than the blast furnaces used abroad, simply because all our appliances for production in the United States are better than they are abroad. That possibly may not be accurate in every respect, but it is so nearly true that it may be stated as a general proposition.

Mr. OLIVER. As a general proposition our modern furnaces are much larger; they handle a very much greater amount of product and turn out a greater product per day, and in that respect are better equipped than the older furnaces abroad. But the manufacturer abroad in reconstructing their furnaces are gradually coming up to our standard of efficiency.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have demonstrated, I think, that if these reports are to be accepted as even approximately correct the cost of producing pig iron in the United States is lower than in other countries of the world; and that, although the difference is not great, whatever it is is with this country. I fortify that conclusion by a table which is presented to us by the Commissioner of Corporations, which shows the results of an examination of the books of the United States Steel Corporation for the year 1910. I will not read these items, but it is sufficient to say that, excluding the intermediate or transfer profits of this corporation, its cost for the production of pig iron for the year 1910 was: Bessemer pig, $9.71; southern pig, $8.57. That is so much lower than any suggested foreign cost that you may add to what is generally supposed to be the advantage of the Steel Corporation over other producers $2 per ton; and still we will have a cost less—or at least not greater—than the cost in our rival countries. Therefore, upon this great basic material, which is the beginning of all the iron and steel products, we need no duty whatsoever to measure the difference between cost abroad and at home. Even if we disregard the advantage we possess in the matter of transportation, we would need no duty upon this material.

I have devoted a great deal of time to it, Senators, not so much because of its intrinsic importance, but because I want to show that in the subsequent processes of the conversion of iron and steel into the various forms in which they are used it would be indefensible to add anything in the way of a compensating duty—that is to say, to put any duty upon any iron and steel product upon the hypothesis that the basic material costs more in this country than it costs abroad. I reckoned that, this being the first step in the ladder which leads up to the highest duties, it was of vital importance that we should understand whether in attaching the duties to these various commodities as we go forward we must allow anything on account of a higher cost of pig iron in this country than abroad, as we know that we must do when we come to put duties upon the manufactures of wool and other like things.

I ask, Mr. President, to insert as a part of my remarks the three tables to which I have recently referred and upon which I have commented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

Average book costs per gross ton of specified kinds of pig iron, showing furnace cost as given in the cost sheets (including intermediate profits), together with "additional costs" (derived from profit and loss accounts), 1902–1906.

Items.	Bessemer iron.	Basic iron.	Southern iron.

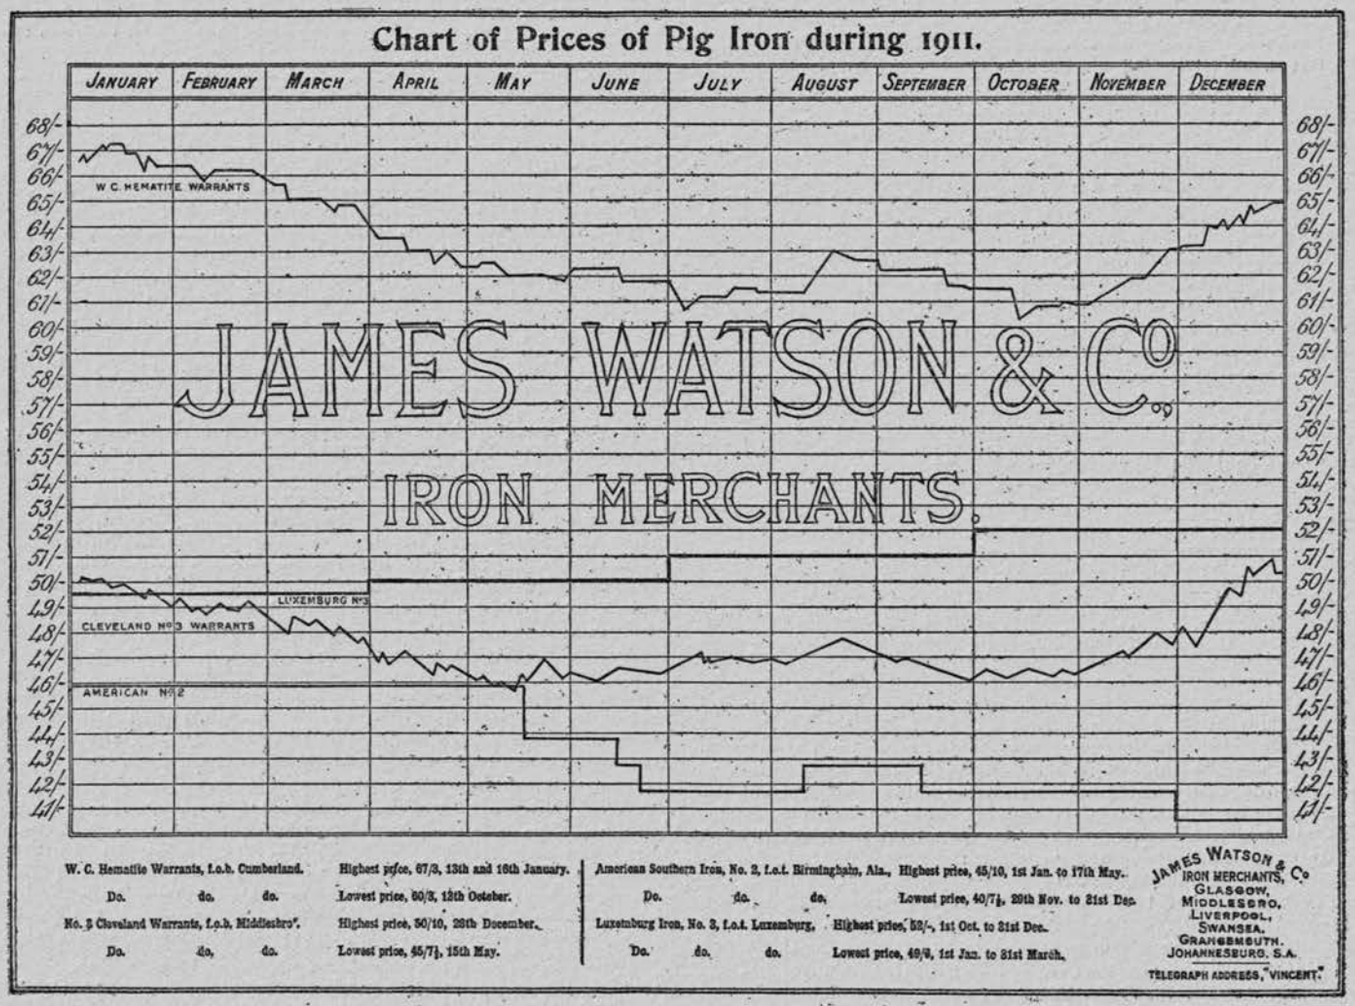
[1] Integration cost (exclusive of any return to investment on any anterior stage of production or transportation).
[2] Book cost (which does not include any intermediate profit).
[3] This does not include any allowance for additional costs shown on the profit and loss accounts.

Mr. CUMMINS. Notwithstanding the conclusions that I have reached, my amendment puts a duty upon pig iron of $1 per ton. I have suggested this duty not because I believe that there is any difference against us as to the cost of production; I have done it in order to furnish some defense against what is ordinarily known in commerce with foreign countries as "dumping." I know there may be times when foreign countries may be willing to put upon our shores pig iron at less than cost, and I do not want to subject our producers to that peril.

Furthermore, I have attached this duty because some of the eastern manufacturers of pig iron may feel the pressure of these reductions. They may feel it because they are not located as they ought to be to produce pig iron. Ultimately the laws of industry and commerce will compel such readjustment as will produce this commodity at the place or places where it can be most economically produced, but in the meanwhile I am willing that there shall be a duty of a dollar a ton upon pig iron in order to furnish these unfortunately located industries an opportunity for readjustment.

Another interesting thing that I desire to introduce into this subject is a sheet which shows the market price of pig iron abroad during the last year. It shows by a chart the line of price of American No. 2 pig iron, which is the southern pig, of which I have been speaking, of Cleveland pig iron, of Luxemburg, and of the hematite—the last three foreign iron. It is one of the corroborating things, too, that during the whole year the price of pig iron abroad has been higher than the price of pig iron at home.



It was said the other day when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was speaking that this was a temporary condition; that there was an unusual and abnormal condition abroad; and that pig iron had been much higher there on account of prosperous times than in former years; but my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who made that assertion, had not examined the facts, for I find upon investigation that the price of pig iron during the last year in England has been little, if any, higher than the average price of the last five years.

I have prepared a table showing the price of pig iron abroad since 1897, and I desire to attach the sheet to which I referred a few moments ago, as well as the table to which I have just referred, to my remarks upon this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The sheet and table referred to are as follows:

N.B.—In converting the prices of American and Luxemburg Iron into British currency as above, the Dollar is reckoned as equal to 4/2, and the Mark, 1/.

Price of pig iron abroad since 1897.

[1] No business done in warrants.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have now finished my review of the subject of pig iron. What I have hereafter to say with regard to ingots and billets and bars and steel rails and structural steel can be more quickly said; but I would prefer not to take up those items this afternoon. Therefore I yield the floor, hoping to regain it at some other time to present these other forms of steel.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 9, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 8, 1912.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

John Bourne, of New York, to be collector of customs for the district of Dunkirk, in the State of New York. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Francis Martin to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1911, to fill a vacancy.

Lieut. Emil P. Svarz to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 25th day of January, 1912, to fill a vacancy.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Harry L. Pence to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 11th day of October, 1911, to fill a vacancy.

Ensign Harlow T. Kays to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 12th day of February, 1912, upon the completion of three years' service as an ensign.

Boatswain Birney O. Halliwill to be a chief boatswain in the Navy from the 23d day of February, 1912, upon the completion of six years' service as a boatswain.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 8, 1912.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Jacob J. Greenewald to be surveyor of customs for the port of Salt Lake City, in the State of Utah.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Carroll S. Graves to be a lieutenant.

Ensign (Junior Grade) Stephen B. McKinney to be a lieutenant.

POSTMASTERS.

MICHIGAN.

Frank E. Hardy, Big Rapids.
Byron S. Watson, Breckenridge.

MISSOURI.

Mary E. Black, Richmond.
Edward W. Flentge, Cape Girardeau.
Basil B. Kimbrell, Fulton.
Frederick B. Rauch, Morehouse.

NEW YORK.

Joseph E. Cole, Perry,
Alexander M. Harriott, Rye.
Austin Hicks, Great Neck.
Frank N. Lovejoy, Macedon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 8, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, draw us by Thy holy influence into the higher realm of thought and action, that we may work together with Thee for the things which make for righteousness, truth, justice, and good will among men. That as instruments in Thy hands we may hasten the coming of Thy kingdom in the earth as it is in heaven. In the spirit of the Lord, Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow [Thursday] morning.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention immediately after the reading of the Journal to go ahead with the legislative bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the understanding, and the purpose of asking this consent is to allow more debate on certain important matters in the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. I think it very desirable to meet early.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] rises to a question of personal privilege, which he will state.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to state that in the Chicago Tribune, under the date of May 2, really published in the paper of May 3, an article appears in which the minority leader of the House, my colleague [Mr. MANN], is interviewed. The heading of this article says:

MADDEN, Speaker CLARK, and MOON accused by MANN of hatching the plot.

Then Mr. MANN goes on, and the paper purports to quote him in what he says. This was in reference to the parcel-post business, and the motion which I made to recommit the bill. Here is what Mr. MANN is quoted as saying:

"The whole affair is a dirty deal, and the people who have been fighting for a parcel post so many years ought to know it," said Representative MANN to-night.

"Speaker CLARK, Chairman MOON, and MADDEN hatched up this plot. I went to the Speaker two weeks ago and asked that I be recognized on the motion to recommit, and told him what I intended to do. He said he would have to recognize Representative GARDNER of New Jersey, the Republican member of the committee in charge of the minority opposition to the bill. I said that would be satisfactory, as GARDNER and I were agreed on the bill. GARDNER was to allow me to make the motion.

MANN EXPLAINS TRICK.

"This morning MOON came to me and asked to see my bill. I showed it to him in the confidence that I, as minority leader, would be recognized to present the substitute bill. He read my zone-system plan over and returned it to me without comment. Now, I learn that he tried to get GARDNER to make the motion so as to shut me out. GARDNER refused. So he induced MADDEN to do the business, and Speaker CLARK agreed to carry out the plan.

"This piece of trickery is the most scandalous defiance of the rules of the House we have witnessed in many a day."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to be allowed, if this is a question of personal privilege, to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a question of personal privilege, and the gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MADDEN. In the course of the proceedings on the Post Office appropriation bill, as everybody in the House knows, there was a good deal of legislation recommended, and the legislation which was recommended provided for the adoption of a parcel-post plan which would give the right to every American citizen to send any parcel up to 11 pounds anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States at not to exceed 12 cents a pound. The recommendation provided for a change in existing conditions, which are that no package to exceed 4 pounds can be sent through the domestic mails by citizens of the United States, and the charge for every such package is at the rate of 16 cents a pound.

The recommendation made by the committee reduced the charge from 16 cents to 12 cents and increased the size of the package from 4 pounds to 11 pounds. In addition to that, the committee recommended the adoption of a rural parcel post, which gives to every citizen living on a rural postal-delivery route the opportunity to send a package up to 11 pounds from the post office where the rural route originates to the end of the route, the charge for which would be 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound up to 11 pounds, making 15 cents for the whole package of 11 pounds. This recommendation provides also that any person living anywhere on any rural route may deliver his package to the carrrier, who is required under the law, if enacted, to carry it to the post office at the end of his route, and it requires the post office then to send it out on any other route which starts from that post office. This is what the committee recommended and this is what the House adopted.

During the consideration of this bill the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] introduced an amendment to the bill, which provides that every rural-route road in the United States shall be classified; that the classes of roads shall be numbered A, B, and C; that class A shall receive $25 per mile per annum for the privilege of delivering the mails; that class B shall receive $20 a mile; and that class C shall receive $15 per mile.

During the consideration of this amendment I spoke against it, and I tried to have it modified so as to cover all delivery routes, whether within cities or in the country. But while I was trying to have it amended I still said, frankly, that I was opposed to the principle involved in it, first, because the Government of the United States is paying at the present time $1,000 per annum to each rural carrier who is employed by the Government for the delivery of the mail to the citizens who live on rural routes, and this bill provides that that compensation shall be increased to $1,074. And it looked to me to be not only unfair but unjust and unwise for the Government of the United States to seek to compensate the farmer by the payment of $25, $20, or $15 per mile per annum for the privilege of passing along the highways to deliver the farmer his mail. I was strenuously opposed to it. I am opposed to it now.

There was another provision introduced into this bill as an amendment from the floor. That provision was introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART]. It provided for the publication of the names of all the stockholders and the officers and controlling managers of all the newspapers in the United States, and for other information which I did not think the Government ought to impose upon the newspapers of the country. And so I was opposed to that.

But both these measures were adopted, and when the bill came from the committee to the House, as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads I felt that, as I was opposed to these measures in the bill, if no other member who outranked me on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads wished to make a motion to recommit, it was my right to do so, and I rose in my place as a Member of the House and as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I exercised my right under the rule to introduce a motion to recommit with instructions to strike out the two items that I have described.

My colleague rose in his place, and he requested me to allow him to make the motion. I refused. He wanted to introduce a motion to recommit with instructions to report back a parcels post bill which he himself had introduced only the night before, which no man in the House had ever read, which had never been sent to any committee or been considered by any committee—a bill which provided that rural carriers were to receive one-half of the revenues to be derived by the Government as the result of parcel-post delivery in the country, up to $600, thus enabling a rural carrier to draw as compensation for his service not only $1,074, as provided by law, but $600 in addition to that, making $1,674 per annum, while the letter carriers in the cities of the country, who would also be called upon to make these deliveries of parcels, are getting from $900 to $1,200 a year, depending upon the time of their service, and no provision was made for additional payment to these men. I was opposed to what he intended to do, because I was opposed to the Government of the United States entering into any contract with the rural carriers under which the carriers were to get half the receipts of the office, in addition to their salaries.

Now, one thing more. The statement made by my colleague to the effect that I entered into a plot with anybody is false in every particular. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I entered into no plot, no scheme, and had no understanding. I stood on the floor of the House exercising my rights as a Member of the House, and particularly exercising my rights as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, whose bill was under consideration. I had no contract with Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I had no contract with the Speaker of the House. If the Speaker of the House knew that I was going to make a motion, he knew more than anybody else did, for I did not talk to anybody about what I was going to do. I had no talk with Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I had no arrangement with the Speaker for recognition. I rose in my place and made the motion. I was recognized. It was perfectly in order. I see no reason why I should not be recognized. I see no reason why the minority leader of this House should feel called upon to criticize me in the public press for doing my duty on the floor of this House as I understand it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If he had any criticism to make of me and of my action, his place to criticize me was on the floor, where I could reply to him. He had no right to go into the newspapers and characterize my attitude as "an infernal plot." I want to say to him that my motives are as pure as his. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have no interest in doing anything that is not for the best good of the country. Of course my colleague thinks that what he does not do is not properly done. I am sorry for that. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He thinks that all the wisdom and all the integrity of the country is bottled up in him, and I deny it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have great admiration for his genius, for his ability, but I frequently have to doubt the wisdom of his judgment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want him to distinctly understand, and I want the people of my district and of this country to understand, that I am here as one of the entities of this House, as one of the Members of this House, with a certificate as big as that of any other Member of this House, and I am not going to be directed in the attitude I am to assume on great public questions by the attitude of the minority leader, unless he agrees with me and I agree with him. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, he never spoke to me in connection with the motion that he proposed to make. I had no understanding of what he proposed to do. I did not know he had talked to Mr. GARDNER, or that he had talked to anybody, and I did not care, so far as that goes. He had not talked to me. Perhaps he did not think it was worth while to talk to me. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I protest against any such slanderous statements as have been made by my colleague. Every word uttered by him is a deliberate falsehood, so far as it relates to any combination or any plot that I was in with the Speaker of the House or anybody else. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

My reason for not having made this statement sooner is that on Saturday morning, May 4, I received word that my wife, who for more than two years has been seriously ill, was much worse, and I went home to see her, returning only this morning, and for the further reason that I did not see the interview until I was on the train on my way home.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on Insular Affairs, and the unfinished business is the bill H. R. 17756, of which the Clerk will report the title.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17756) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. If no gentleman wants to take the floor to speak on this bill, the Chair will put the question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COOPER rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will be recognized first.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not quite ready, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] will be recognized.

[Mr. COOPER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 2, after the word "islands," by inserting "unless the Philippine Government shall provide otherwise by appropriate legislation either general or as to any specific tract or tracts."

Mr. MANN. That should come in on line 4.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk again report the amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. There seems to be a different print. There seems to be two different prints, and I think this should come in line 6 after the word "islands."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "islands," insert "unless the Philippine Government shall provide otherwise by appropriate legislation either general or as to any specific tract or tracts."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of very able and interesting discussion on this bill. I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] in charge of the bill and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] were both in error as to their recollection concerning certain features of the organic act of 1902, for I find that as reported from that committee there was no limitation whatever upon the sale of friar lands except such as the Philippine Government might itself prescribe. I have the report in my hand. It was a Senate bill originally. The House, by amendment, struck out all of the Senate bill and inserted a substitute, and this is what it said on the subject of friar lands. Section 15—first I will say that section 65 of the act of 1902, as now upon the statute books, relates to friar lands, but in the House bill, as reported from that committee, it was section 15 which authorized the purchase of the lands held by the religious orders, and section 16 provided that after purchase—they might be granted, held, and conveyed by the Government of said islands on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe.

Then later—probably in conference—the whole bill was shifted around so that the provision relating to friar lands was found in section 65, and it did say there it might be sold upon such terms as the Philippine Government might by legislation prescribe, "subject to the limitations and restrictions of this act." There were limitations and restrictions in the act that did apply to friar lands, but it is my contention that it does not apply to them the same conditions and restrictions that it applies to public lands. In sections 14, 15, and 16 of the act of 1902 you will find they are spoken of as "the public lands of the United States," they being the lands which the United States acquired from the Crown of Spain, while the friar lands were declared when purchased to be the property of the Philippine Government. They are entirely separate and distinct from the public lands of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe the gentleman and myself were Members of Congress at the time and heard the discussion upon this bill in 1902. Is it not the remembrance of the gentleman—I know it is of mine—that this matter was limited, and we understood that an individual could not acquire more land that he acquired under the public-land laws of the United States, and that not more than 2,500 acres could be acquired by a corporation, and that that was done for the purpose of preventing the exploitation of the Philippine Islands and holding the islands for the benefit of the Filipino people?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is entirely true as to the 60,000,000 acres of public lands, and no corporation can hold more than 2,500 acres of any kind of lands. But it is not necessary to discuss that now. My very elaborate opinion appears in the report of the Committee on Insular Affairs which made the investigation of these friar-land sales in the last Congress, and by leave of the House I reinserted it in my speech of last Wednesday. It appears in this morning's RECORD at page 5718,

I think it is an unanswerable argument. Judge Madison, of Kansas, who had reached a different conclusion and prepared a different opinion, when I read mine aloud to him in the Committee on Insular Affairs threw down his and said, "That argument is unanswerable." That was my opinion then and it is my opinion to-day, and the introduction of this bill, unless my opinion was right, would not have been necessary.

This bill is so drawn that no Filipino, no American, could possibly understand its object or discover its purpose or effect unless he was thoroughly familiar with the subject, hunted up the organic act of 1902, and compared section 65 of that original act with section 65 as this bill proposes to amend it. The original act said these friar lands were to be sold on such terms and conditions as the Filipino Government by legislation should prescribe. Those words are stricken out by this amendment, and in lieu thereof we have—and shall be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily, under the same limitations and restrictions as are provided in this act for the holding, sale, conveyance, or lease of the public lands in said islands.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman if the committee would accept this amendment, would the bill then be acceptable to the gentleman?

Mr. OLMSTED. I should still be opposed to the bill, but the bill would be less objectionable than it is now.

Mr. JONES. If it would remove the gentleman's objection, I would be willing to accept this amendment; that would not very materially change it, so far as the gentleman's position is concerned. I would like it to read:

That unless the Philippine Government shall hereafter provide.

Put the word "hereafter" in there.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think that is the construction of it.

Mr. JONES. But some gentleman thought that there had been a good deal of legislation in the past on the subject.

Mr. OLMSTED. According to my amendment, this bill, if passed, would be the law and could only be changed by legislation by the Legislature of the Philippines.

Mr. JONES. That is my construction, but in deference to the opinion of some other gentleman I would put in the word "hereafter."

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JONES. And if we could agree as to the measure, with that amendment, I would be very glad to accept it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] intend to offer another amendment?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have another amendment which I propose to offer. I will ask the Clerk to read it, and have it considered as pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RUCKER in the chair). The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "holdings," insert:
"And provided further, That in the sale of lands by the Philippine Government there shall be no restriction, limitation, or discrimination against any citizen of the United States."

Mr. OLMSTED. Without objection, I would change that amendment to an amendment in the form of the one which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 21, by inserting after the word "holdings," the following:
"And provided further, That every citizen of the United States shall be permitted to purchase land from the Philippine Government subject to the limitations and restrictions herein provided."

Mr. JONES. I understand what the object is, but your amendment says that any citizen of the United States shall be permitted to buy any of the public lands of the Philippine Islands, and that would include the so-called public lands subject to the limitations and restrictions of this act.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. JONES. It occurred to me that it possibly might mean subject to the restrictions and limitations of this bill, but you refer to the act which this bill would amend?

Mr. OLMSTED. Surely. And the act as it would be amended by this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman might say, "This act as amended." Would that help it?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to changing it so that it will read: "This act as hereby amended."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to ask my colleague on the committee if the effect of the amendment was not really to place the situation where it stands now without the passage of any law?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think not. I think it would require future action by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. TOWNER. Would it not require future action by the Philippine Legislature before any lands now could be disposed of?

Mr. OLMSTED. Before they can be sold in excess of 40 acres, it would, should this bill pass. As the law now stands, there is no necessity for further action by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. TOWNER. There would be no objection to the bill as amended, if the gentleman will accept it, as I can see.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should still be opposed to it. I think it ought to be left just as it is.

Mr. TOWNER. That is, you would prefer——

Mr. OLMSTED. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] to accept both of those amendments?

Mr. JONES. No. I have not said anything in regard to them yet.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this bill is not only to limit the sale of friar lands to tracts of 40 acres to any one individual, but also to require that the purchaser shall live upon the 40 acres continuously for five years; and during that period, although he may have paid, cash down, full price for the land, he may not sell it, and he may not even mortgage it or borrow money upon it with which to improve it.

Now, I think as these friar lands belong to the Philippine Government, to the Filipino people, that were purchased by them with their own money, by which they incurred an indebtedness of $7,000,000 and an annual interest charge of $280,000, it would be monstrously unjust to them to restrict them in that way, when practical experience has demonstrated that they can not sell the land under such restrictions for sufficient price to reimburse them for the cost of them. If they are permitted to sell them in convenient tracts, some in larger tracts, they can get their money out of them. They have sold friar tracts at $6, where 40-acre tracts with these restrictions could not be sold for $2 an acre. Why should the Congress of the United States say that they shall not sell their own lands except under such burdensome conditions as prevent them from selling them at all?

Take the Isabela estate. It is in a wild, un-Christian province, 100 miles from a seaport, and that seaport 200 miles from Manila. Nobody would go there and buy a 40-acre tract and live on it unless he could borrow enough money to improve it.

If it could be cut up into reasonable tracts it could be sold for enough money to reimburse the Philippine Government for its purchase. Why should they not be permitted to do it? They have their own legislation now that authorizes the sale. This bill would not only amend the organic act of 1902, but it would repeal or render ineffective the Filipino statute.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Could that Isabela estate be sold under the interpretation that is placed on the selling of actual holdings to any extent?

Mr. OLMSTED. There is no holding in it at all. It is untenanted. My information is that it is rich land. It will be sold eventually in larger tracts for as much as the Government paid for it, with interest, but if in 40-acre tracts, under the restrictions, it can not be sold in 100 years.

In the meantime the Philippine Government will be paying the interest on its bonded debt. Why should we do this? We do not so restrict the sale of lands in Wisconsin, or in Virginia, or in Massachusetts, or in North Dakota, or anywhere else. Why should we impose such an onerous burden as that upon the Filipino people? It is something that I can not understand. There never was any desire on the part of the Filipino people for any such legislation as this until they were led to believe by some of their leaders that great interests here were going to gobble up their lands and that the investment by Americans there would in some way prevent the granting of independence. They reasoned that the Americans holding lands there would argue before Congress that their possessions would have less security under a native government than under the present government.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, a member of the Insular Committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The Philippine law, if the gentleman will pardon me for first making a preliminary remark, provides that an individual can purchase only 40 acres of these lands?

Mr. OLMSTED. Public lands.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And that a corporation can purchase only 2,500 acres?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is right.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is provided for in section 65.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; section 15.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think section 65 applies the same terms. Now, section 75 makes a further limitation upon the number of acres that a corporation can own at all.

Mr. OLMSTED. No corporation can own more than 2,500 acres.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is either by purchase from the Government or from any other source?

Mr. OLMSTED. Friar lands, public lands, or lands from a private individual.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. But as I read the law there is no limitation upon the ownership which can be acquired by a private individual.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is not, except as to public lands.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Hence, while there is an absolute limitation upon either the purchase, the acquiring, or the controlling of public land by a corporation to 2,500 acres, yet there is no limitation upon the amount that can be acquired and held and controlled by an individual. Now, does not the gentleman think——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania assent to that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think, if we are going to keep these islands or attempt to control them in the interest of the Filipinos, that there ought to be at least some limitation upon the number of acres that an individual may acquire, not by purchase in the first instance from the Filipino Government but what he may acquire by purchase from other individuals, and thus prevent the possibility of one man or one or two men individually buying up the whole public domain there, if they have enough money, and thus creating a greater monopoly in one or two individuals than we permit in a corporation?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, that is a question that is not involved in the consideration of this bill. No individual now can purchase more than 40 acres of the public land, of which there are something like 60,000,000 acres.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But he can acquire by purchase from other individuals the whole island if he has money enough?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, if the other individuals owned the whole island and were willing to sell, he could.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But the corporations can not?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is true.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Why, then, place a greater limitation upon the corporation than upon the individual, if we would be consistent?

Mr. OLMSTED. The lands were in the ownership of private individuals, when we acquired occupation of the islands, in much larger tracts than 40 acres.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And the three religious orders of friars, I understand, owned these 400,000 acres?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. What is there to prevent individuals, for instance, Horace Havemeyer, from going there and purchasing all the 400,000 acres?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am told there is one individual or partnership owning 14,000 acres of good sugar land. There is nothing to prevent Mr. Havemeyer or anybody else from buying that land if they have money enough to buy it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think there should be a restriction against the purchase of such a large area, thus establishing a sugar monopoly? If he had money enough he could purchase land enough and thus acquire control of the islands.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is nothing in this bill to prevent an individual from purchasing all the sugar land owned by private individuals in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Have we ever attempted to restrict in any State or Territory the amount of land that may be bought by an individual?

Mr. OLMSTED. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. TILSON. Is there any more danger of a large monopoly from the purchase of land there than there is in Louisiana? Would it be fair for us to prohibit, if we had the power, anyone in Louisiana from selling a large amount of land that he might own?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I grant you that is true; but when we obtained these public lands, and when we obtained the friar lands, apparently the settled object of this Government was to prevent exploitation. In other words, the design was to sell the lands in small tracts to actual settlers, giving the preference to those who were already tenants or occupants of the land. Hence I say there is no more danger in Louisiana than there is over there in the Philippines. There is just as much. But why make the distinction as to the corporation and limit the corporation to the ownership of 2,500 acres and not limit the individual at all? An individual can go on and accomplish just as much as the corporation, and perhaps there are individuals in the United States who have money enough to purchase the whole 400,000 acres, not directly from the Government, not directly from the Filipinos, but to purchase from other holders until such individuals usurp or confer upon themselves the ownership of the entire Philippine Islands. There is nothing in the present law or in the present bill that would prevent that in the least.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the effect of my first amendment there is simply this: As the law now stands, and under the act already passed by the Philippine Government, there is no restriction upon the amount of friar lands which may be sold to an individual. This bill would not only restrict the sale to 40 acres, but would also, as I have said, impose these other burdensome and almost impossible conditions. Now, the effect of my amendment would be that if this bill is passed, the law would stand as this bill makes it stand, with the proviso that the Philippine Legislature may hereafter impose different terms and conditions, either generally as to all these lands or particularly as to certain specific tracts. In other words, it leaves it with the Filipino people to do with these lands what they please. Now, those of you who in a few days are going to vote to declare their independence must certainly believe that they would wisely dispose of their own lands. It seems to me there can hardly be any objection to that amendment, and it would, at least, be an improvement upon the bill as it now stands.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that with the slight modification of putting the word "hereafter" after the word "shall," in his amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "islands" the following:

"Unless the Philippine Government shall provide otherwise by appropriate legislation, either generally or as to any specific tract or tracts."

Mr. OLMSTED. Insert the word "hereafter" after the word "shall."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the bill now up for amendment, or is it subject to general debate?

Mr. OLMSTED. We are considering the bill in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is being considered in the House. Anyone who has the floor has the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the bill been read for amendment at all?

Mr. OLMSTED. We are in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. The bill must be read. I want to know if it has been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill was read at the last session when it was under consideration.

Mr. OLMSTED. I call for a vote on that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "islands" the following:

"Unless the Philippine Government shall hereafter provide otherwise by appropriate legislation, either generally or as to any specific tract or tracts."

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that we ought not to vote on an important matter of this kind without a quorum. I have no desire to stop the gentleman in his speech.

Mr. MANN. Both sides are agreed on the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. The matter might be delayed until the conclusion of the discussion.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would rather discuss the bill when there is a quorum here, if there is to be one here.

Mr. SHERLEY. I feel that a bill of this importance should not be finally considered and passed without a quorum being present for full consideration of it. I did not know we were going to reach that stage so rapidly. I simply make that suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the amendment be put. Then the gentleman can raise his point of no quorum.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has not the floor to ask that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SHERLEY) there were—ayes 27, noes none.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. JONES. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not necessary. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. Those in favor of the amendment will vote "aye," those opposed to the amendment will vote "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 43, answered "present" 14, not voting 146, as follows:

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. KAHN. I voted "aye." I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma and I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. KAHN, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is entitled to the floor, and has the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of moving the previous question upon the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman withhold his motion until I can offer an amendment?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold that motion until these gentlemen can send up their amendments and let them be considered as pending.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment? Let the gentlemen send up their amendments——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized to make his point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is this, that the gentleman from Virginia has been recognized; he has voluntarily surrendered the floor and he is not again entitled to recognition while other Members who have not been recognized desire to be recognized and to be heard on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia, this being a House Calendar bill, when the bill first came up took the floor and occupied an hour. Subsequent to that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized to offer an amendment, and of course under the rules was entitled to an hour to discuss the amendment and to take the floor on the amendment, and by that the gentleman from Pennsylvania lost the floor. Now the gentleman from Virginia asks recognition for the purpose of moving the previous question, not for the purpose of debate. I do not think he would be entitled to recognition for the purpose of debate if anyone else was asking for recognition, but it seems to me that the gentleman in charge of a bill, with no one on the floor at the time when an amendment was in order, is entitled to recognition for the purpose of offering an amendment if he chooses to do so, or for the purpose of moving the previous question——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But there was some one on the floor seeking recognition.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Because without that there would be no way of closing debate for a month.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, while the gentleman undertakes to make the statement that it would require a month to close debate, the fact always has been this, that a Member in charge of a bill, when it is called up with the House sitting as the House, has an hour. He has the privilege then of moving the previous question and to continue control of his bill; the previous question would then be voted upon. If it is voted up, the bill comes up for a vote; if it is voted down, the power passes to some one who is opposed to it. If, however, he voluntarily gives up the control of his bill, the man who is recognized has the right in his time to make a motion or move the previous question, and he, having been once recognized, can not again claim recognition to the exclusion of others, because, if the gentleman from Illinois is right in his position, it lies within the power of the gentleman in charge of the bill, having had an hour, to yield the floor and then at any time he sees fit cut off debate by moving the previous question.

Mr. MANN. He must be entitled to recognition for the purpose of offering an amendment as gentlemen in charge of the bill are entitled to recognition in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is true we are in the House, but the gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to recognition for the purpose of making the motion as against anyone on the floor asking recognition for debate.

Mr. OLMSTED rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. OLMSTED. For the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I had the floor to offer an amendment. I did offer it, and it was acceptable to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES]. He asked me if I had any other amendment, and I said I had another, and he seemed to desire to know what it was; so I agreed to let it be read and be considered pending. I stopped then, because there was no further controversy as to my first amendment, so that it might be formally adopted; but somebody made the point of no quorum, and that necessitated a roll call. It was not demanded by me, and I would like to be heard briefly on my second amendment, which has not been discussed.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary situation is this, and the Chair does not think there is much difficulty about it: The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is in charge of the bill. It has been the custom at least for 18 years in this House—I do not know how much longer—that a Member in charge of a bill is in charge of it [laughter], not for the purpose of talking all the time, but he can make a speech not to exceed an hour unless the House grants him more time, and the gentleman from Virginia did that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] took the floor for an hour. If anybody had raised the point of order against him then, he would have had to postpone his hour until everybody else had been heard who wanted to be heard, because that is the rule. If the gentleman from Virginia had undertaken to make a speech now, he would have to postpone that speech until every Member in the House who wanted to be heard had been heard, except that he would have the right to conclude. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], it seems, got an hour and then lost it by reason of this roll call and amendment. Therefore the gentleman from Virginia, before anybody else gets recognition for a speech, has the right to make this motion for the previous question. Now, the question is——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will not, under the circumstances, withhold his motion, say, for 10 minutes?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to do so, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that there is a filibuster movement on foot here——

Mr. OLMSTED. But the gentleman from Virginia knows I have no part in the filibuster movement.

Mr. JONES. No; and that would probably add to the difficulty of passing the measure this evening.

The SPEAKER. Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has another amendment the Chair thinks he has a right to offer it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have it here now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. I would like to ask——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can not defer his motion for half an hour or an hour to give a few of us about five minutes apiece. I think I ought to have a little time, as I was the author of the investigation in the last Congress that brought about this legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I make this statement: If it can be agreed by unanimous consent that this motion for the previous question shall be put at 4 o'clock, I shall be glad to do it, but unless unanimous consent can be gotten for that I can not consent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is in order to offer an amendment to this bill before the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is in order to move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The way that situation arose was this: The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] moved the previous question. Of course it is not debatable. Then the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] rose and asked him to withhold that motion until he could offer an amendment, and then six or eight other gentlemen indicated that they had amendments.

Mr. JONES. One other.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] said he would withhold it that long, which he did, and the Chair ordered all of them to send their amendments to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do I understand from the Chair's statement, then, that these various amendments are pending, and if they are pending are they subject to amendment or debate prior to the previous question?

The SPEAKER. There can not be more than four amendments pending to any one section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are they pending, and are they debatable now?

The SPEAKER. No. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] was for the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the Speaker was not in the chair when this took place. Of course, there was only one amendment offered. That was offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. That was the one that was voted upon. The gentleman from Pennsylvania gave notice that he would offer another and have it read from the Clerk's desk, but it was not in order to offer it at the time because it in no way related to the other amendments.

The SPEAKER. What is the contention of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. That there is no amendment pending before the House unless the gentleman has an opportunity to offer one now.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has done. He offered his amendment after the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] moved the previous question, but the gentleman from Virginia withheld his motion for the previous question until gentlemen could offer amendments.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] withheld his motion for the purpose of letting the gentleman offer the amendment, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] accorded any such exclusive privilege as that to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The SPEAKER. He did not undertake to do anything of the sort.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have an amendment I would like to offer, Mr. Speaker. I have a substitute to the bill and all pending amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] understands, and so does the Chair, that you can have an amendment and an amendment to the amendment, a substitute and an amendment to the substitute, and that is all the amendments you can have on any one proposition. But if these amendments which come in by the grace of the gentleman from Virginia apply to different sections under that arrangement, they would all be in order, if they were germane, providing no more than four, as stated, apply to any one proposition in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. What I would like to ask the Chair is this: If these gentlemen are to be recognized to offer amendments, does the Chair then hold that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is entitled to recognition over anyone else to move the previous question so as to prevent debate on these amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it arises. The question is on agreeing to the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 64.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. SHERLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is that a sufficient number? We are in the House instead of in committee.

The SPEAKER. One-fifth of a quorum is sufficient under the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. I had not made the calculation.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is 197, and 40 is more than one-fifth of 197. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 65.

So the motion for the previous question was rejected.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [The Chair proceeded to count.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House proceed with the consideration of this bill for 40 minutes under the 5-minute rule, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the House proceed with the debate under the 5-minute rule for 40 minutes, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that he couple with his agreement the proposition that there be no other matter considered to-day than this bill. I shall not then object.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will couple with that agreement that upon the passage of this bill the House shall adjourn—after the final vote on the bill the House shall adjourn.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Illinois enlarges his request to the effect that after the disposition of this bill the House shall adjourn.

Mr. JONES. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I now offer again and desire to be heard upon the amendment which was read some time ago and which is considered pending.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "holdings," insert the following: "And provided further, That every citizen of the United States shall be permitted to purchase lands from the Philippine Government, subject to the limitations and restrictions herein provided."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States donated to the Philippine Government the 60,000,000 acres of land which, under the treaty of Paris, we acquired from the Government of Spain. In making that donation we affixed a condition, not only that not more than 40 acres should be sold to any one person, but that the person purchasing should live upon the land for five years continuously.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OLMSTED. Not at present.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has had his hour, and there are other gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. OLMSTED. May it please the court, I have not had two minutes yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is entitled to an hour upon his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, having offered his amendment, is entitled to his hour. The House had the privilege of cutting off all this debate and did not do it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I understood the ruling of the Chair to be, before the motion was taken on the previous question, that he who had occupied an hour on this bill and had surrendered the floor was not entitled to speak on the bill further if there were any other gentlemen who wanted to speak on the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is absolutely correct, and if the gentleman were trying to speak on the bill the Chair would rule that anybody who had not spoken should have the right of way. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has offered an amendment, and he has the right to an hour on the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I hope this will not come out of my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. After the gentleman has finished his speech any gentleman who has not spoken will be entitled to recognition to speak on the bill?

The SPEAKER. It seems so to the Chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Or would the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] have the right to interpose the previous question?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania finishes his speech and stops—which he would have to do [laughter]—and if the gentleman from Virginia then got the floor before anybody else did, the Chair would undoubtedly hold that he had the right to order the previous question, because it must be that somebody has charge of the bill in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the Chair please, I suggest that, the previous question having been voted down, it is an indication on the part of the House that it desires debate on the bill, and those of us who never have had the privilege of speaking to the bill ought to be given that privilege before the gentleman from Virginia could be recognized to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman that can get the floor has the right to move the previous question. There are no two opinions about that, the Chair would think, unless the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] claims that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] lost control of the bill when the motion for the previous question was voted down.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably, if that is the result of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will dispose of that point when the time comes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I wish to detain you long enough to express my approval of this particular bill, and especially of the principle involved in it, because so far as it goes it embodies the proper attitude of this Government toward the Philippine Islands and people. The particular amount of land which this bill, if enacted into law, proposes to put into the same legal status as the 60,000,000 acres acquired by our Government from Spain is not so very large, and no very great damage could be done if it were left as it is, even under the construction given by the Attorney General to the present law. However, it is entirely proper for the Congress to take notice of the opinion given by the Attorney General construing the law by which the insular government got possession of the friar lands, and as directly as possible express its disapproval of the sale of about 55,000 acres of land at one time and to one person.

My opinion of the law which provided for the acquisition of the friar lands is not entitled to any considerable weight, but the understanding of Congress at the time that law was enacted, and the general impression of what it was expected to accomplish, are entitled to much consideration. It was the general opinion at that time, according to my recollection, that the friar lands, when acquired by the insular government, would be placed in the same legal status as the larger amount of land acquired from Spain, and would with reference to sales, rentals, and so forth, be subject to the same rules, regulations, and law.

It has been stated here that up to a recent date 8,393 separate sales of friar lands were made, of which sales 82 involved tracts in excess of 16 hectares, or 40 acres each. Of those 82 sales only 6 exceeded 100 hectares, and of those 6, one was the sale to Mr. E. L. Poole of a very large tract—about 55,000 acres. This very large number of small sales indicates clearly that the insular government was in good faith administering the law according to its spirit as well as letter by permitting people who occupied lands under the administration of the friars to buy their holdings from the Government, the overwhelming majority of which were below 16 hectares, and those which were above that amount only very little in excess thereof.

I am opposed to the exploitation of the Philippine lands or other resources by any class of people, and especially by Americans, because the more limited are American interests in the islands the more readily and easily we will be able to withdraw American occupation when the time comes. Congress has never directly and formally declared the policy of this country in favor of discontinuing its occupation of the Philippines when they are fit to manage their own affairs and govern themselves; but the executive department of this Government has always, I think, unqualifiedly given the Filipinos to understand that when they are sufficiently developed financially, industrially, and politically to establish a stable form of government and maintain law and order, that this country will then withdraw its occupation, set them up as an independent people under a government established by themselves, and bid them Godspeed. I am not convinced that they are sufficiently advanced to do that now, and I am afraid they will not be at the end of eight years; but I hope to live to see the time when they will be, and to see the time when this country is honorably rid of them and out of this unfortunate and un-American entaglement. Therefore, it seems to me, that when that time comes, the fewer the interests of American citizens, directly or indirectly, in the lands, mines, factories, or in other respects, in the Philippines, the more promptly we can sever our relations with the islands.

I have always been opposed to any legislation or propositions which came before the House tending to involve our people in contracts or permanent business relations of any kind with the Filipinos, because I always feared that those people would exercise their influence in maintaining American sovereignty, which they might think would be to their advantage.

I distinctly recollect some years ago when a bill was up providing for mining contracts in the Philippines that it was opposed and voted down on the floor of this House under the impression, and because of the argument, that it might tie up the Philippines to us when the time should come when we otherwise would be willing and ready to sever our relations with them. I have always been opposed to spending large amounts of money in permanent fortifications and military establishments in the islands looking toward permanent occupation; and I have been in favor of securing either a small island or an advantageous place in a large island, with good natural harbors, on which we could establish our own improvements and maintain it permanently as a coaling, naval, and commercial station when we were ready to surrender occupation in the balance of the archipelago.

I was not very favorably disposed toward the provision in the Payne tariff law which opened our ports—the best in the world—to Philippine sugar and tobacco to a considerable amount, because I feared it would tempt the cupidity and enterprise of American refiners to go over there and buy up large tracts of sugar land, establish large plantations, and take advantage of that law in getting their sugar into this country free of duty. The expected happened, for it appears that very soon after the enactment of that law Mr. Poole, who is said to be a relative of Havemeyer and a member of the Sugar Trust, proceeded to buy in one lump this 55,000 acres of Philippine sugar land, and is proceeding to develop it as a great sugar plantation. Money is power the world over, and if other wealthy Sugar Trust magnates should be permitted to buy up large tracts of sugar land and establish their factories over there, they might, and perhaps would, oppose the discontinuance of American domination in the islands in their own interest.

Whatever may be said of American treatment of the Philippines in other respects, no one can claim that we took possession of them for the purpose of exploiting them or making money out of them. We subdued the people, it is true, and the loss of Philippine life and property in that process was tremendous; but aside from that our administration in the islands and our desire to help them and uplift them has been more generous, magnanimous, and liberal than in the case of any other colonizing or dominating power in the history of the world.

It was the wish of President McKinley that the islands should not be exploited. That has been the desire and wish of almost every American from that time to this, save those who went over there to make money.

The permission to Mr. Poole to buy this fifty or sixty thousand acres of land is contrary to the overwhelming sentiment of this country and contrary to the uniform policy of this country toward the Philippines since our occupation of the islands. The Congress owes it to the country and to itself to repudiate, as far as it can, that transaction, and to put itself on record against the permission of similar transactions in the future.

Our possession and occupation of the islands have been attended with enormous losses of money and some loss of life and property and much loss to the health of many of our citizens. But there is no use in crying over spilled milk. The past can not be changed; but we should at least demonstrate to the Filipino people and to the world that our conduct in the administration of the islands has not been actuated by selfish motives; that while we may have made mistakes, perhaps to their injury, those mistakes have not been due to any desire to make money out of them, either for this Government or for American citizens or corporations; and the enactment of this bill into law will be consistent in this regard with our treatment of them since our occupation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, when, under the treaty of Paris, the Government of the United States acquired from the Crown of Spain some 60,000,000 acres of land, we were sufficiently generous to provide by act of Congress that those lands might be administered by the Philippine Government for the benefit of the Filipino people. A provision to that effect was made in what is commonly called the organic act, approved July 19, 1902.

Now, there has been a good deal of discussion as to what provision was made in that act with reference to the sale of the friar lands, which, as I have already attempted to explain, are a very different proposition from what are called the public lands. The public lands sometimes in the act of 1902 are spoken of as "the public lands," but generally as "the public lands of the United States," and were never the inheritance of the Filipinos as has been stated. They never belonged to the Filipinos. They belonged to the Crown of Spain.

The United States purchased them. It had the right to do with them as it pleased. In the exercise of that right, and of a liberality and a generosity never before illustrated in any Government on earth, the United States gave those 60,000,000 acres of public lands which belonged to it to the Filipino people.

Now, in that same organic act of 1902 provision was made that the Philippine Government might purchase what are commonly called the friar lands, being some 400,000 acres of land which did not belong to the Crown of Spain, did not belong to the United States, did not belong to the Filipino Government, but were in the private ownership of certain religious orders, the Augustinians, commonly called the shod Augustinians by way of distinction from the barefoot Augustinians, the Recolletos, and the Dominicans.

Now, those lands were, about half of them, very thickly peopled. Upon about 200,000 acres of them there were living over 160,000 people. There are some of them near Manila and some of them near other big towns, and are rich, fertile, valuable lands. But the priests, the friars, who owned those lands, were in bad odor with the Filipino people. It seems that no native priest was ever admitted to their order. They sympathized with Spain. In the insurrection of the Filipino people against Spain the friars were understood to be in accord with Spain. The Filipinos had attacked the friars. They had killed about 50 of them. They had incarcerated a good many of them, and the others they had driven into Manila, where the Americans found them when they came to take possession of the islands. Now, as to the other half of these lands, they were, some of them, upon islands which were wild, unoccupied, untenanted; vacant, profitless lands, but we had to buy all of them in order to get any of them. The trouble was that the tenants on these friar lands finally refused to acknowledge the title of the friars at all. They would not pay rent. They simply lived on the land, denied the title of the actual owners, and refused to pay rent. The friars demanded either the rents or the possession of their lands, and the American Government found itself in all sorts of trouble between the friars and their thousands of tenants.

Under the authority of the act of Congress and under the skillful and diplomatic handling of the matter by William H. Taft, who was then in charge of the Philippines, arrangements were made whereby the Philippine Government became the possessor of the titles which had existed in the friars, and became the owners of the lands. In order to do that they had to issue $7,000,000 of bonds at 4 per cent, the annual interest charge being $280,000. They had no difficulty in arranging with the tenants, making peaceable, harmonious, orderly agreements with the 160,000 people upon one-half of those friar lands. They had no trouble with them. The agrarian and political troubles which arose out of the ownership of the friars have all passed away. The lands are disposed of all except about 125,000 acres. That is all there is of the friar lands remaining which anybody could pick up in any considerable tracts, and they are scattered through six different Provinces in different islands. Some of them are in Christian Provinces and some of them in non-Christian Provinces, inhabited by wild tribes.

This bill proposes that these friar lands shall be made subject to the same conditions which we imposed upon the disposition of the public lands by the Filipinos when we gave them the lands. I want to call attention again to the onerous conditions of those restrictions. No individual could buy more than 40 acres. The purchaser must live on that 40 acres continuously for five years, and during that time he could not sell the land, even though he had paid the full purchase price down in cash at the time of the transaction. He could not sell an inch of the land for five years. He could not borrow money on it to buy the water buffalo to cultivate it or to build a shack upon it. Now, who would buy 40 acres of land upon the Isabela estate, 100 miles from the seaport nearest to Manila, and that seaport 200 miles from Manila? Wild, desolate, uninhabited island, in a non-Christian province, peopled by wild tribes. Who would buy 40 acres there at any price if he had to go and live there for five years and could not sell or mortgage the land?

But in larger tracts those lands can be sold at fair prices. The difference between selling under the conditions applicable to the public lands and selling in larger blocks and without those onerous conditions of continuous occupancy, nonalienation, and nonencumbrance for five years is more than 4 to 1. They can get more than four times as much for those lands in large tracts and without these burdensome conditions as they can for the public lands.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that a person would not be able to sell the land or to mortgage it for five years. What is about the price at which those lands would sell?

Mr. OLMSTED. The public lands are offered at a price of something less than $2 an acre.

Mr. MANN. The friar lands?

Mr. OLMSTED. The friar lands have been sold at all the way from $6 to $722 an acre.

Mr. MANN. I understand that under the general law, in which the friar lands are to be included, if a man had money enough to pay half the price for the land he would not be able to borrow the other half to complete the payment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Should this bill pass he could not borrow a cent on the land, even though he paid the whole of the price cash down or if he paid half or a quarter. He is positively prohibited from selling or encumbering or alienating the land in any way. That is the law now as to public lands, and this bill proposes to extend it to friar lands.

Mr. MANN. Can they buy on terms?

Mr. OLMSTED. They can buy, payable in installments; but whether they pay in installments or pay cash down, they must live on the land continuously for five years, and can not sell or borrow money on it during that period.

Mr. MANN. If a man should buy a piece of land and pay the first two installments and then want to borrow money on his land and pay in full the balance, he would not be permitted to do so within five years?

Mr. OLMSTED. He would not. He could not borrow money on it in any way, shape, or manner during that period of five years.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not discussing his amendment. I do not want to limit him, but this general question has been very fully discussed, and I would be glad if the gentleman would confine his remarks to his amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will endeavor to do so within reasonable limits.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman state what is the quality of the remaining friar lands compared with those that have been disposed of?

Mr. OLMSTED. Just as good lands as any that have been disposed of, but they are not so near the city, and for that reason are not quite so valuable. The remaining land is just as fertile, but will not sell for as much as the land near Manila, and would not sell quite as well because the police regulations are not so strict where the land is located. But as far as the fertility and value of the land goes for sugar, hemp, cocoanuts, or rice it is just as good as any land in the islands.

Mr. Speaker, I was about to call attention to the fact that when I asked the gentleman from Wisconsin whether there were these restrictions on the sale of the friar lands in the bill as originally reported from the Insular Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin hesitated for a moment, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] answered that there were. Am I right?

Mr. JONES. I will say that I do not remember just what I said, but I would like to say now that there was in that bill a provision for purchasing these lands and disposing of these lands. It was not section 65. My recollection is that it was section 15, and my recollection is that when the bill went into conference the numbering of the sections was changed. It may not have been in the exact language of the present law. It may be that in conference there were some changes made, but there was a section providing for the purchase of the lands and for the disposition of them, and I think the section was numbered 15.

Mr. OLMSTED. Was there any limit on the number of acres of the so-called friar lands which might be sold to any one person?

Mr. JONES. That I could not undertake to say. I do not know just exactly how the section read, but I know that there was a section in the House bill and there was none in the Senate bill. The point that I undertook to make was that the Senate had nothing in it on the subject, while the House prepared a bill which provided for the disposition of the lands and reported it as a substitute for the Senate bill. That bill went into conference, and quite a number of changes were made, and I know the numbering of the sections was changed, and it is entirely possible that changes were made in the verbiage of that section.

Mr. OLMSTED. I was not a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs at that time. I was appointed to that committee by Speaker Henderson on the 13th of May, 1902, just before the bill came up in the House. I have in my hand the report of the Committee on Insular Affairs on that bill, and I think that the gentleman from Virginia is correct in stating that the section for the purchase of these lands of the religious orders was section 15. Then, section 16 provided:

That the land acquired under the authority of section 15 of this act shall constitute a portion of the public property of the Government of the Philippine Islands, and may be granted, sold, and conveyed by the Government of said islands on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe.

There is not a word about 16 hectares or 40 acres, or any limitation whatever.

Mr. JONES. I would like to remark right there that that is a very strong argument in favor of our position. When the bill came from the House, according to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it contained no limitations as to the land that could be sold, but in conference limitations were placed upon the sale, the limitations now in the law.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the question. The provision relating to the purchase of these lands became section 65, and it does not say, as the pending bill does, that they shall be sold subject to the provisions pertaining to the public land, but upon such terms as the Philippine Government may by legislation prescribe, "subject to the terms and conditions of this act." There are a great variety of terms and conditions provided for the friar lands. If Congress had desired to impose the same conditions as on the public lands it seems to me that Congress would have said: "Subject to the same terms and conditions as are herein provided for the sale of the public lands." But that is neither here nor there; that time has passed. That act has been on the statute books for 10 years and we are now amending it.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman was a member of the committee when this bill was pending in conference, and he was a member of the committee when the conference report was made to the House and the bill was adopted. I would like the gentleman to state to the House why, in his opinion, that limitation which he has read was put in the bill at all, if it was not the intention of Congress to put limitations on it. Why did it not leave the matter as it left the House?

Mr. OLMSTED. It did. There are plenty of limitations provided that are applicable to the friar lands. For instance, that they may not be leased for a period exceeding three years. That shows an intention that they should be promptly sold. There is another provision that the money shall be put in a trust fund to pay off the bonds.

Then there is another provision that deferred payments shall bear the same interest as that paid on the bonds issued for the purchase of the friar lands. Another condition was that the money realized from the sale of the lands should constitute a trust fund and not go into the Treasury for general purposes.

There is no evidence at all that they intended to limit the holdings to 40 acres. Then there is another provision that corporations shall not hold more than 1,024 hectares, and another that the Government shall have certain rights of way over these lands.

There are a great many conditions named in the act to which they were thus made subject, but Congress did not in terms make them subject to the provisions in relation to public lands. It strikes me that that is significant. Had Congress wanted to impose those conditions it would have said so specifically. But it omitted to impose those limitations and conditions upon them.

Now, it has been contended by the gentleman from Virginia upon the floor of this House, and he is a lawyer for whose judgment I have great respect, that under section 15 of the organic act as it now stands public lands can not be acquired by a citizen of the United States. That section provides:

SEC. 15. That the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized and empowered, on such terms as it may prescribe, by general legislation, to provide for the granting or sale and conveyance to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands such parts and portions of the public domain, other than timber and mineral lands of the United States in said islands as it may deem wise, not exceeding 16 hectares to any one person, and for the sale and conveyance of not more than 1,024 hectares to any corporation or association of persons: Provided, That the grant or sale of such lands, whether the purchase price be paid at once or in partial payments—shall be conditioned upon actual and continued occupancy, improvement, and cultivation of the premises sold for a period of not less than five years, during which time the purchaser or grantee can not alienate or encumber said land or the title thereto; but such restriction shall not apply to transfers of rights and title of inheritance under the laws for the distribution of the estates of decedents.

I call particular attention to the words "actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands."

A citizen of the Philippine Islands—that term is defined in the organic act as follows:

That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then residing in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain.

And so forth.

Under that language a citizen of the United States is not a citizen of the Philippine Islands, and there is no provision of law by which he can become one. Now, it is the opinion of as good a lawyer as my friend from Virginia that under that law no citizen of the United States can acquire even 40 acres of public land in the Philippines.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment? The gentleman from Pennsylvania quotes me entirely correctly. That was the position which I held, and I still hold that position. I want to ask the gentleman if that was not the position taken by Judge Madison and two other Members of the majority in the Sixty-first Congress. I will ask if Judge Madison, whose opinion the gentleman quoted during this discussion, did not write a report in which he took precisely the same ground as I took, that the commission could not sell one acre of these public lands to any alien?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know exactly who would be considered an alien in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. JONES. To anybody other than a native of the islands.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think that he perhaps used the word "alien," and he drafted an opinion—I do not remember the exact opinion, but it was in harmony with the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. JONES. So I was not alone in that matter?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is not the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to practically acknowledge the contention of the gentleman from Virginia and correct it?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the intention. I want to remove all question, all doubt, and make it perfectly plain that a citizen of the United States may have the poor privilege of buying 40 acres of public land in the Philippine Islands if he so desires. It seems to me that it would be humiliating to the people of the United States if, after having given away these 60,000,000 acres of land to the Filipinos, we are to be deprived of the privilege of buying and paying for even the small allowance of 40 acres. While a citizen of the United States is not a statutory citizen of the Philippine Islands within the meaning and intent of the organic act of 1902, nevertheless we are not foreigners in those islands. A citizen of the United States is not a foreigner in any land over which the Stars and Stripes float in protection. [Applause.] Not being a foreigner, being under the protection of the same flag and of the same Government, what earthly reason can there be why a citizen of the United States shall be denied the privilege, either by the organic act or in this bill, of purchasing 40 acres of land and raising a coconut grove in the Philippine Islands if he so desires? The purpose of my amendment is to insure that privilege, and I will ask to have it read in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly yield to me for a moment or two? I do not want to deprive the gentleman of his time.

Mr. OLMSTED. You mean for an interruption? Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the amendment read. I have not been here during the progress of the debate, but I have very distinct and clear ideas on this whole subject. I visited the Philippine Islands twice, was here during the original discussion when the organic act was passed, and had inserted an amendment in it on this very subject. I have visited most of the large places in the entire archipelago. I rode for two days for 80 miles across the largest island of them all, Mindanao. I say as a business man that the wisest thing that could be done for the Philippine Islands is to have American capital go there and be invested, and preferably go there and be invested under the jurisdiction and control of the Filipinos themselves, and therefore this morning for a moment or two I questioned the gentleman from Wisconsin as to whether this bill met the approval of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands. I think the wisest thing that can be done is to allow the people who are now located on the friar lands to have those lands, buy them from the Government, and the Government take a mortgage back if the tenants have not the money to pay for them. That is the first proposition. That being so, it strikes me the wisest thing that can be done would be for the Filipino Government, the Government of the Filipinos themselves, in whom I have confidence, for I have met many of them—wise, intelligent, prudent, thoughtful, and patriotic men, loving their country just as much as I love the State of Connecticut—I would let them have unlimited control, without restriction, of the balance of these friar lands to sell in such a way as they, in their judgment, saw fit for what they believed to be for the best interests of the islands.

I would trust the two Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands with full control in regard to all the unoccupied friar lands, and I would equally trust the Philippine Legislature itself to do the same thing, believing that they would do that which was wise and best for their own country. And for us here, 10,000 miles away from the scene of operations, to attempt to control the situation out there, of which we can have little knowledge, is a piece of unwise legislation.

Mr. REDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. REDFIELD. It is a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to agree most cordially with every word that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has said. The sad and regretful thing about the Philippine Islands is the awful poverty of the peasant farmer.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely.

Mr. REDFIELD. It is pitiful. It makes the saddest parts of the sad places in different parts of Ireland look like a garden blossoming as a rose. And it can not be told more clearly than in a few words which will contrast one of the nearest tropical countries with the Philippines.

If the gentleman will allow me a single moment, I would like simply to state in a few sentences the facts regarding Java on the one hand and the Philippines on the other. I had the pleasure of going from one to the other. Java, an island almost precisely the size of the State of New York, or of Pennsylvania, supports 30,000,000 people, and is a food exporter. There is not a man here that has not been familiar with Java coffee, Java sugar, Java tobacco, and a dozen other products of Java, and yet in that island, which is chiefly mountainous and the size of New York State almost precisely, they support 30,000,000 people and at the same time export food. In the Philippines, with every advantage that Java has, and more, where the country is less mountainous and as fertile, and her area more than double and her population but 8,000,000, she is a food importer. She can not feed herself. It is the poverty of the tao, of the Philippine farmer, which is the supreme and controlling factor in the Philippine Islands, and it is the curse of the islands that the "politico" holds that farmer in his grasp and uses him in his poverty and in his ignorance for his own selfish ends. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the comparison of Ireland with the Philippine Islands is not a fair illustration. Ireland was under an English landowning aristocracy, and it is undoubtedly true that great areas of that country have long been held by individuals for the purposes of hunting and for game preserves, and not for cultivation. It is not so in the Philippines. For two days I rode through the island of Mindanao—and there are gentlemen here who can indorse what I say—and saw a soil as fine as anything under the heavens. We rode through grass so high that you could see nothing except the heads of your companions. There was a magnificent soil, which had been lying uncultivated from the dawn of creation until now. I do not care whether it is in 40-acre sections or in 40,000-acre sections, if you can get that country under cultivation and give the people employment, instead of allowing it to be occupied here and there by a little settlement of Moro Indians, and the larger part of the islands uncultivated and in virgin condition, it is the best thing you can do. It seems to me to be folly for us to legislate here, with prejudices formed under an entirely different condition of things, that they shall not sell their land except in 40-acre tracts. What is the purpose of it? It is to prevent outsiders from so-called exploitation of the islands. But the people do not cultivate them. They can not afford to do so. They have not the money to make great sugar plantations and great tobacco plantations. But if men will go in there and put in their capital and buy the land—I mean the public lands, and not the lands occupied by the individual citizen or Filipino to-day—but buy the public land now unoccupied and give these people employment, and take the Moros out of savagery and put them to work, it will do more to civilize, educate, and cultivate those people and build up and strengthen and enrich the islands than anything we could do. And for us here to enact restrictive legislation based upon entirely different conditions to those islands is making a fatal mistake, so far as their prosperity and advancement are concerned. Give them work at fair wages. Let the capital go in there.

I remember when the first bill was passed I put in an amendment in regard to the amount of land that could be secured, making the exception that irrigation companies should have the privilege of buying larger quantities, because, of course, an irrigation company can not work to advantage on a 40-acre tract. And that provision is still in the bill. Whom is it going to harm that a man should go down into Mindanao or Mindoro and buy thousands of acres of land and run a sugar plantation, where the land now is absolutely wild and unoccupied. Talk about conservation—I would rather conserve the people than conserve empty land. That is the kind of conservation I am for. And, gentlemen, I tell you, as honestly as anything I have ever believed in my life, that this legislation you propose to pass is a fatal mistake for the advancement of the Philippines.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the land area of the Philippine Islands is equal to that of all the islands that compose the Empire of Japan, with its 40,000,000 people. It is greater than the six New England States and New York and Delaware combined.

Yet we have this whole controversy raging here over an attempt to limit the sale of 125,000 acres of friar lands to tracts of 40 acres each. And gentlemen seek to deprive citizens of the United States from purchasing even 40 acres. These lands, according to the report of a Government official who has recently visited the islands, an official of the Agricultural Department, are the most fertile lands that he ever saw. There is no doubt about their fertility. And yet, adapted as many of them are to the cultivation of rice, and the people living, as the people of the islands do, largely upon rice, they did not raise enough last year to supply them with food. They imported rice of the value of over ₱7,000,000—more than $3,500,000—when every pound of it ought to have been raised there on the islands.

But you can not raise rice by modern methods on a 40-acre tract, and, of course, you can not make sugar by modern methods on 40-acre tracts. If there is anybody on earth to be benefited by this proposed legislation, it is the existing sugar-mill men. One of them, I am told, owns 14,000 acres of land in the Island of Negros. The sugar-mill men may be benefited by the maintenance of a monopoly, which would be interfered with if people could buy enough of these lands to start modern sugar centrales. It takes about a million dollars to establish a first-class sugar centrale, and when it is constructed it makes the production of sugar very much cheaper than by the old methods, utilizing 90 per cent of the juice of the cane, as against 60 per cent now realized in those islands.

There is no reason why those islands should not raise enough produce to support a population of 50,000,000, and yet they are not at present raising enough to feed themselves, because they do not know how. They need a few Pennsylvania Dutch farmers down there to show them how to cultivate their land. They need some Yankees there. They need to have some citizens of the United States there to show them what thrift is, to teach them how to make money, to earn money, and to save money, and how to make their lands produce.

The object of my amendment is to enable citizens of the United States to buy land there, even though they can buy it only in 40-acre tracts. What on earth is the objection to that?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. If I understand the gentleman's argument correctly, the settlement of large numbers of American citizens in the Philippine Islands would foreclose the possibility of Philippine independence, and make it absolutely necessary that American laws should be permanently established over them, would it not?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is on the assumption that the Filipinos themselves are not able to maintain a good government there.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman believe that the argument of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that the permission for the investment of large amounts of capital there would mean that the country must be permanently taken and governed by Americans?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, not at all. But I believe that it will be governed by Americans until such time as the Filipinos are fitted for self-government. I think that they would be fitted for self-government more quickly if they had a sprinkling of American citizens there to show them how to make the most of their natural advantages.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman believe that a greater amount of American capital would go there unless it were understood that the American Government would be permanent, or unless some arrangement for the neutralization of the islands would be agreed upon by the different world powers?

Mr. OLMSTED. If that is true, it is based upon the assumption that the Filipinos are not fitted for self-government and could not be relied upon to maintain a stable government. Yet a bill is pending now, and is liable to come up in the House any day, declaring for their independence.

The only objection that anybody could raise to my amendment is that anybody going there to the islands and investing capital would insist upon the maintenance of a stable government, and the belief that the Filipinos could not do that would tend to defer the action of Congress in granting independence to the people of the islands.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do.

Mr. HILL. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman so frequently, but there are two things that the Filipinos have got to do: First, they have got to raise enough crops to live on; and, second, they have got to raise crops to sell. They raise hemp, and their land is adapted to the raising of sugar. This bill provides that the land shall be conveyed in tracts limited to 40 acres. What is a man who has got only 40 acres going to do with his cane?

Mr. OLMSTED. He is not going to raise much cane.

Mr. HILL. No; he is not going to raise cane.

Mr. OLMSTED. But this bill will tend to raise Cain. [Laughter.] A man with 40 acres of land is not justified in building a centrale, even if he had the requisite capital.

Mr. HILL. And he can not borrow the necessary capital.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; he can not. He is not permitted to mortgage or otherwise encumber his land for five years.

Mr. HILL. Would not such a man be better off if some one would go in and build a centrale and buy his cane from him? And is he not just as well off if somebody else comes in and buys the land and gives him steady work at good wages? If he owns the 40 acres of land and can not make it pay, he has got to sell it, whether he wants to or not. It seems to me he would be in a better condition if somebody else should own the land and employ him, if he has not got the capital himself.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I owned land in the Philippine Islands, and some one came along and built a centrale and offered to buy my cane, I should feel that he had at least doubled the value of my land. That has been the experience in Porto Rico, where French and English and American capital has built these large centrales, and thus manufactured sugar much cheaper than the Porto Ricans could.

They have purchased land enough to insure themselves a reasonable supply of cane and they buy the balance of the cane. They prefer to buy it, if they can, from the neighbors who own their own farms. They take all the cane that the people in the surrounding country can raise, and pay them better prices than they ever got for any other crops in the island. That island is more prosperous to-day than it ever was before. That ought to be the condition in the Philippines. People who wish to put their capital there ought to be permitted, as a good business proposition, to buy enough land to justify them in erecting sugar centrales, so that they may also buy the product of the 40-acre-tract owners all about them. Of course if it is the policy of the United States to prevent the sugar industry from being successful in the islands, then this bill is just the thing.

It is customary to speak of the Philippines as a bad bargain. I hear people say, "I wish we could get rid of the Philippines. We can not do it honorably, because they are not fitted for self-government, but I wish we could get rid of them as a bad bargain." Now, that depends. I am not here to say that the United States proposes to hold the Philippines indefinitely, but I do say that if the United States did propose to hold them, it could make them among our richest possessions.

Mr. REDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. With pleasure.

Mr. REDFIELD. There is one crop in the Philippine Islands, an increasing crop there, which, so far as I know, has never been mentioned here, certainly not during my brief presence in the House, the consideration of which is quite as important to the future of the Philippine Islands as sugar or rice or even hemp. I refer to the crop called copra. The dried meat of the coconut is at once an article of limited supply and for which there is an enormous demand. The demand is vastly larger than the supply known in the world. I went there as a business man to investigate, and as a result of that investigation I firmly believe that we have in the Philippine Islands a dependency, a possession, a sister State, call it what you will, more valuable, acre for acre, than any equal area of the continental United States. I believe that sincerely.

The cost of raising copra by the crudest method is approximately $13 or $14 a ton. The present market price is $72 or $73 a ton. There is not enough to be had. It goes chiefly to France, where it is used principally as a substitute for cream butter. When I was in the Far East one large English and one large American concern were both seeking to buy coconut oil, which is made from copra. Each wanted 1,000 tons, and could not get it. It is almost impossible to get enough. The coconut-oil works in Manila are about to be rebuilt. A gentleman is here in this country buying machinery for that purpose now. It is an immensely profitable and an absolutely certain crop. It needs almost no care. The only thing to be done is to wait eight years and then you will sell the product of your trees for a dollar per tree per annum to a Chinaman, who takes all the risk and does all the work. This is one of the great world food supplies. It is a joke to talk about raising it on 40 acres. The Filipino natives scratch their scanty acres with a wooden stick pulled by a long-horned carabao that suffers fearfully unless he can soak himself with water every two hours. That sort of plowing only scratches the top of the ground to a depth of 3 or 4 inches. If these men had irrigation they could raise two crops a year, which they now fail to do. Irrigation costs money, but by the help of it they could double their annual crop, and in some places could get three crops a year from their farms. But even so, to attempt to raise rice, hemp, sugar, or copra on 40 acres is an absurdity. We of the western world have attempted to legislate our occidental ideas for the benefit of an oriental people without realizing the great contradiction in economic conditions, in climate, and in every form of ethnic and religious relationship. We in a wild spirit of experiment and in a perfect spirit of imperialism have attempted to legislate for these oriental people, and it is an absurd proposition for us to say that a man there, under those conditions which we know so little about, shall own no more than so much land. As the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has so wisely said, it is absurd for us, living 10,000 miles away and who, perhaps, would not know copra when we saw it, who could not tell one grade of hemp from another, or one grade of sugar from another, who perhaps would not know a sugar mill from a sawmill, to say that a man, however hardy, however vigorous, however thrifty, shall own not more than 40 acres of land; not 41 acres, but 40. That is the law laid down by the great American people for the government of the Filipinos. That is republicanism, democracy, equality, call it what you will. Is it not absurd? [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. QUEZON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania catch clearly the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD]? [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Now I yield to the gentleman from the Philippines.

Mr. QUEZON. I should like to know if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me to make a few statements, for just two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has five minutes remaining.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman can get his own time after I sit down. I have but five minutes remaining.

Mr. QUEZON. Very well. I will not interrupt the gentleman now.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should be glad to yield, except that my time is so limited. I merely wish to call attention again to the tenor and purport and object of my amendment, which is simply to provide that citizens of the United States, who gave these 60,000,000 acres of land to the Filipino people, shall not be deprived of the small privilege of buying 40 acres there if they want to. I think it is humiliating to decree that a citizen of the United States can not hold land in any territory over which the flag floats. That is the purpose of my amendment. I want to see whether this House is willing to vote that no American citizen shall be permitted to buy 40 acres of land formerly owned by the Government and still under the American flag. [Applause.]

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT AND RECAPITULATION RELATIVE TO THE PURCHASE OF THE FRIAR LANDS, THE LAW RELATING THERETO, AND THE FACTS INVOLVED IN THE SALE WHICH LED UP TO THE CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, by the treaty with Spain concluded in December, 1898, the United States acquired the public domain of the Philippine Islands, amounting to some 60,000,000 acres of the total area of some 72,000,000 acres. Perhaps 40,000,000 acres of these lands were timbered and mountainous and are reserved from entry under the organic law of the Philippines enacted by Congress and approved July 1, 1902. Some 12,000,000 acres were in private ownership; some 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 were being or had been cultivated. Lands in the Philippines are measured by hectares, a hectare being, roughly, 2½ acres. I shall speak in acres. Of the privately owned lands some 400,000 acres, said by Mr. Taft and others to be among the richest in the archipelago, were owned or claimed by orders of friars, and were known as the frair lands. Sugar and tobacco were their principal products. After the acquisition of the Philippines there was found to exist a bitter controversy, of historical duration, between the tenants or occupants of these lands, some 60,000 tenant families in number, and the orders of friars, growing out of rival claims of ownership.

To remove this condition, which was considered inimical to the peace and welfare of the Filipinos, and for the professed purpose of getting these estates into the hands of the tenants or occupants, the United States successfully negotiated for their purchase; and in the organic act of the Philippines, already referred to, authority was given the Philippine Government to issue bonds, take over, administer, and dispose of these lands. Bonds in the sum, roughly, of $7,200,000 were issued by the Philippine Government, and by agreements entered into in December, 1903, these friar lands were taken over, and under the provisions of the organic act became the public property of the Philippines.

LIMITATIONS UPON LAND OWNERSHIP.

Section 15 of the organic act of the Philippines limited the quantity of the public lands which might be acquired by an individual to 40 acres and by corporations or associations to 2,500 acres. Section 75 limited agricultural corporations to the ownership of 2,500 acres. This was for the avowed purpose of preventing foreign exploitation. Sections 63 and 65, providing for, or rather enabling the Philippine Government, to purchase and dispose of the friar lands, subjected these lands to the limitations of the act. The Philippine Commission, by the public-land act passed October 7, 1903, subjected the public lands to the limitations contained in section 15 of the organic act, and by the friar-land act, passed April 26, 1904, subjected the friar lands to the limitations contained in the public-land act. These acts of the Philippine Commission, however, were merely declaratory of the organic law. Let it be borne in mind, once for all, that no act or omission of the Philippine Government could annul, set aside, or modify the provisions of the organic act, the constitution of the Archipelago. This is elementary and axiomatic.

THE ACTS WHICH RESULTED IN THE INVESTIGATION.

Notwithstanding these friar lands were taken over from their former owners for the express purpose of breaking them up in small holdings among the natives, and notwithstanding the limitations and safeguards thrown about their disposition by Congress, on November 22, 1909, the insular government entered into an agreement with one Edward L. Poole, who represented three purchasers, Horace Havemeyer, Charles H. Senff, and Charles J. Welch, stockholders and directors of the Sugar Trust, for the sale of the San Jose estate of 56,000 acres in the island of Mindoro. A final certificate of sale was issued on January 4, 1910, prior to which time, however, the prospective purchasers had taken the precaution to require no less a guarantee than the written opinion of the Attorney General of the United States to the effect that the friar lands were not subject to the quantity limitations in the public-land laws.

The cause of this precaution was that on September 3, 1909, a Mr. Hammond, of the law firm of Strong & Cadwalader, of New York, of which firm Mr. Henry W. Taft, a brother of President Taft, is now the leading member, and of which Attorney General Wickersham was a member before assuming his present position as Attorney General, had called at the Bureau of Insular Affairs, at Washington, with a view to negotiating for the purchase of friar lands and particularly of the San Jose estate, as stated in a letter written by Gen. Edwards, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, to Gov. Forbes, at Manila, on September 27, 1909. It is true that Gen. Edwards later appeared before the Insular Committee and stated that he did not believe Mr. Hammond had discussed the purchase of friar lands, but the following record evidence would appear to dispose of the latter contention:

EDWARDS TO CONGRESS. APRIL 11, 1910.	EDWARDS TO FORBES. SEPTEMBER 27, 1909.
Major McIntyre thinks Mr. Hammond did not bring up the question of the purchase of any special piece of property in the Philippine Islands, nor is he positive that he mentioned the purchase of land on the friar estates.	A representatives of a New York law firm, one of the best in New York, has visited this office in connection with the purchase of the San Jose estate in Mindoro.

INSULAR BUREAU SAID FRIAR LANDS COULD NOT BE SOLD IN BULK.

On the occasion of this visit on September 3, 1909, it appears that Mr. Hammond was informed by Col. McIntyre that the friar lands could not be sold because of limitations in the organic law of the Philippines enacted by Congress. At the time Mr. Hammond made this call Mr. Poole was in New York in consultation with Mr. Havemeyer and Mr. Welch preparatory to embarking for the Philippines to purchase sugar lands, Mr. Poole having had such connections with these parties in Cuba, and it being their desire to get in on the ground floor in the Philippines under the free-trade act about to pass Congress. Mr. Poole was to be accompanied by a Mr. Prentiss.

When Poole and Prentiss arrived in Manila they informed the insular officials that they had been advised by the Insular Bureau in Washington that the friar lands could not be sold in large tracts. They referred to the information given them by their attorney, Mr. Hammond. Thereupon Gov. Gen. Forbes cabled Gen. Edwards that Poole and Prentiss desired to purchase the San Jose estate, but had been informed by the Insular Bureau, of which Gen. Edwards is the chief, that it could not be purchased by an individual. Whereupon Gen. Edwards cabled Gov. Forbes that it was thoroughly understood in the Insular Bureau at Washington that the friar lands could be sold to an individual without regard to limitation as to area, and that when Mr. Hammond called it was not understood that efforts were being made to sell these estates.

I have already called attention to Gen. Edwards's self-contradiction touching the object of Mr. Hammond's visit to the Insular Bureau at Washington on September 3, 1909. While an utter lack of prudence was displayed by every official of both the American and insular administrations touching the sale of the friar lands, the purchasers appear to have been very cautious. Notwithstanding the assurances given them by all of the officials of the insular government at Manila and the Insular Bureau at Washington, they demanded in addition the written guaranty of the Attorney General of the United States.

WHY SUCH GUARANTY COULD BE ASKED.

Not every mere purchaser of a piece of land, it may be remarked in passing, is in a position to request the written opinion of the Attorney General of the United States to confirm his title, but it must be considered who these purchasers were. These purchasers were directors and stockholders of the Sugar Trust, and Mr. Horace Havemeyer, the son of the founder of the Sugar Trust, had retained Mr. Henry W. Taft as an attorney of record to defend him personally, and Mr. Henry W. Taft had also appeared as attorney of record to defend the Sugar Trust against criminal prosecutions by the Federal Government at a time when Attorney General Wickersham was a member of the law firm, and the firm had been paid fees aggregating more than $27,000 for these services, in which fees Mr. Wickersham participated. It does not appear even at this late day to have occurred to the defenders of the policy of the administration that even a Member of Congress could not have procured from the Attorney General of the United States an opinion of the character rendered in favor of the purchasers of the San Jose estate, or that the ordinary individual could not have gotten across the threshold of the War Department with such a request. Notwithstanding the failure of the Committee on Insular Affairs to properly characterize some of the factors involved in this transaction, I still adhere to the opinion expressed by me in seeking to bring about the investigation that only the persons and attorneys involved could have successfully taken up the negotiations for the purchase of these lands or could have secured the rendition of such an opinion.

INSULAR BUREAU CHANGES ITS MIND.

On October 22 Col. McIntyre wrote Mr. Hammond that the friar lands were for sale.

What caused Col. McIntyre to write this letter does not appear. There was no way in which I could make it appear. This was a congressional investigation. It was an inquiry by a committee of Congress into acts affecting the administration. It was an administration committee. The committee was primarily interested in protecting the administration. The committee never saw an original document. It never saw an original cablegram or telegram. It accepted alleged copies. It accepted parts of alleged copies. These were usually furnished days after their existence was disclosed by the witnesses at the hearings. When it was disclosed that a document or writing of any kind existed, the witness would be asked if he would kindly furnish the committee with a copy. Sometime afterwards, maybe a day or maybe a week, the witness would kindly furnish the committee with a copy by delivering the same to the clerk, and it would then, without examination, be printed in the record. This, I believe, is the usual manner of congressional investigations and explains their uniform failure to ascertain the facts. If a lawyer were to conduct a case in court as the average congressional investigation is conducted, he ought to be disbarred for incompetence. As a rule, much more verity attends the proceeding in a justice court involving a disturbance of the peace of a $10-book account then attends the gravest and most important of congressional inquiries.

The principal exception under my observation to this rule was the Ballinger-Pinchot inquiry, in which both sides employed able counsel. Insistence upon the best evidence, insistence upon the original documents, destroyed the case of the administration in that investigation. There is no question whatever in my mind that had not Mr. Brandeis been employed to prosecute that investigation against the administration it would have been a failure. The President of the United States, the Attorney General of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and their subordinates conspired to suppress the evidence and deceive the committee; and but for the employment, the ability, and the persistence of Mr. Brandeis the conspiracy would have succeeded. I refer to the inquiry into the sale of the frair lands as an investigation, but I use this term merely as a convenience. The proceedings were merely a parody upon an investigation, conducted more in accordance with a political election contest than a judicial proceeding. Still, as I shall undertake to show, some results were produced.

THE TAFT FIRM DRAFTS A SUBSTITUTE.

On the next day after Col. McIntyre informed Mr. Hammond by mail of his discovery that the friar lands were for sale—that is to say, on October 23, 1909, Mr. Hammond wrote Col. McIntyre that—after careful consideration and in view of the fact that it may be necessary for my former clients to request some discretionary action upon the part of the Government officials, I decided that they had better be represented by other counsel. Accordingly, the firm of Cravath, Henderson & De Gersdorff has taken up the matter.

I may say here that all of the facts to which I am referring may be established by reference to the hearings; but I am only making some preliminary statements which are necessary to a clear understanding of the results of the investigation which I shall discuss hereafter. I can not, therefore, take the time to quote all of the letters and cablegrams to which I have referred.

An attempt has been made to have it appear that Mr. Henry W. Taft's law firm withdrew from the negotiations for the purchase of the San Jose estate before it was consummated. The fact remains, however, that the law firm of Cravath, Henderson & De Gersdorff entered into the negotiations at the invitation of Mr. Taft's law firm; that upon their entry they were furnished all the information theretofore secured from the Insular Bureau, and that when Mr. De Gersdorff appeared in Washington on November 23, 1909, with a memorandum prepared from this information, and which memorandum was presented to the Attorney General and served as the basis of his opinion, the San Jose estate had already, and on the day prior, been sold to Mr. Hammond's clients. The firm of Cravath, Henderson & De Gersdorff rendered no actual service whatever in these negotiations. The record clearly shows that the agreement to sell had already been entered into.

While I am not able to prove it, I am satisfied that De Gersdorff came to Washington, upon cabled information of the sale from Manila, although it was pretended that his first knowledge of the sale was a newspaper cablegram shown him in the Insular Bureau. Like many other questionable transactions that have occurred, the truth will probably never be known until there is a change of political control in the department, and even then incomplete records will thwart the investigator.

On December 4 the Attorney General was asked for his opinion as to the validity of the sale, and on December 18 he issued the opinion declaring the friar lands not to be subject to the quantity limitations in the public-land act, which opinion was cabled to Manila on December 22. I have already stated that the final certificate of sale was executed on January 4, 1910. This summarizes the main features of the transaction as they were known at the time the Committee on Insular Affairs began its investigation. Some new and very interesting facts brought out in the investigation will be discussed later, and they will be the better understood for the foregoing recapitulation of the facts upon which the investigation was based.

SUBSTITUTE EMBODYING MINORITY FINDINGS IN FRIAR-LAND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized to oppose this amendment. Nobody who has spoken seems to be on the other side. I do not care to speak on the bill, but I desire to oppose this amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have a substitute to offer to the pending bill and all amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Colorado opposed to this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am; and I have a substitute for the pending bill and all amendments. I am just as much opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as the gentleman from Virginia could possibly be.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Colorado under the circumstances is entitled to recognition.

Mr. JONES. All I ask is that the Chair will recognize me to oppose this amendment before the matter is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; the Chair will be just about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the following substitute for the pending bill and all amendments, which I desire to have read in my time as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 15 of an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized and empowered, on such terms as it may prescribe, by general legislation, to provide for the granting or sale and conveyance to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands such parts and portions of the public domain, other than timber and mineral lands of the United States in said islands, as it may deem wise, not exceeding 16 hectares to any one person, and for the sale and conveyance of not more than 1,024 hectares to any corporation or association of persons: Provided, That the grant or sale of such lands, whether the purchase price be paid at once or in partial payments, shall be conditioned upon actual and continued occupancy, improvement, and cultivation of the premises sold for a period of not less than five years, during which time the purchaser or grantee can not alienate or encumber said land or the title thereto; but such restriction shall not apply to transfers of rights and title of inheritance under the laws for the distribution of the estates of decedents.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if the Clerk will pause, I want to say at this point that my substitute, as far as read by the Clerk, is simply a reenactment of section 15 of the organic law of the Philippine Islands—that is, the public-lands section. There is no new material in the substitute until this point where the Clerk is about to begin reading, and I ask close attention of Members to the subsequent provisions of the section, which are new provisions proposed.

The Clerk continued the reading of the proposed substitute, as follows:

Provided further, That any and all sales or leases of public agricultural lands heretofore made, whether such lands were acquired under the treaty of peace with Spain or otherwise, to other than actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands, are hereby declared to be null and void as contrary to the provisions of this act, and such lands shall escheat to the Government of the Philippine Islands, which escheat shall be determined by a legal proceeding in the name of the Government of the Philippine Islands, conducted in the supreme court thereof under the direction of the governor thereof, unless the grantees and lessees or their assigns shall surrender such lands to the Government of the Philippine Islands within a period of five years from the time this section as amended by this act goes into effect, and until the same is so surrendered said lands shall be subject to a graduated increase of taxation, being taxable at the end of one year at the rate of 5 per cent of the purchase price, and at the end of two years at 10 per cent per annum, and thereafter said rate of taxation on said lands shall increase annually at the rate of 50 per cent until the same is surrendered; and any such transaction that may be pending at the time this act as amended goes into effect shall be canceled by the Philippine Government; and said government shall return without interest to such purchasers or lessees or their assigns any amounts that have been paid, and shall cancel any notes or obligations issued in part payment, restoring them to the purchasers or lessees or their assigns under the instruments so canceled. Title to any such lands shall fully revest in the Government of the Philippine Islands, to be disposed of subject to the conditions and limitations of this act: Provided further, That all officers and employees of the Philippine Government, without regard to citizenship, are prohibited from directly or indirectly purchasing or leasing or becoming interested in the purchase or lease of any public lands, and all such sales and leases heretofore made are hereby declared to be null and void, and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to forthwith take the necessary steps to effect the restoration of said lands to the Philippine Government, including all such lands and interests therein acquired and held by such officers and employees through membership or shareholding in any association or corporation, which practice is hereby forbidden. Any officer or employee who hereafter violates this provision shall be forthwith removed from his office, and shall further be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, upon conviction of which he may be punished by imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, and by fine not exceeding $1,000, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. JONES. I was about to make the same point of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. OLMSTED. The amendment is not germane to the bill. The bill amends section 65 of the organic act, and this is an amendment to section 15.

The SPEAKER. While the gentleman from Colorado is occupying the time, the Chair will examine the amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is not discussing his amendment but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He had his amendment in the nature of a substitute read for the information of the House, so that he is entitled to an hour. In the meantime the Chair will examine the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to say at this time that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct in stating that my substitute does go to section 15 instead of section 65, but it affects identically the same legislation, but it applies the remedy to the public-lands section instead of the friar-lands section. Now, I want to yield five minutes to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON].

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I almost congratulate myself that I am denied the right to vote, for if I had to vote on this bill after listening to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD] I would not know how to vote. [Laughter.]

Listening to the gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from New York I am inclined to believe that they favor the idea of allowing the Filipino people to decide for themselves what to do and what should be done with their lands. Listening to the distinguished gentleman from New York, I am inclined to believe that in his opinion Congress, 12,000 miles away from the Philippine Islands, can not wisely legislate for the Filipinos. I must say that I agree with the gentlemen that the Filipinos ought to be allowed to decide for themselves what should be done in regard to their own lands, and, with due respect to the wisdom of Congress, I also share the opinion that it can not fitly legislate for the Filipinos. We are striving for precisely this very thing, we are trying to be recognized as having the right of governing ourselves on the very ground stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD], to wit, that Congress is too far away from the Philippines and does not know nor can it ever know as well as we do what is best for us.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether or not he, by what he said, means precisely that he approves of allowing the Filipinos to elect a legislature of their own and permit that legislature to decide upon the disposition of our friar and public lands? Is that his proposition? If so, I will say to the House that I am in perfect accord with the gentleman from New York.

But I fear, Mr. Speaker, that when gentlemen say let the Filipinos do what they want about their lands they mean let the present Filipino legislature, which is a body composed of the Philippine Commission—a branch appointed by the United States and the Philippine Assembly—let the present legislature decide for the Filipino people. Then I say in this particular case each house of the legislature has already expressed its views, and the opinion of the Philippine Commission is different from and opposed to the opinion of the Philippine Assembly. They do not agree. Then what should be done? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Congress should do exactly what the Filipinos are asking it to do.

The Philippine Assembly, representing the Filipino people, is urging Congress to limit the sale of the friar lands and the public lands and all kinds of Government lands to 40 acres to an individual, and 2,500 acres to corporations. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, almost in every previous piece of legislation enacted by Congress the Filipino people have not been heard, and, if they have been heard, Congress has not done what they have asked Congress to do. This will be the first time, as far as I know, if Congress should pass this bill, that Congress will do exactly what the Filipinos want, and therefore every gentleman on the floor of this House who believes that the Filipinos know what is best for them and should be allowed to legislate for themselves ought to vote for the bill, because this bill is exactly expressing the will of the Filipino people.

Now, I want to make a statement regarding what the gentleman from New York said as to copra. It is true that copra is the most profitable crop of the Philippines, and because copra is the most profitable crop we do not want large sugar plantations in the islands. Why so? Because copra at the same time that it yields to the owner of land a great profit permits that such owner may be a small farmer, while the sugar industry is a monopoly of the rich. It is not correct to say——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor and I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands. I feel that this is his cause rather than ours, and I want him to have all the time he desires.

Mr. QUEZON. I thank the gentleman from Colorado. In the case of copra, Mr. Speaker, it is not correct to say that a man can not raise copra when he has only 40 acres. A man on 40 acres of land can plant 1,600 coconut trees, and 1,600 coconut trees will yield him a square and clear profit of $5,000 a year. Is not this a good income for a farmer?

Mr. FOWLER. And on 40 acres?

Mr. QUEZON. And on 40 acres. Is it not better to have every man in the Philippines raising copra on 40 acres of land, thus being a self-supporting landowner and therefore a law-abiding and conservative man—because every landowner is a law-abiding and conservative man, for he is interested in his country and in his land—is it not better, Mr. Speaker, to have every man in the Philippines raising copra on 40 acres of land than to have very large sugar plantations owned by foreigners, with Filipinos as peons working on the plantations and in the factories?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUEZON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that you are bound to have your land on the seacoast in order to successfully raise coconut trees?

Mr. QUEZON. No, sir; you can raise coconuts most everywhere in the islands, on the seaside as well as in the interior, and you can get copra everywhere. Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I can discuss the subject of copra, because I come from a Province where the main crop is copra. I can inform the House that while in my Province of Tayabas we do not have very rich men, while there are not to be found men owning thousands and thousands of acres of land worked and farmed by hundreds and hundreds of unskillful laborers, we have, however, a great many well-to-do men, and every man owns his own land and raises his own coconut trees and makes his own copra; and if you would look at the statistics of the islands, you will find that there are few Provinces in the archipelago where the percentage of literacy is higher and the percentage of criminality is lower than in that Province. Certainly there is no Province in the Islands where the people at large are happier and more prosperous. On the other hand, in the Province of Negros, where there are large sugar plantations, while there are immensely wealthy men, yet the people in general are poor and ignorant. This is an object lesson that the Filipinos have in mind when they consider what should be done with their public domain. [Applause.]

The lands ought to be kept for the benefit of the majority of the people. It is the natural inheritance of the people and ought to be owned by the people. I am not at all in sympathy with the idea of making the Philippines mainly a sugar-producing country. I do not want to wreck the sugar industry——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will yield five minutes additional to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. QUEZON. I do not want to destroy the sugar industry already established in the islands; but it is unnecessary, it is injurious, to dedicate new lands of the public domain or the friar lands to sugar plantations. President Taft, when governor general of the Philippine Islands, testifying before the Committee on Insular Affairs, said that it is injurious for the people at large to make the sugar industry the main industry of the Philippine Islands. We do not need to open more land for sugar purposes. To begin with, Mr. Speaker, we can not send to this country more than 300,000 tons of sugar free of duty, and the lands producing sugar in the Philippines already in private ownership are capable of raising more than 300,000 tons of sugar. What would be the result in allowing these large American corporations to go to the islands and be dedicated to the raising of sugar? Having the money, they can raise more cane and produce sugar more cheaply with their modern methods than the Filipinos can. The result would be that they will be the only ones producing sugar, and they will be the only ones sending to the United States the 300,000 tons free of duty. It has been stated that Congress established free trade between the Philippines and the United States as a generous treatment to the Filipino people. If we permit the creation of these sugar plantations that the Sugar Trust is trying to create in the Philippines, the Sugar Trust will be the only one profited by the free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands, and in this manner the purpose of the Congress, which is to benefit the Filipinos, will be entirely defeated.

These are the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why we do not want to open our lands for exploitation. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been consumed?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

THE SUBSTITUTE ANALYZED.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The substitute which has just been read and which I shall not discuss in detail at this time, simply applies and carries into effect the findings and conclusions of the minority of the Insular Committee in the last Congress, which has now became the majority, in the investigation of land sales in the Philippines.

The minority found that the limitations upon the quantity of public lands which might be sold to an individual or corporation applied as well to the friar lands, and that all sales and leases of either public or friar lands to other than actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of the Philippine Islands, were forbidden by the organic law.

The committee also found that sales and leases of public and friar lands were being made to officials and employees of the insular government, including officials and employees of the land office itself.

The substitute I offer, instead of amending the friar-land sections of the organic law of the Philippines by constituting them a part of the public domain, and thus subjecting them to the limitations upon the sales of public lands, to wit, 40 acres to an individual and 2,500 acres to a corporation, and thus by implication admitting that the limitations do not now apply, and thus also by implication affirming sales heretofore made—instead of this, I say, my substitute affirms and declares the application of the limitations in the public-land sections to the friar-land sections, and declares all sales made in excess of these limitations to be null and void, and provides for the escheat of these excesses back to the Philippine Government, and forbids the sale or lease of any lands in the ownership or control of the Philippine Government to Philippine Government officials and employees.

This, in a paragraph, is the substance and effect of my substitute, and this is what the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs in the last Congress, which has now become the majority, in its report declared the law to be.

ONLY CITIZENS OF THE PHILIPPINES ENTITLED TO PUBLIC LANDS.

I shall insert at this point in my remarks the following striking paragraphs from the report of the minority of the Insular Committee in the friar-land investigation, declaring the opinion of the then minority, now the majority, that all sales and leases of public lands to any persons other than native Filipinos, and many such sales and leases have been made, were in violation of the organic law.

It is a conceded fact that, assuming to act under authority of section 15, the bureau of public lands of the department of the interior in the Philippine Islands has "granted or sold and conveyed" to persons who are not "citizens" of those islands certain "parts and portions of the public domain" acquired by the United States from Spain, other than timber or mineral lands. Thus we are confronted at the very threshold of this investigation with the consideration of a grave legal question.

In our opinion there is but one construction to be placed upon the words "actual occupants and settlers and other citizens." They are in themselves clear and free from all ambiguity or doubt. There can be no uncertainty, we think, as to their true intent and meaning. Citizens of the Philippine Islands, and only such citizens, can, under the very letter of the law, acquire under the provisions of section 15 any portion of the public lands ceded to the United States by the Kingdom of Spain.

MINERAL LANDS OPEN TO CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES.

I shall also insert at this point some of the more striking paragraphs setting forth the clear reasoning of the minority upon this proposition, and I direct particular attention to the fact that, as pointed out by the minority, while section 15 of the act of July 1, 1902, being the organic law of the Philippine Islands, expressly limited sales and leases of the public lands to "citizens of the islands," as citizenship is defined in section 4 of the act, section 21 relating to mineral lands, and section 53 relating to coal lands, throw such lands open to "occupation and purchase by citizens of the United States or of said islands," thus, in the language of the committee, drawing a clear distinction between agricultural and mineral lands, and determining beyond dispute the intention of Congress to reserve the agricultural lands of the islands as the heritage of the natives, while permitting others than natives to enter and develop the mineral resources of the archipelago:

MINERAL LANDS OPEN TO AMERICANS.

It seems to us to be perfectly clear from a careful consideration of the purposes and objects obviously intended to be attained by the framers of sections 14 and 15, as well as from the explicit and unambiguous language employed in section 15, defining the persons who could purchase lands, that the sale of such lands, made under that section, is confined to citizens of the islands.

All doubt which may by anybody be entertained as to the correctness of this conclusion must, we think, be removed by an examination of the provision which relates to the sale of mineral lands, contained in section 21, to which reference has heretofore been made. It is therein declared that the public lands in the Philippine Islands in which "valuable mineral deposits" are found shall be open to "occupation and purchase by citizens of the United States or of said islands." A clear distinction is here made between mineral lands and agricultural lands. Citizens of the United States are permitted under section 21 to share with those of the Philippines the benefits which may be derived from the ownership of public lands in which there are to be found "valuable mineral deposits."

The ownership of agricultural lands for manifest reasons is, by the express terms of section 15, confined exclusively to the citizens of the Philippine Islands in their individual and corporate capacities. It is difficult to understand how this eminently just and proper policy with reference to the disposition of the public domain could be more clearly set forth and expressed when sections 14 and 15 are read and considered together, as they should be.

In further support of our interpretation of the meaning of the words "actual occupants and settlers and other citizens," as they appear in section 15, it may be added that the right to enter vacant coal lands is by section 53 expressly confined to persons who are citizens of the United States or of the Philippine Islands, or who have "acquired the rights of a native of said islands under and by virtue of the treaty of Paris, or any association of persons severally qualified as above."

If, therefore, for the above reasons, our contention is sound that the right to acquire, by purchase, agricultural public lands is confined to citizens of the Philippine Islands, then it must follow that all sales made of such lands to citizens of the United States or other aliens are illegal, any enactments of the Philippine Government to the contrary notwithstanding.

PERMITTING PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE TO REMOVE LIMITATIONS A MISTAKE.

Mr. Speaker, it has been more than a year now since the investigation of the sale of the friar lands by Congress was concluded, and I have not since reviewed this matter or refreshed my recollection as to the facts. I believe, however, that, as the author of the investigation which stopped the sale of the friar lands in the Philippine Islands and resulted in this legislation, I ought to make some contribution to this discussion with reference to certain questions which I have heard mooted back and forth here and concerning which there seems to be a great deal of doubt, and upon which I possess some information that has not been imparted to the Members on this floor in the debate.

I want to say at the outset, however, Mr. Speaker, that I believe this House made a serious mistake this afternoon in adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and that mistake, Mr. Speaker, was made unknowingly. It will appear in the RECORD of these proceedings that an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to empower the Philippine Legislature to remove the limitations from the sale of the friar lands was overwhelmingly adopted; and, Mr. Speaker, so far as numbers are concerned, that amendment was overwhelmingly adopted, but so far as an understanding of the possible effect of that amendment was concerned there exists no majority at all; and it is my belief that if that amendment had been debated 30 minutes in this House, and the possible results of it disclosed, it would have been defeated instead of adopted by such a majority. And I have no regret, Mr. Speaker, that my name will appear among the small minority of this House who cast a vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Now, Mr. Speaker, why do I say this? In the discussion in this House last Wednesday I heard such questions asked as these:

Are not the Filipino people in favor of the sale of these lands in large tracts?

Is not the Filipino Assembly itself in favor of the sale of the friar lands in large tracts?

Did not the Filipino Assembly knowingly pass amendments to the friar land act removing the limitations and permitting sales in large quantities?

And there are gentlemen in this House who are under the impression at this moment that the Filipino Assembly did knowingly pass acts removing the limitations from the friar lands and permitting the sales that have already taken place. And I want to say to you, gentlemen, that the same representation was made to the Committee on Insular Affairs which investigated the sales of the friar lands. The heads of the Philippine Government came before that committee, and as one of their principal defenses set up the passage of these amendments to the friar land act by the Philippine Assembly, removing these limitations.

I am going to take the time to read a little colloquy that occurred before the Committee on Insular Affairs when Mr. QUEZON, the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, appeared before the committee, which will go to raise the presumption that the passage of those amendments by the Philippine Assembly was nothing short of a deliberate and premeditated fraud upon that body, that the members never knew they were passing such acts, that they never contemplated such a result, and when they learned of the construction that had been placed upon those acts they overwhelmingly and unanimously repudiated them.

Now, listen to this:

Mr. MARTIN. When did you first learn that such a sale as that of the San Jose estate could be made under the law?
Mr. QUEZON. I never learned of it.
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Martin, I do not think that is of any importance.

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to let the dead past bury its dead so far as that investigation is concerned. But it is rather significant that the third line I have read, and without premeditation upon my part, contains that injunction:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Martin, I do not think that is of any importance.

Such observations as that, Mr. Speaker, were only too plentiful during this alleged investigation. I do not believe a more one-sided, unequal contest was ever waged before a committee of Congress than the struggle made by myself in the investigation of the sale of these friar lands before the Insular Committee during the last Congress, when, even before the report of that committee had been signed, there appeared in the patent insides of the papers published in my district a résumé of the alleged facts, showing the great expense to which I had put the Government, and how the insular officials had been vindicated and I had been completely discredited as to the result of the investigation, and statements to that effect.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, I think the result of that investigation fully justified my efforts. Here is some justification of it from an address of the Hon. Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War, delivered at the popular banquet given by the Filipino reception committee at the Hotel de Francesco at Manila on the evening of November 2, 1910.

Secretary Dickinson said:

I will state generally as to the friar lands that at the time the contracts were made for other sales in larger amounts it was not supposed that there would be any objection. The main idea was to reduce the bonded debt as rapidly as possible. Now that opposition has been declared and the matter is under investigation in Congress, no sale of these lands in large quantities will be authorized until the situation is fully developed.

INVESTIGATION STOPPED SALES AND FRUSTRATED POLICY OF EXPLOITATION.

And, Mr. Speaker, there have been no large sales made from that day to this. And while I am not a man of any exaggerated idea of my own importance, and although I do not think I suffer from an undue amount of conceit, yet I do think there is nothing particularly discrediting in the fact that a new minority Member of this Congress, serving his first term, with the national administration arrayed against him, with the insular government arrayed against him, with the Insular Bureau in the War Department arrayed against him, and with the majority of the committee and of the House arrayed against him, was successful in stopping and defeating the exploitation of the Philippine Islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am willing, Mr. Speaker, to rest on what I have gotten out of it and to stand the discredit for what they say I did not get out of it.

PRESIDENT PROPOSES TO REVIVE POLICY.

I might properly add as another testimonial to the effectiveness of my campaign against the sale of the friar lands the following paragraph from the message of the President of the United States to the Congress on December 21, 1911, in which the President refers to the suspension of sales as the result of the friar-land investigation and warns Congress of his intention to resume the practice. The pending bill is the answer of the Insular Committee of the House to the message of the President, and it is notice to the exploiters that in purchasing these lands they are acquiring lawsuits instead of indefeasible titles. The paragraph from the President's message follows:

FRIARS' LANDS.

Pending an investigation by Congress at its last session, through one of its committees, into the disposition of the friars' lands, Secretary Dickinson directed that the friars' lands should not be sold in excess of the limits fixed for the public lands until Congress should pass upon the subject or should have concluded its investigation. This order has been an obstruction to the disposition of the lands, and I expect to direct the Secretary of War to return to the practice, under the opinion of the Attorney General, which will enable us to dispose of the lands much more promptly and to prepare a sinking fund with which to meet the $7,000,000 of bonds issued for the purchase of the lands. I have no doubt whatever that the Attorney General's construction was a proper one, and that it is in the interest of everyone that the land shall be promptly disposed of. The danger of creating a monopoly of ownership in lands under the statutes as construed is nothing. There are only two tracts of 60,000 acres each unimproved and in remote Provinces that are likely to be disposed of in bulk, and the rest of the lands are subject to the limitation that they shall be first offered to the present tenants and lessors, who hold them in small tracts.

MR. TAFT ON BOTH SIDES OF QUESTION.

The President in his message above quoted, it will be noticed, says that he has—no doubt whatever that the Attorney General's construction was a proper one.

Referring thus to the opinion of Attorney General Wickersham holding that the limitations upon the public lands in the Philippine Islands do not apply to the 400,000 acres acquired, or, rather taken away, from the religious orders.

The President, by one of those chameleonic changes for which he has become noted and which render it difficult, if not impossible, for the observer to determine at any given moment whether the President is going or coming, appears to have changed his mind about what is right and best for the Philippines, since he made the following statement in his special report on the Philippines to President Roosevelt on January 23, 1908:

Nor would I regard it as a beneficial result for the Philippine Islands to have the fields of those islands turned exclusively to the growth of sugar. The social conditions that this would bring about would not promise well for the political and industrial development of the people, because the cane-sugar industry makes a society in which there are wealthy landowners, holding very large estates with most valuable and expensive plants, and a large population of unskilled labor, with no small farming or middle class, tending to build up a conservative, self-respecting community from bottom to top.

In fairness to the President, however, it should be said that he maintained one and the same opinion with respect to this matter for a longer time than usual, as appears from the following statement made by him as civil governor of the Philippines before the House Committee on Insular Affairs on February 26, 1902, at which time the able and distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER, was chairman of that committee:

There is no desire on the part of the commission to have that kind of exploitation which will lead to the ownership of principalities in the islands by a corporation.

As conclusively showing the attitude of Mr. Taft and others with reference to the purpose of this Government to take over the friar lands and dispose of them to the natives, I take the liberty of quoting from my speech of June 13, 1910, Sixty-first Congress, second session, entitled "Exploiting the Philippines":

MR. TAFT BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE—THE FRIAR LANDS FOR THE FILIPINOS.

On February 7, 1902, Gov. Taft was before the Philippine Committee of the Senate, and in his testimony elucidated his ideas concerning the disposition of the friar lands, his testimony being in accord with the recommendations made by the Philippine Commission, as is illustrated by the following testimony from pages 178–179 of the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. In this connection, as we have got onto the matter of what is necessary for the commissioners to do, I wish to ask if you consider it very important for the general welfare and pacification of the islands that we should buy the friars' lands or make arrangements to give them back to the actual settlers at the earliest moment?
Gov. TAFT. Yes, sir; I do. I do not think there is any one thing which Congress has been invited to do in the report that is more immediately important than that. * * * Now, I think it may be said generally, as we said in our first report, that the title of the friars to those lands is, as a legal proposition, indisputable. If we can buy those lands and make them Government lands, and in that way separate in the minds of the tenants the relation of the friar to the land, and say to the tenants "we will sell you these lands on long payments, so that they will become yours," I believe we can satisfy the people and avoid the agrarian question which will arise when our Government is appealed to to put into possession of those lands the people who own them.

From the above it will be noted that Gov. Taft's understanding was that these friar lands were to be made "Government lands," presumably to be merged with and treated the same as other Government lands, which had been ceded to the United States by Spain.

On February 28 Gov. Taft was before the Insular Committee of the House and reiterated what he had said before the Senate committee. From page 223 of these hearings we read:

Mr. MADDOX. If I understand you, from what I have heard you say I gather that you think it would be cheaper for the United States to undertake to buy these lands than to restore them to their owners?
Gov. TAFT. I do; what I mean is, if we buy the lands we put the title of the Government between the friars and the subsequent disposition of the lands, and that then the Government may, by liberal terms to the tenants, enable the tenants, by payments strung over a long number of years, to become the owners of the land. The payments can be arranged so that not much more than the rent would nevertheless pay for the land. And in that way I think the insular government could probably be made whole or nearly so. I think the plan proposed by the commission as adopted in the bill introduced by Mr. COOPER contemplates the establishment of a sinking fund out of the proceeds of the sales of the lands to the tenants to meet the bonds.

Neither the reports of the Philippine Commission, the report of the Senate Committee on the Philippines, nor the testimony before the Senate and House committees contain a line to indicate that such an outcome as the sale of the San Jose estate was thought of or contemplated by any witness, officer, or public official.

Besides the members of the Senate Committee on the Philippines, those whose testimony or reports have been quoted to the exact contrary include Jacob Gould Schurman, George Dewey, and Charles Denby, of the Schurman-Worcester Philippine commission; William H. Taft, Luke E. Wright, Henry C. Ide, and Bernard Moses, of the Taft Philippine Commission, and ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War. It was on the printed utterances of these reputable and prominent men that Congress had to rely, and the opinion of the Attorney General that the intent was that these friar lands need not be held for and divided up amongst the Filipino people, but that they could be sold off in 55,000-acre tracts to Havemeyer and other syndicates, thereby giving them the opportunity to reestablish a system of absentee landlordism, which had been mainly responsible for the various insurrections that had occurred in the islands for the preceding 30 years, is tantamount to accusing some or all of these men of bad faith. Can it be presumed for one moment that Congress would have authorized the issue of over $7,000,000 worth of 4½ per cent bonds to purchase the friar lands if Congress at that time had before it the draft of the contract which the Philippine Government since has made with the Havemeyer syndicate and the opinion of the Attorney General confirming that contract?

Mr. Speaker, I think, if the truth were known, that Mr. Taft's present opinion as to what is the law in the Philippines touching limitations upon the sale of the friar lands is not of any more ancient date than his opinion as to the best policy to be pursued with regard to the genuine welfare of the Filipino people; and if Mr. Taft wants to take the position now that he has no doubt about the legality of the sale of Philippine lands in tracts of 50,000 acres, when for years as Secretary of War he kicked his toes about the committee rooms of Congress to secure an amendment to the organic law of the Philippines permitting the sale of as much as 10,000 acres, he has my permission to do so; and he will not be any more variable and inconsistent than he has been upon much more important matters directly and vitally affecting his own country.

FOOLING THE FILIPINOS.

But to return to my colloquy with Mr. QUEZON, touching the manner in which the Filipino Assembly was induced to repeal the limitations on the friar lands.

As I have said, I am willing to "let the dead past bury its dead" on that investigation. I think we ought to be willing to make allowance for congressional investigations, anyhow. [Laughter.] I think a man ought hardly to anticipate, when he starts anything like that, that he is getting into any kind of judicial proceeding [laughter], and if any Member is laboring under such a delusion and will call on me, I will give him a lot a valuable inside information on that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUEZON. It never occurred to me, Mr. MARTIN, personally, that the sale of the San Jose estate could be made under the present law. I am expressing my personal opinion.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. When did you first hear that it had been sold?

Mr. QUEZON. When you presented one of your resolutions.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You did not know that the San Jose estate had been sold until I discussed it on the floor of the House of Representatives?

Mr. QUEZON. No, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. On the 25th of March, 1910?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And you did not know that it could be done?

Mr. QUEZON. No, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Were you a member of the Philippine Assembly in 1908?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Were you the floor leader of the Nationalist Party?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

By the way, that was the majority party that controlled the Philippine Assembly, of which Mr. QUEZON was the floor leader at that time. The colloquy goes on:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Were you a member of the Philippine Assembly when the amendatory act of June 3, 1908, to the friar-land act was passed?

Mr. QUEZON. I was a member of the Philippine Assembly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. At that time?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just briefly, this amendatory act of June 3, 1908, referred to, was the act of the Philippine Assembly under which these sales were made. The construction of that amendatory act, which was passed unanimously by the Philippine Assembly, was the step that opened the doors to the sale of these lands in bulk.

And just while I am mentioning that opinion of the attorney general of the Philippine Islands and looking across the aisle at my friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], I recall that within six weeks, before I received the information that started me to work and resulted in this investigation—I think I am violating no confidence when I say I was walking across the plaza to the Capitol one day with the gentleman from Kansas when we got to discussing the opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, and he said to me, "MARTIN, if you ever get time you will find it a profitable and interesting study to look up the opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States. You will find that they invariably found the way out or the way in for the special interests to violate the laws of this country." [Applause.]

I do not say the gentleman put it exactly in those terms, but it has been the opinions of the Attorneys General that have made the hog holes through which the hogs found egress and ingress, as their interests might be, in the Federal statutes of the United States.

I did not dream at that time that within six weeks I would find an opinion by the Attorney General of the United States, as to which, if there can be any question about the legal proposition involved, there can certainly be no question with reference to the policy involved. In other words, even though it can be pleaded for the Attorney General—and this is all that can be pleaded for him—that Congress failed to effectuate its intent, and he found a technical defect in the law which he interpreted to the advantage of the people who wanted to violate the law, yet there can be no question whatever but that it was the policy of this Government, it was the purpose and the intent of this Government, to prevent the sale of Philippine lands in bulk, and such sale of these friar lands above all other lands, Mr. Speaker. If there were any lands the alienation of which was sought to be prevented—alienation in the manner in which this estate was sold—it was these particular lands which had been cultivated, which were largely near centers of civilization, rather than the great wild, outlying tracts where the Filipino natives, perhaps, were not fitted to go and did not have the means to go.

ABSURD TO CONTEND THAT FRIAR LANDS NOT PROTECTED.

Mr. Speaker, it is an absolute absurdity, in my judgment, to take the position at this day that these friar estates were forcibly taken over in large tracts from their original owners for the purpose of turning them back to other large owners. If there is any one fact connected with the history of these lands that stands out clearly, distinctly, and above dispute it is, as succinctly stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] to-day, that they were taken over for the purpose of being broken up into small holdings among the native people of the Philippine Islands. There is no question about that, and I believe, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] believes, that it was never in the mind of any man, it was never in the mind of the present President of the United States, it was never in the minds of the heads of the Insular Bureau, that such a thing as the sale of the San Jose estate, a tract of 56,000 acres, to one man was possible under the law.

Mr. Speaker, why should the President of the United States, when he was Secretary of War, have knocked at the door of Congress, session after session, to enlarge the limitations of the public-land act; why should the Philippine Commission in their annual reports have ever recommended the enlargement of the quantities of land that could be acquired, if they already had hundreds of thousands of acres of land there that could be disposed of in unlimited quantities? And, mind you, no such quantity as 56,000 acres was ever suggested. The maximum recommendation I have ever been able to find was 25,000 acres, and that only once. Most of the recommendations ran only to 10,000 or 15,000 acres. None of these estates were sold in bulk until the fall of 1908, four years after we acquired them. And yet gentlemen would put the Philippine Commission in the attitude of knocking at the doors of Congress for permission to sell 10,000 acres of land in one tract when they had three or four hundred thousand acres that they could sell in one tract, or in such quantities as they saw fit.

I say to such gentlemen I have searched this record as few other men have—I would not say as no other man has—and I defy any man on the floor of this House; I defy any man living and walking on the top of God's earth to point me to one utterance of record anywhere which indicates that the thought existed in the mind of any man that such a transaction as the sale of the San Jose estate could have been consummated in all the years prior to the time it was consummated. No such thing exists. I know there are gentlemen on the other side of this question who are able, well-posted men, who have studied the case exhaustively; but I do not feel any hesitancy in defying them to point out to me a single utterance to the contrary of what I have said. On the other hand, the record is full of facts and utterances going to show that everybody thought, up to the time the disclosure came here in Congress, that these lands could not be sold in bulk as they have been sold.

SENATE BILL AS INTRODUCED AND AS AMENDED.

Mr. Speaker, it is a singular fact that at this day there should be any controversy as to the plain intent of Congress to subject the friar lands to the limitations of the public-land act. In order to set at rest any controversy on this point, I submit the following results of my own investigation, in which I went to the document room of the United States Senate and there carefully read every copy and reprint of the Philippine Government bill from first to last, carefully noting the language of the act as first introduced in the Senate with reference to the friar lands, and in each succeeding print as the bill was acted upon in committee or in the Senate from time to time, down to and including its final passage by the Senate. I find that on January 7, 1902, Mr. LODGE introduced Senate bill 2295, it being the original of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902. At that time the public-land sections of the bill were 10 and 11, and the friar-land sections were 50 and 51. Section 51 read as follows:

That all lands acquired by virtue of this amendment shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the Government of the Philippine Islands and may be leased, let, sold, and conveyed by the Government of the Philippine Islands on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe—the limiting clause, which now appears in the friar-land sections, not then appearing.

On March 31, 1902, Mr. LODGE reported Senate bill 2295 with amendments. The friar-land sections were unaltered, except that section 50 was divided into two sections, and in the amended bill the three friar-land sections were numbered 64, 65, and 66.

On April 18, 1902, the bill was amended in Committee of the Whole as reported by Mr. LODGE, with amendments, on March 31, 1902, the friar-land sections therefore remaining the same as reported on March 31, 1902.

On May 28 and 29, 1902, the bill was considered and amended in Committee of the Whole. Mr. LODGE from the floor offered the limiting clauses at the places and as they now appear in sections 63 and 65 of the act of Congress. Just prior to that the Senate had adopted an amendment limiting single homestead entries to 40 acres in extent, or its equivalent in hectares. At all stages of the bill in the Senate the land sections were replete with drastic limitations, which therefore destroys the contention that at the time the limiting clauses were inserted in sections 63 and 65 there were no land limitations in the act.

LIMITING AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. LODGE.

I shall also insert at this point the amendments offered by Mr. LODGE, limiting single homestead entries to 40 acres and affixing the conditions and limitations of the entire act to the friar-land sections, just as the same appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, at pages 6082–6083:

Mr. LODGE. In section 11, on page 7, line 15, after the word "provided," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, on page 7, line 15, after the word "provided," it is proposed to insert:

"Provided, That a single homestead entry shall not exceed 40 acres in extent or its equivalent in hectares."

The amendment was agreed to.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LODGE. In section 64, on page 38, line 11, after the word "authorized," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 64, on page 38, line 11, after the word "authorized," it is proposed to insert the words "subject to the limitations and conditions prescribed in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 65, on page 38, line 21, after the word "parcels," I move to insert the words "and in such manner."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the next line, line 22, after the words "affect the," I move to insert the words "peace and," so as to read "affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 66, on page 40, line 4, after the word "prescribe," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 66, page 40, line 4, after the word "prescribe," it is proposed to insert "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 5 of the same section and on the same page, after the word "purchaser," I move to insert the words "of any parcel or portion of said lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Without respect to party, every Member of the Senate seemed to realize that desperate attempts would be made by unscrupulous exploiters to enslave the natives and use them as a means to wrest the wealth of the Philippines from the Filipino people. The fear was that the unscrupulous exploiters would enlist unscrupulous Philippine officials under their banner and that that combination would plunder the islands and their people. The Senate had had the bill under consideration for nearly five months and had strengthened it at every point where its Members could conceive it possible that a loophole might exist.

Notwithstanding the fact that exceptional care had been exercised in framing and amending the land sections of the bill, the Senate still was apprehensive that some day the government they were creating in the Philippines might be led to defy the will of Congress and trample the law under their feet, and so, on June 2, the Committee on the Philippines decided to eliminate all risk of such a denouement by so amending the bill as to prohibit the sale or lease of land to corporations and to forbid the organization of corporations to engage in agriculture, as will be seen from the following extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6151:

Mr. LODGE. At the top of page 11 I move to strike out the words: "Nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons," and to insert: "But no such land shall be leased, let, or demised to any corporation until a law regulating the disposition of the public lands shall have been enacted under the provisions of section 12."

Mr. HOAR. By whom is that law to be enacted?

Mr. LODGE. By the Philippine Commission, to be drafted and submitted to the President for his approval, and to Congress. It can not become a law without the approval of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any objection to putting in the amendment "and approved as herein provided"?

Mr. LODGE. "Enacted and approved." That is all it means, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. "As provided in section 12," I would say.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; "as provided in section 12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words:

"Nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons."

And insert:

"But no such land shall be leased, let, or demised to any corporation until a law regulating the disposition of the public lands shall have been enacted and approved as provided in section 12."

The amendment was agreed to.

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 2, 1902, pp. 6154–6155.]

Mr. LODGE. I send to the desk an amendment to section 79, on page 50, which I ask to have read.

The SECRETARY. In section 79, on page 50, line 9, after the word "created," it is proposed to strike out:

"And every corporation authorized to engage in agriculture shall, by its charter, be restricted to the ownership and control of not to exceed 5,000 acres of land; and this provision shall be held to prevent any corporation engaged in agriculture from being in anywise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

"No corporation shall hereafter be authorized to engage in agriculture until and unless provision shall be made therefor under the law regulating the disposition of the public lands enacted in accordance with the provisions of section 12."

Mr. BACON. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would explain exactly what is the change that is made in that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It makes it correspond with the change made in the section with regard to mining lands; that is, that there shall be no land granted to any corporation for agricultural purposes until land laws shall be drafted by the Philippine Commission and shall have been approved by the President of the United States and submitted to Congress.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand from that that it does away with the provision which contemplates the leasing of lands in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. LODGE. That has already been taken out.

Mr. BACON. I did not know that.

Mr. LODGE. This simply provides that there shall be no grant to any corporation at any time, unless provided by law.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand that the entire section which contemplates the leasing of 5,000 acres of land to corporations has been eliminated?

Mr. LODGE. That has been entirely eliminated and remitted to future decision under the land laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

In addition to the foregoing quotations from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senate debates are replete with statements showing that Senators feared the exploitation of the Philippines, no matter how strictly safeguarded, and were anxious to insert in the bill every practicable proviso to insure against such a policy.

And yet, at this late day, and after the worst fears have been realized, and after the policy of this Government touching its sacred trust in the Philippines has been violated, Members are heard to stand upon the floor and question whether it was ever the intent of Congress to safeguard the Philippines against exploitation.

THE LAW OF THE CASE.

Before dismissing the legal question I wish to refer briefly to the law of the case as argued by the law firm of Ralston, Siddons & Richardson, of Washington, which furnished the Committee on Insular Affairs in the friar-land investigation with an able brief dealing principally with the legal problems involved, including the proposition that all sales and leases of agricultural land by the insular government are void, as in violation of the organic act. I shall not go over the ground covered in the brief, but will succinctly recapitulate the main points raised by the attorneys.

Section 12 of the act of Congress provides that all the property and rights acquired by the treaty with Spain—which included the public lands—are hereby placed under the control of the Government of said islands, to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, except as provided in this act.

Section 13 provides for the classification of the agricultural lands and the making of rules and regulations for their disposition, subject to the provisions of the act, which rules and regulations shall not become effective until they receive the approval of the President and are submitted to and not disapproved or amended by Congress.

Section 15 provides for the granting or sale of the agricultural lands—to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands, not exceeding 16 hectares to any one person and * * * not more than 1,024 hectares to any corporation or association of persons.

Section 4 defines citizens of the Philippine Islands to be the inhabitants thereof who were Spanish subjects on April 11, 1899, and their descent.

It is pointed out that section 13 confined the disposition of public agricultural lands to citizens of the Philippine Islands as defined in section 4, and that therefore all sales and leases to others than Spanish inhabitant-subjects at the time of American occupation and their descent are invalid. This construction appears to be incontestable, and additional force, if any is needed, is given by the fact that section 21, dealing with the mineral lands, which are reserved from the operation of sections 13 and 15, are declared to be—free and open * * * to occupation and purchase by citizens of the United States or of said islands.

And the fact that section 53, which deals with the coal lands, gives the right of entry to—every person above the age of 21 years who is a citizen of the United States or of the Philippine Islands.

Passing now to new matter, the Philippine Commission proceeded to make rules and regulations governing the disposition of the public lands, the same being embodied in act No. 926, as amended by act No. 979, known as the public-land act, and approved October 7, 1903, which act was duly submitted to the President of the United States and by him approved and transmitted to the Congress, which did not disapprove the same, thereby giving the act force and effect as law in the Philippines.

Sections 1, 10, and 22 of this act provide, respectively, that—any citizen of the Philippine Islands or of the United States, or of any insular possession thereof, may, respectively, enter a homestead, purchase agricultural public lands, and lease agricultural public lands.

Under the foregoing provisions, which have been given by the Insular Government the force and effect of amendments to the act of Congress, many tracts of the public lands have been sold and leased to American citizens and corporations and American officials in the islands. I do not care to add to the able legal argument of the law firm which has briefed this proposition or to cite any authorities to sustain the contention that no act of the Philippine Commission or Assembly could operate to amend, alter, or repeal the act of Congress which is the organic law of the Philippines, but I want to call attention to the title of the public-land act, No. 926, as amended by No. 979, which reads as follows:

An act prescribing rules and regulations governing the homesteading, selling, and leasing of portions of the public domain of the Philippine Islands, prescribing terms and conditions to enable persons to perfect their titles to public lands in said islands, providing for the issuance of patents without compensation to certain native settlers upon the public lands, providing for the establishment of town sites and sale of lots therein, and providing for a hearing and decision by the court of land registration of all applications for the completion and confirmation of all imperfect and incomplete Spanish concessions and grants in said islands, as authorized by sections 13, 14, and 15 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes." (357.)

It will be noticed that the purpose of the act, as indicated by the title, is merely to prescribe—rules and regulations governing the homesteading, selling, and leasing of portions of the public domain in the Philippine Islands, etc.—

as authorized by sections 13, 14, and 15 of the act of Congress.

First, it was "an act prescribing rules and regulations," the terms used in section 13 of the act of Congress, and, second, "as authorized by section 13" and the other public-land sections of said act of Congress. While it is an axiom of statutory construction that anything in the statute repugnant to the Constitution is invalid, yet the title of the public-land act itself would indicate that the commission had only in mind the formulation of the necessary rules and regulations to carry out its constitutional powers and that these powers were to be exercised under authority and with the limitations in mind of the Constitution, which in this case was the act of Congress of July 1, 1902.

In this connection I wish to call attention to the following paragraph in the opinion rendered by Attorney General Wickersham to the Secretary of War on December 18, 1909, it being the friar-land opinion:

The public-land act was "general legislation" to carry out the provisions of sections 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16. The restrictions and limitations of these sections are specific and well defined. They apply to lands acquired by the treaty of peace with Spain. The citizens are limited in their rights to purchase to quantity and to compliance with the requirements of occupancy and cultivation. (14.)

When, therefore, in addition to the legislation to carry out the provisions of the sections enumerated, the Philippine Commission created entirely new and alien classes of persons entitled thereunder to acquire the public domain in the several ways provided, these unauthorized provisions, when put to the test, fall before the specific and well-defined restrictions and limitations of the organic act.

This limitation of Philippine public-land rights to the Filipinos justifies and explains the whole body of Philippine land laws and bottoms the Philippine policy of this Government upon the single proposition that the insular government is merely the trustee under limited and well-defined powers of the public agricultural lands of the islands for the use and benefit of the Filipinos. It brings out clearly the fundamental truth that it was the purpose of this Government that these lands should be inviolate to the Filipinos and that neither Americans nor any other citizenship could acquire them. It explains away all seeming inconsistencies in the agricultural land laws, all the provisions of which, whether dealing with individuals, associations or corporations, homesteads, sales or leases, fall readily and harmoniously into place. And it applies with equal if not greater force to the so-called friar lands than the lands acquired by treaty with Spain.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is making a very interesting speech. Does not the gentleman think it would be desirable to have a larger number of the Members present to hear his speech, and would not the gentleman be willing to have the House adjourn, and to conclude his speech on another day?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I hope this not the case of a Greek bearing gifts. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman in all candor——

Mr. MANN. It is quite evident that on a bill of this sort, to which the gentleman offers a substitute, there would be a roll call. It is quite evident also that there is no quorum of the House present. Considering the time of day and other things, I think it is quite evident that a quorum would not be secured for the rest of the evening. Would it not be better for the gentleman to make his speech just before a vote is taken?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will not the gentleman be so kind as to withhold these rather disturbing suggestions until I conclude my remarks? I will say to the gentleman candidly that I do not want to start into this subject again, and I do not want to discuss it much further.

Mr. MANN. I was thinking that, perhaps, the gentleman would rather make his speech on the same day that the vote was taken than the week previous. If the gentleman wishes to continue his remarks to-night I shall be glad to listen to him a little longer.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am not going to assume that my remarks will change any votes. I am making these remarks now largely as a matter of duty. I have a number of very warm friends in the Philippine Islands, particularly in official circles. The administration people over there, I know, regard me with feelings akin to affection, and they would be grievously disappointed if I were to let this debate go by without saying something and without putting something in the RECORD. So, to be candid with the gentleman from Illinois, I am really talking for them and for the RECORD, and not for the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I was hoping that the gentleman would continue and reveal to the House why it was that Mr. QUEZON did not know that this measure that permitted the sale of the friar lands passed the Filipino Legislature when it did. Does the gentleman expect to do that?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; and it is not a matter that will reflect on the gentleman from the Philippine Islands at all.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, no; I did not suppose that it would.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should be glad to do that. Now, I will continue the colloquy that I have been reading. I left off where Mr. QUEZON said that he was floor leader of the majority party of the Philippine Legislature when it passed the amendatory act which authorized the sale of this estate in bulk. I will read:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to read you this statement made by Mr. Worcester, on page 689 of the record, in speaking of the act of June 3, 1908, under which these sales have been made.

I want to say that Mr. Worcester is the secretary of the interior of the Philippine Islands. He is at the head of the land department. He is a strong, able man. I have never had the pleasure of meeting the Governor of the Philippine Islands, but I would not be disappointed if, after meeting him, I found the dominating mind, the controlling personality in the Philippine Commission, was Mr. Worcester, the secretary. I believe the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] will agree with me on that proposition.

PHILIPPINE ASSEMBLY DID NOT INTEND TO REPEAL LIMITATION.

Now, I will read to Members in this House the statement which the secretary made to the Committee on Insular Affairs touching the manner in which these amendments were passed by the Filipino Assembly. Mr. Worcester, speaking of the act of June 3, 1908, said:

It was prepared by Capt. Sleeper and subsequently informally communicated by me to the joint committee of the Philippine Legislature, reason for that action being that its passage through the assembly might be expedited through having some one there who would understand just what its purpose was. The act could not be formally brought before the joint committee for official action, as it had not been submitted to them by the president of either house. I did, however, read it to them, call their attention to its provisions and its purpose, and requested them to do what they could to see that it went through when it came up in the assembly. As far as I remember, I took no other special action in regard to that act. It should, however, be stated that nearly a year later another amendatory act was passed which reenacted the language of the first amendatory act as far as the removal of the restrictions is concerned. That later act, it will be noted, was passed after the Philippine people had had abundant opportunity to realize what we had done by our first amendatory act. It originated in the Philippine Assembly, and first came to Capt. Sleeper and myself after its passage there, so far as I remember, without any previous knowledge of its existence either on the part of the director of lands or of myself. It is thus shown clearly that after the people at large and the lower house had had abundant opportunity to realize the purpose of the first amendatory act, through the fact that that purpose had been carried into effect, the lower house voluntarily reaffirmed the action taken by reenacting the original provision.

I read this to Mr. QUEZON in the committee.

Mr. COOPER. Is that the statement of Mr. Worcester?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is the statement of Mr. Worcester. Then I said to Mr. QUEZON, "Do you wish to make any statement with reference to Mr. Worcester's statement?"

Mr. QUEZON said:

I was not in Manila when the first bill was introduced, and I do not know how it passed. I believe, however, from the action of the assembly, of which I spoke a moment ago, in passing a bill which imposes upon the friar lands the limitations of the public lands, that the assembly did not realize the effect of the act of June 3, 1908, when they passed it.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from Colorado, I wish to inform the House how this act passed the assembly, its members not believing or knowing that it was authorizing the sale of the friar lands in large tracts.

The sale and disposition of the friar lands was provided for in the act enacted by the Philippine Commission before the creation of the assembly. Later on the Philippine Commission and the assembly tried to amend that act in certain details regarding the publicity that should be given to the sale of these lands. In the original act it was provided that in the case of unoccupied lands the director of the bureau of lands will follow the provisions of section 15 of the organic act.

The amendatory act passed by the Philippine Legislature left out this sentence. In this amendatory act it was not said that the director of public lands had to bind himself by section 15 of the organic act.

But the assembly understood, and I am sure the director of lands also understood, that it was not necessary to keep this provision in the law, because the act of Congress was, anyhow, binding upon the director of public lands, and it was unnecessary for the Philippine Legislature to say so.

Far it was from the minds of the assemblymen that the insular government, being in charge of the execution of the laws of Congress, would take advantage of the silence of the Philippine Legislature to defeat the will of Congress clearly expressed in the organic act. One word more. It is admitted that as soon as the Filipino people learned that an immense estate was sold to Mr. Poole, from everywhere in the Philippines came protests against the supposed law which authorized that sale; and, Mr. Speaker, it bespeaks the ability of that assembly and its faithfulness in complying with the wishes of the people, the fact that it proceeded immediately to amend the act in accord with the wishes of its constituents.

Mr. JONES. And the commission refused to accept it.

Mr. QUEZON. And the commission refused to accept.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for one question? The gentleman was not present and was not in Manila at the time that act was passed?

Mr. QUEZON. I said I was not, and I am giving an explanation of how, in leaving those few words out, the commission and attorney general used it as an argument to say that bill must be the lands act of the Philippines.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely asked the question to negative the inference drawn by some gentlemen from the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] to the effect that the gentleman did not understand the effect of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked that question. Here was certainly a very important piece of legislation. That will hardly be gainsaid at this time; and yet here is a pretense that because the gentleman, Mr. QUEZON, the floor leader, was not present the day this was passed, that is sufficient to account for his lack of knowledge concerning it. Is that all the accountability the floor leader has to legislation affecting the very life of his people and their welfare? Gentlemen will understand that his physical presence there would have nothing to do with his knowledge of the pendency and discussion and passage of such an important piece of legislation as this.

So, first, we have the testimony of the floor leader, a man who should and would have knowledge of such important legislation, whether he was there or not, if anybody had knowledge of it; and the very fact that the floor leader of that people, a man brilliant and able and well informed as the Commissioner from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON], did not know at that time, and did not know for months afterwards, that such a sale could be made, I think ought to be conclusive if anything in the world would be.

But there is further evidence than that, Mr. Speaker. There is somewhere in the hearings a resolution of the Philippine Assembly protesting against these sales, and this resolution was passed unanimously—not a dissenting vote—by the Philippine native assembly, elected by the people of the islands:

Resolution declaring the sale in large and unlimited tracts of land belonging to the so-called friar estate to be contrary to the will, the sentiment, and the interest of the Philippine people.

I say to you gentlemen on the other side of this question that these resolutions are in the record.

PROTEST OF PHILIPPINE ASSEMBLY.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

[Assembly resolution No. 14, Second Philippine Legislature, first session.]

Resolution declaring the sale in large and unlimited tracts of land belonging to the so-called friar estates to be contrary to the will, the sentiments, and the interests of the Philippine people.

Whereas it is the general desire of the Philippine people to secure, now and in future, the means to preserve peace and bring happiness to the inhabitants of this country through a quiet, peaceful, and productive exploitation of its soil;

Whereas the Philippine people consider that the acquisition of unlimited tracts of land by large foreign associations or corporations, for the purpose of exploiting them for their own benefit, might disturb that peace and destroy that happiness desired with such fervor, because it believes that such corporations would establish a ruinous competition with the Philippine capitalists and producers, as thanks to their powerful resources they would acquire predominance in the field of exploitation of the native energies, and that, once established in the country, said corporations would constitute a great obstacle to the political emancipation desired by the Philippine people in general;

Whereas the transfer to the corporations mentioned of the land purchased from the friars might result in a renewal in this country of the political-social disturbances of the past caused by the exploitation of the same estates by the religious corporations, this circumstance having constituted, as everybody knows, one of the principal causes of the last Philippine revolution;

Whereas the rule of the corporation or the concentration of the great agricultural interests in the hands of corporations has produced and is producing in the various countries, first in England, then in Germany, and subsequently in the United States, social commotions that are always a menace to the safety and welfare of a nation;

Whereas the Philippine Republic, ever to be remembered by us all, endeavored during the brief period of its existence to prevent this fearful social peril by providing, in the additional article of its constitution, for the transfer of the property and buildings of the religious corporations to the national Philippine Government;

Whereas the present government of occupation has purchased the friar estates, not for the purpose of making them a new source of disturbances and protests, but in order to contribute to the peace and welfare of the Philippine people, according to the provisions of section 64 of the organic law of the Philippine Islands;

Whereas the Philippine Assembly deems it a duty not to be evaded, and at the same time a right derived from the essential principles of a democratic régime, to cause the voice of the people represented by it to be heard in the official spheres of the Philippine administration and of the Government of the sovereign country: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Philippine Assembly do, and hereby does, declare, without entering upon a discussion of the legality or illegality of the matter, that the sale in large and unlimited tracts of the so-called "friar estates" to great corporations for their exploitation is contrary to the will, the sentiments, and the interests of the Philippine people; and furtber, that the assembly do, and hereby does, state its desire that the sale of said estates to persons other than those who were tenants of the same prior to June 3, 1908, and of all other property acquired by the Government subsequent to the treaty of Paris be made subject to the limitations contained in section 15 of the organic act of the Philippine Islands relative to the public lands acquired by the United States in the Philippine Islands under the treaty of peace with Spain; and

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Congress of the United States, the Philippine Commission, and the honorable the Secretary of War.

Adopted December 6, 1910.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the house on December 6, 1910.

RAMÓN DIOKNO,
Secretary Philippine Assembly.

But there is further evidence in the record.

Mr. COOPER. And that is the same assembly which they claim——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The same assembly which they claim amended the law so as to permit of these sales.

Mr. COOPER. Could there be any plainer demonstration that they did not understand the import of that law?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think not; and I want to add this——

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much time elapsed between those two amendments?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. A year. I want to add this, that when I undertook to present this resolution to the Committee on Insular Affairs I was met with the question as to whether or not I thought it could affect the legality of the action of the assembly; and I said, why, certainly not. I will admit that no resolution of protest now could be heard for the purpose of determining that question, but I considered it not only material but absolutely conclusive as to the attitude of the assembly upon the policy involved in this legislation.

But it developed last Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from the Philippines had the floor, that since this investigation by the Committee on Insular Affairs in the last Congress the lower house of the Philippine Legislature passed an act prohibiting these sales of the friar lands in large tracts. I do not know exactly the scope of the act, whether it invalidated the sales that had already been made; I do not know its terms; but at any rate it was an act to prevent the sale of the friar lands in large tracts and applied the restrictions of the public lands to the friar lands. Am I right about that?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It passed the assembly unanimously and was rejected. By whom? Rejected by the council appointed by the President, consisting of the Philippine Commissioners.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSIONERS IN CONGRESS.

Several times during the debate I have heard the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] questioned with regard to the attitude of his colleague and with a view to ascertaining whether or not Mr. QUEZON'S colleague was in harmony with Mr. QUEZON'S position with reference to land limitations and sales in the Philippines, the obvious object of these questions, coming as they do from gentlemen upon the other side of the question, being to weaken the position of Mr. QUEZON by showing, inferentially at least, that Mr. QUEZON is not supported by his colleague in his efforts in behalf of this bill and against the sale of the friar lands. One thing all must say for Mr. QUEZON, and that is, he is here to speak for himself and that he has spoken so ably and so eloquently as to win the admiration and applause of all Members, regardless of their attitude upon this bill.

But I will go a step further and I will say that because of Mr. QUEZON'S attitude in the Sixty-first Congress in favor of the investigation of the sale of the friar lands, which investigation was ordered just at the close of the session in June, 1910, Mr. QUEZON was unanimously reelected by the Philippine Assembly as a Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, while his colleague, because of his failure to oppose the sale of the friar lands, was unanimously rejected by the assembly. The commission, however, which disapproves Mr. QUEZON and approves his colleague, refused to concur in the reelection of the former without the reelection of the latter, and as a consequence a vacancy was threatened in both Commissionerships from the Philippine Islands. This condition was met in the last session of the Sixty-first Congress by the passage of an act extending the terms of office of both Commissioners until such time as the Philippine Legislature, consisting of the assembly elected by the people and the commission appointed by the President of the United States, shall elect their successors.

The attitude of the Philippine Assembly toward their congressional delegates is only another side light thrown clearly upon the position of the representative Filipino body upon the question at issue.

That Mr. QUEZON has been strongly and consistently against this policy of exploitation from the beginning is clearly shown by the following colloquy on the floor of the House, which I take the liberty of reproducing from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 21, 1910, at page 6823:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman how his people will view the new movement of American capital into the Philippine Islands to buy up and develop large tracts of land there?

Mr. QUEZON. My people are informed of the policy of the United States Government upon this question, which is not to sell more than 1,024 hectares of land to any corporation, and they have from the very beginning applauded this policy.

In fact, the Filipinos have considered the provision of the "organic act" limiting the area of land acquirable by corporations to 1,024 hectares as the best proof that the Philippines have not been occupied by Americans for exploitation purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And they would not applaud any departure from that policy then?

Mr. QUEZON. No, indeed.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But supposing the land is held in large tracts in the names of agents of exploiting foreign corporations or interests?

Mr. QUEZON. The result would be the same; it would be just as objectionable.

Mr. Chairman, I shall avail myself of the opportunity afforded to me by the questions of the gentleman from Colorado to make clear the attitude of the Filipinos regarding the land question. We are not anticapitalists, neither are we antiforeigners. We do not want to encircle the islands with some sort of a "China wall"; we welcome the coming in of capital to stimulate commerce and develop industry. We receive with open arms every foreigner who visits or lives with us. The hospitality of the Filipinos is proverbial. But we are against the ownership of large tracts of land, either by corporations or by individuals, for it is incompatible with the real prosperity of the natives. You can not have, Mr. Chairman, a solid, conservative, contented, law-abiding community unless the plain people, as your beloved Lincoln affectionately called them, have and cultivate their own land. Moreover, large agricultural enterprises in the Philippines will, sooner or later, bring about Chinese or other oriental immigration into the islands, which we are fighting against. For these reasons I, on behalf of my people as well as of myself, respectfully ask Congress to strictly adhere to its policy concerning this matter, as it has been defined in the "organic act."

THE JOKER—AND WHY.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, in the face of such a record as this the official heads of the insular government come all the way to Washington and pretend to tell the committee of Congress that the Philippine people, through their assembly, assented to these sales and to this policy, and knowingly have passed laws intended to repeal the limitations and permit the sales of these lands in any quantity whatsoever.

Now, Mr. Speaker, do you see why I say the House of Representatives made a mistake this afternoon in accepting the little joker of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] authorizing the Philippine Legislature to turn around and do once more what they have already been hoodwinked into doing? I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that until such time as the American Government has determined what its final attitude toward the Philippines is to be, I am not in favor of permitting even the Philippine Legislature to dispose of those lands in this way. [Applause.]

Why, gentlemen, there is no need of passing this bill with the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania incorporated in it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania well knows that the native assembly in the Philippines is unanimously opposed to the sale of these lands. He knows that. He knows about these protests by the assembly. He knows about the attempted passage of the act, which has been blocked by the commission. Why, then, does he press his "little amendment"? Oh, it is a small matter! It is not very material! Let us put it in now, for the sake of peace, and go ahead! Why does he press an amendment to authorize the Philippine Assembly to do something that he knows it is unanimously opposed to doing? I will tell you. It is because the Philippine Assembly will do once more just as it has done once before, namely, pass some alleged harmless amendment to these land laws, and then some accommodating attorney general will construe that amendment as it is wanted to be construed. Now, that is all there is to it. And that is the reason, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress should safeguard those lands even by withholding from those people the power to be taken advantage of and to dispose of them until such time as we have determined whether or not we propose to retain those islands.

EXPLOITERS KNOW WHAT THEY WANT.

I want to say something in behalf of the gentlemen who want these land limitations abolished and who want other things done. As a whole, we seem to be drifting with reference to the Philippines. There seems to have been much uncertainty as to what ought to be done with them and when it ought to be done. But there are certain gentlemen——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In just a moment. But there are certain interests, there are certain people—it does not matter whether they are in Congress, or down here in the departments, or over in Manila, or elsewhere—whenever they do anything it is toward a certain and definite end, and that end is the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands by the United States. It does not make any difference whether it is a free-trade bill or a bill permitting them to increase their bonded indebtedness from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000, as is now proposed, or a bill to remove the land limitations and allow them to be acquired by foreign interests; it does not matter what it is—it always points in one and the same direction, and that is the creation of ties between the United States and the Philippines which it will be difficult, if not impossible, to sever in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. Has the gentleman read the bill providing for Philippine independence?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit me for one minute——

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to withhold for one minute. I thought the gentleman wanted an hour.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from Colorado mean that that bill is not in good faith?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not believe that. I believe that bill is in good faith, and I am in good faith in favor of that bill.

Mr. GARRETT. I thought the gentleman's remarks might be misconstrued.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I beg to assure the gentleman I have not the slightest thought of that character.

THE LAW IS CLEAR AND ITS PURPOSE PLAIN.

The whole subject of both the law and policy of our Government touching the land of the Philippines may be most appropriately dismissed with the concluding paragraph of the minority report of the friar-land investigation by the Bureau of Insular Affairs in the Sixty-first Congress, and I respectfully submit this paragraph to the consideration of all persons who are interested in the conservation of the islands for the inhabitants thereof and not for their exploitation by aliens:

> In conclusion, we wish to emphasize what has hereinbefore been said in respect to the policy which has of late obtained in the Philippine Islands in regard to the sale and other disposition of the vast public domain of those islands, whether these lands be known as public lands or friar lands. They are the property of the people of the Philippines, and should be administered and disposed of solely in their interest and for their benefit. They are thoroughly united in their opposition to the policy of exploitation to which the bureau of public lands seems to be so resolutely committed and which is being pursued with utter disregard of the opinions and wishes of those most interested. That the officials whose duty and responsibility it is to administer the public-land laws have, at least until recently, entertained doubts as to the legality of the policy pursued by them is evident from the fact that they have so frequently sought and obtained legal opinions with which to fortify their position. In our opinion these doubts should have been resolved in the interest of the citizens of the islands rather than in that of the aliens, whose purpose it was to exploit the islands. To our minds, the law governing the disposition of these lands is so clear that there is no need for any resort to the courts in respect to it. If the policy laid down in the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, is a narrow and mistaken one, then Congress should change it. It alone is clothed with the power to do so.

WHAT IS WANTED IN THE PHILIPPINES.

What is wanted in the Philippines is not more law, but the enforcement of existing law. This fact was clearly demonstrated in the investigation of the friar-land sales. The story, taken from the hearings, relating to the sale of the San Jose estate to Mr. E. L. Poole, the agent of Horace Havemeyer, Charles H. Senff, and Charles J. Welch; to the Mindoro Development Co. of New Jersey, organized by the last-named gentlemen, to operate a sugar plantation upon said estate; and to the three subsidiary companies organized by Mr. Welch, through his immediate family in California, to be operated in conjunction with the San Jose estate and the Mindoro Development Co., furnishes a study in legal and corporate trickery upon the one hand and official negligence and incompetence on the other hand, out of which could be rewritten the cause and the philosophy of the greater part of the failures of the law to protect the public interests in the United States since the beginning of the era of the ascendency of wealth in the affairs of this country.

The story as told in the hearings is worth reading. It contains a dash of humor. The main factor in the little play resorted to many of the funny dodges and tricks known to the law to violate its letter while observing its spirit. He worked in his wife and his wife's folks and their lawyers and clerks and hired men, in ignorance, it now appears, of the utter complacency of the officials with whom he would have to deal. In other words, he labored under the delusion that he must appear to comply with the law.

"Their money was good," said Secretary Worcester, speaking of the principals behind Agent Poole. These principals had already had their attention called by the Bureau of Insular Affairs to the utter failure of even more severe restrictions to protect Porto Rico from the Sugar Trust. Land holdings in Porto Rico had been limited to 500 acres instead of 2,500, but the Sugar Trust had gone in there and wiped out the small sugar planter and the small sugar maker and had converted Porto Rico into one huge sugar plantation. "Go ahead," said the Insular Bureau, in effect. "Never mind the law or the restrictions or the limitations in the Philippines. You see what the result has been in Porto Rico." And they went ahead. And they found officials, as the story will show, a story made up of quotations from the testimony of these officials at the hearings, who were willing to take their money and ask no questions and write out agreements in violation of the law and permit failure to comply with the law.

WHAT THE STORY WILL SHOW.

But for fear you have not time to read the story, let me summarize briefly what the story will show:

First. That the insular government entered into an agreement with E. L. Poole to convey to him, or his individual or corporate nominees, a tract of 56,000 acres of land, although the organic law forbids any corporation to own or hold more than 2,500 acres of land; that no effort was made to ascertain whom or what Poole represented, and that this sale was reported officially and repeatedly as a sale to Poole for himself and not as agent for any other person.

Second. That the principals for whom Poole acted organized the Mindoro Development Co., a corporation with unlimited powers, the incorporators of which were dummies, and the object of which was to operate not only this entire tract of 56,000 acres of land as a sugar plantation, but the lands of subsidiary corporations, the president of the corporation being Mr. Welch, the managing factor among the owners of the San Jose estate, and whose relatives composed the subsidiary corporations.

Third. That Mr. Welch, through his father's estate and through his wife, brother, and brother-in-law and their partners, clerks, and employees, organized into three corporations, was permitted to file applications for and purchase nearly 7,500 acres of public land, the maximum permitted by law, at 2,500 acres per company, these tracts being contiguous to each other and lying between the San Jose estate and Mangarin Bay, the nearest port, and through which lands it was desired to run a railroad from the San Jose estate to the port; that Mr. Welch and his relatives were permitted to purchase these lands without filing the affidavits required by section 75 of the organic law of the Philippine Islands, showing that stockholders in any one of the corporations were in no wise interested in any other such corporation; and that the relations between these different concerns were such that Mr. Poole, the manager of the San Jose estate, who was also the manager of the three California corporations, proceeded under cable orders from Mr. Welch to build a railway across the lands of the three California corporations without the consent of the three owning corporations.

Fourth. That the identity and the unity of all these interests and concerns were rendered so complete in the investigation as to lead Mr. Welch finally to say:

> We are practically the same. There is no getting away from that. We are quite a family party.

THE SAN JOSE ESTATE.

One of the principal transactions giving rise to the investigation in the last Congress was the sale of the San Jose estate of 56,000 acres, situated in the island of Mindoro, to one Edward L. Poole. The certificate of sale was executed at Manila on November 23, 1909. This sale was stated by the insular officials at Manila and by the Insular Bureau at Washington as made to an individual.

It was stated by Capt. Sleeper, director of lands, that—

> No person is known to have purchased any friar lands as agent or factor for any other person. It is said that Mr. Edward L. Poole, who purchased the San Jose estate, Mindoro, represents Mr. Welch, but purchase was made in his own name.

It appears, however, that the certificate of sale provided for the conveyance of the land to the ostensible purchaser, E. L. Poole, "or his nominees," thereby plainly putting the Government upon notice that Poole was not acting for himself but in a representative capacity. It further appears from the testimony of Director Sleeper that between December 6 and 10, 1909, he discovered that Mr. Poole represented a corporation known as the Mindoro Development Co., of New Jersey. This fact was disclosed to Director Sleeper at a time when he had under consideration the execution of new or amended certificates of sale, whereby the estate would be cut into two large tracts and a smaller tract, which was to be deeded directly to the corporation for mill site, railroad headquarters, and other purposes incident to the operation of a large sugar plant and plantation. Director Sleeper, when asked why he had inserted the proviso "or his nominees," replied that it was probably done at the request of the attorney for the purchaser, Mr. E. B. Bruce, a lawyer of Manila. The director admits that no effort whatever was made to ascertain who or what Mr. Poole's prospective nominees might be. Indeed, both Director Sleeper and Secretary Worcester admitted that no inquiry whatever was prosecuted to ascertain the identity or character, whether individual or corporate, of Mr. Poole's associates.

On January 4, 1910, sale certificate No. 1 was canceled and in lieu thereof there was issued sale certificates Nos. 2 and 3, providing for the conveyance of the land to Poole "or his corporate or individual nominees."

In a report prepared by Secretary Worcester at Manila on August 29, 1910, relative to the charges against the conduct of the affairs of the department of the interior and the bureau of public lands, and at page 45 of said report the secretary sets out in full sale certificate No. 1, which instrument, be it remembered, had been canceled on January 4 preceding. On page 47 is made a brief mention of the cancellation of No. 1 and the execution of Nos. 2 and 3, but the new certificates themselves do not appear, nor anything to indicate the change that had been made providing for the execution of deeds to Mr. Poole's corporate nominees. When Secretary Worcester and Director Sleeper were examined before the committee sale certificate No. 1 was fully gone into and the witnesses were questioned at some length about the insertion of the proviso "or his nominees." When it developed from Director Sleeper's testimony that the certificate had been canceled and new certificates issued, he, upon request, furnished copies of the new certificates to the clerk of the committee and they were inserted in the printed hearings, where they appear, together with No. 1, at pages 251, 252, and 255, from which it would appear that they had been offered and were before the committee simultaneously. This, however, as I say, is not the case, only No. 1 at that stage of the hearings having been before the committee, as it appeared in the Secretary's report referred to. When asked on cross-examination as to why, when he was being examined about sale certificate No. 1, he had not called the attention of the committee to the character of the proviso in sale certificates Nos. 2 and 3, Mr. Worcester answered:

> I have always taken it for granted that you (MARTIN) could be depended on to bring out any points of that sort.

Mr. Worcester professed to the committee at all times exceeding frankness and a desire to fully and truthfully disclose every fact within his knowledge. This statement he iterated and reiterated, and without comment I submit the foregoing reply to my question as to why he had not disclosed this proviso.

Mr. Worcester, in his report already referred to, said:

> Had the Government sold the estate, as charged, to the Mindoro Development Co. of New Jersey, the Havemeyer Exploiting Co., or to any other corporation, its action might properly be subject to the severest criticism.

When confronted with the fact that he had approved the execution of instruments to convey the estate to Poole's corporate nominees, Mr. Worcester said that—> in carrying out all these agreements which we make, we are subject to the laws of the land. I do not hold that under that agreement Mr. Poole could compel me to make an illegal transfer of land or could compel me to transfer land to a corporation in excess of that which a corporation was entitled to hold.

While fully agreeing with the truth of the foregoing statements, the question yet remains, Why did the director of public lands execute and the secretary approve a contract which is upon its face an admitted violation of the law? If he could not convey the estate to Poole's corporate nominees, why enter into a solemn agreement in writing so to do? And why had every official concerned protested that the sale had been made to an individual when it was known to them that Mr. Poole was merely the agent of both associate and corporate nominees?

THE PURCHASERS WIDE AWAKE.

While the insular officers may not have known or cared with whom they were dealing, or what character of transaction they were sanctioning, the other parties seem to have known clearly what they wanted and took every safeguard devisable by skilled lawyers to secure it.

On March 9, 1910, 60 days after closing the San Jose deal, Mr. Edward L. Poole executed a declaration of trust, stating specifically that—> in purchasing the said estate (he) was acting as the agent for Horace Havemeyer, Charles J. Welch, and Charles H. Senff, who furnished him the entire amount paid by him for said property.

Also declaring that he held the property in trust for the benefit of these persons and had no interest in the same other than the bare legal title, and agreeing—> to convey the said property to such persons, firms, or corporations as the said persons shall from time to time direct, free and discharged from any claim or liability to him by reason of any act whatsoever.

If the director of lands deemed it necessary to say, as he did in his report to Secretary of War Dickinson on May 5, 1910 (H. Doc. No. 1071, p. 107):

> That no person was known to have purchased any friar lands as agent or factor for any other person, and that Mr. Poole purchased the San Jose estate in his own name—he must have felt like a very much deceived individual when Mr. Poole produced this declaration of trust before the Committee on Insular Affairs, and Secretary Worcester must have felt likewise.

OFFICIAL INDIFFERENCE.

Some doubt, however, naturally arises as to their feelings in this particular from the following statements made by them before the committee:

> Mr. GARRETT. Capt. Sleeper, was any effort made to ascertain who the "company" was of Welch & Co.?
> Mr. SLEEPER. By me?
> Mr. GARRETT. Yes, sir.
> Mr. SLEEPER. No, sir.
> Mr. GARRETT. Or anybody else?
> Mr. SLEEPER. No, sir.
> Mr. CRUMPACKER. Was any inquiry made?
> Mr. WORCESTER. I made no inquiry, sir. I took it for granted that they were men with capital who had the price to pay for the land which they desired to get. Their money was good.

The following colloquy will also throw some light on their state of mind and relieve any impression of shock by reason of the disclosure that Poole was merely the agent of Havemeyer, Welch, and Senff and the Mindoro Development Co.

> Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The officials did not make any very strenuous efforts to pry into your private affairs, did they?
> Mr. POOLE. Mr. Martin, why should they? I came over there to buy land.
> Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.
> Mr. POOLE. They had a white elephant on their hands and they very gladly sold it.
> Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And they did not make any inquiries as to who it was being unloaded on as long as it was being unloaded and they were getting the money?
> Mr. POOLE. Getting the money and stopping that enormous sum of interest eating up every year.

It should always be borne in mind that Mr. Poole represented an interest thought to be against the letter and known to be against the spirit of the law, and indisputably against the insular policy of this Government.

Mr. Taft, in a special report to President Roosevelt, January 23, 1908, already quoted, said:

> Nor would I regard it as a beneficial result for the Philippine Islands to have the fields of those islands turned exclusively to the growth of sugar. The social conditions that this would bring about would not promise well for the political and industrial development of the people, because the cane-sugar industry makes a society in which there are wealthy landowners, holding very large estates with most valuable and expensive plants and a large population of unskilled labor, with no small farming or middle class tending to build up a conservative self-respecting community from bottom to top.

Yet here were sugar interests seeking to acquire a tract of 55,000 acres of land, when the largest holding ever recommended, even by such an ardent exploiter as Mr. Worcester, is 25,000 acres, and representing a corporation with chartered powers which would enable it to set up an imperium in imperio and establish on a huge scale the very conditions against which Mr. Taft specifically inveighed. That such a result could not be accomplished without the connivance or the culpable negligence of the insular officials ought to go without saying.

THE MINDORO DEVELOPMENT CO.

It is difficult in arranging the testimony adduced at the hearings to distinguish between the San Jose estate, managed by Poole for Havemeyer, Welch & Senff, and the Mindoro Development Co., managed by Poole for Havemeyer, Welch & Senff, and to treat them separately. This difficulty is increased by Mr. Welch when he says:

As far as the San Jose estate and the Mindoro Development Co. are concerned, there is a mighty close community of interest. We are practically the same. There is no getting away from that.

I may say, in passing, that I had not been attempting to get away from it, but had been endeavoring most diligently to get to it, and I acknowledge my obligations to Mr. Welch for having confirmed my judgment that the very character of the enterprise demanded essential unity and that any appearance to the contrary was simply juggling with the law.

The Mindoro Development Co. was incorporated under the laws of the State of New Jersey on December 8, 1909, with a capitalization of $100,000, with almost unlimited powers as to the kinds of business in which it could engage, including the right—to invest in, hold, subscribe for, buy, sell, and in any manner acquire and dispose of the stocks, bonds, and other obligations of other corporations, and while the owner of any such stocks, bonds, or other obligations to exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges of ownership thereof, including the right to vote.

The incorporators of this company were Robert J. Bain, Samuel S. Moore, and Charles E. Scribner. Some light is thrown upon the identity and interest of these gentlemen by the following testimony:

Mr. GARRETT. It seems from some statement in the record that Robert J. Bain, Samuel S. Moore, and Charles E. Scribner, all of New Jersey, are the incorporators of the Mindoro Development Co. Now, have they any interest in it?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Not that I know of.

Mr. GARRETT. Own no stock in it?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. JONES. Are you sure there are any such people, or may they not be fictitious names?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It is possible.

Mr. HELM. As a matter of fact, you got a few dummies over there to organize a company, and then you practically took possession of it. That is the fact of the matter, is it not?

Mr. WELCH. I guess so.

As a matter of fact, two of the three incorporators were law clerks in the offices of Corbin & Collins, lawyers, of Jersey City, N. J., who filed the articles of incorporation, which were drafted by Mr. De Gersdorff, of the law firm of Cravath, Henderson & De Gersdorff, of New York, along lines laid down by Mr. John Henry Hammond, of the law firm of Strong & Cadwaladar, of New York, of which law firm Henry W. Taft is the leading member, and of which Mr. Wickersham was a member until he became Attorney General.

The work of organization having been accomplished, the dummies were relieved of their alleged holdings; the capitalization was increased from $100,000 to $1,000,000 on January 5, 1909, being the day following the receipt of a cable from Poole, at Manila, that the final certificates of sale had been issued—certificates Nos. 2 and 3—carrying the new "corporate nominee" clause; and Messrs. Havemeyer, Welch, and Senff became the holders of $250,000 of paid-up capital stock each, the balance, $250,000, remaining in the treasury. The only other stockholders taken in were H. O. Havemeyer, who purchased 50 shares of stock from Horace Havemeyer, and Welch & Co., a California corporation controlled by the Welch family, to which concern Mr. Welch transferred 500 shares of his stock. Mr. Welch was elected president of the Mindoro Co., and Mr. Horace Havemeyer treasurer.

The Mindoro Development Co. at the time of the investigation was having a large sugar plant constructed by the Honolulu Iron Works for the San Jose estate.

OTHER PREPARATIONS—MR. POOLE GETTING BUSY.

Mr. Poole, on December 14, 1909, had begun shipping supplies to the San Jose estate and was busily arranging for the establishment of the sugar plantation, although word was not cabled to Manila of the favorable opinion of Attorney General Wickersham until December 22. It is made plain, however, throughout the testimony that no delay in the plans of the investors or their agent was suffered by reason of the fact that the Attorney General of the United States was to render an opinion of such grave import as to absolutely revolutionize the land and industrial policies of the Philippine Islands, and that, too, upon a question which had vexed the judgment of the able lawyers who represented them. But this feature will be left for discussion elsewhere.

The operations of Mr. Poole in establishing a sugar plantation brings us to another branch of the inquiry which is as difficult to distinguish from the San Jose estate-Mindoro Co. propositions as it is to distinguish between these propositions themselves. It was desired to run a line of railway from the sugar plant of the Mindoro Co. on the San Jose estate to Mangarin Bay, a distance of about 12 miles, where was the only available harbor—so reported by the director of lands—along the coast line there. Deep-draft vessels may land at the wharf built by the Mindoro Co. With the usual care and foresight displayed by the company, it had secured a 99-year lease upon 1,000 feet of the foreshore, upon which it will have exclusive dock privileges.

Mr. Welch stated that the company had a 25-year lease on the foreshore, but when Mr. Poole appeared he said he thought it was for 99 years, and cabled information later inserted shows the lease to have been for 99 years. This giving of a 99-year lease is in keeping with the policy of the insular officials in the administration of their trust over the resources of the Philippine Islands. All public-land leases are made for the longest period of time allowed by law, to wit, 25 years, at the minimum rental allowed by law, to wit, 10 cents gold per acre per annum, with renewal option for 25 years more. If there is no law to invalidate the 99-year foreshore lease given the Mindoro Development Co., then it ought to be annulled as grossly contrary to public policy. The time has gone by for granting 99-year privileges, or virtually giving them away, as in this case, to 20-year corporations.

THE THREE CALIFORNIA COMPANIES.

In order to give the Mindoro Co. and the San Jose estate complete land connection with the harbor, and at the same time afford a railway right of way, three agricultural companies were organized at San Francisco under the laws of California. These three companies were the San Carlos, San Francisco, and San Mateo Agricultural Cos. They were organized by the law firm of Lent & Humphrey, and the following are given by Lent & Humphrey as the stockholders of the three companies:

San Francisco Co.: William F. Humphrey, Elizabeth L. Welch, Homer P. Brown, J. Montgomery Strong, T. T. McDonald, A. C. Hampton.
San Carlos Co.: A. P. Welch, J. D. McFarland, George Jones.
San Mateo Co.: Eugene Lent, Robert C. McGahie, George D. Perry.

The managing agent of the three companies is Mr. Edward L. Poole, the managing agent of the San Jose estate.

Mr. Welch testified that Eugene Lent, of the law firm of Lent & Humphrey, and a stockholder in the San Mateo Co., is his brother-in-law; that A. P. Welch, stockholder in the San Carlos Co., is his brother; and that Elizabeth L. Welch, stockholder in the San Francisco Co., is his wife.

Mr. Welch had testified that Elizabeth L. Welch was the "sister-in-law of Mr. A. P. Welch," but on page 815 he said:

There is one thing I do not want to conceal; Elizabeth L. Welch is my wife.

William F. Humphrey, of the San Francisco Co., is the law partner of Brother-in-law Lent.

J. Montgomery Strong, of the San Francisco Co., is Mr. Welch's wife's cousin and was Mr. Welch's first emissary to the Philippines in March, 1909, when Messrs. Welch and Havemyer first became assured of free trade in sugar between the United States and the Philippines, which became an assured fact on August 5, 1909.

T. T. McDonald, another of the San Francisco Co.'s stockholders, is Secretary of the Mindoro Development Co. in New York, and Mr. Welch's right-hand man in that office.

Homer P. Brown, of the San Francisco Co., is the manager of the estate of Andrew Welch & Co., which is the estate of Mr. Charles J. Welch's father, deceased.

Thus we see that all the stockholders in the San Francisco Co. are Welch's relatives and employees, excepting A. C. Hampton, whom Mr. Welch does not know and who is probably a dummy.

As already stated, Mr. A. P. Welch, of the San Carlos Co., is the brother of Charles J. Welch, and Charles J. Welch does not know J. D. McFarland or George Jones, the other two stockholders, and who are probably employees or nominal parties; and Eugene Lent, of the San Mateo Co., is a brother-in-law, while George D. Perry of said company is in the employ of Brother-in-law Lent's law firm. Mr. Welch does not know the remaining stockholder of the San Mateo Co., Robert J. McGahie, who is probably also a nominal party.

To sum up in the words of Mr. Welch, "We are quite a family party."

The books and records of these California companies were called for, but not produced, and the only evidence as to stockholders, and so forth, is to be found at pages 811–815, in the affidavits furnished by Lent & Humphrey. What the interests of these various stockholders are do not appear, but it is fair to assume that the companies are in the complete control of the Welch family and it will be shown later that their affairs are as much under the direction of Mr. Charles J. Welch as are the Mindoro Development Co. and the San Jose estate. These companies were organized at the suggestion of Mr. Welch when he visited California after Mr. Poole had departed from New York for the Philippines to purchase sugar lands, which was on or about September 7, 1909.

SOME GRAPEVINE TESTIMONY.

Before proceeding to consider the testimony bearing upon the affairs of these companies in the Philippines, it will be well to first consider them at this end of the line from the standpoint of Mr. Welch's testimony. He was very vague and uncertain as to what transpired between himself and his California relatives whereby they were induced to go into these enterprises and to secure the services of Mr. Edward L. Poole.

Mr. Welch said:

I do not know that the Mindoro Development Co. would allow Mr. Poole to represent those companies as an agent there——

thus giving the impression that if Mr. Poole was representing these companies his action might not meet with the approval of the Mindoro Co. Mr. Welch, when questioned as to how the California parties got in connection with Mr. Poole, replied:

I do not know. Very likely I wrote out to them about it. I guess I did. I very likely must have indicated to Mr. Poole that these California people wanted to buy the land.

I am amply borne out by the record when I state that a great deal of the testimony of witnesses upon material points consisted of "perhaps," "probably," "very likely," "I guess," "I presume," and so forth, all of these guesses relating to matters which could be established by documentary evidence. One might well infer from Mr. Welch's testimony—in fact, one could only infer—that he knew little about the affairs of the California companies or Mr. Poole's connection with them, when, in fact, he was the directing head.

The testimony of Mr. Welch at page 801 is a fair sample of this character of evidence, and is here submitted verbatim:

Mr. PARSONS. What agreement is there in regard to the development company's running over the lands of two of them?
Mr. WELCH. There is no agreement at present.
Mr. PARSONS. How did it get permission to go over there?
Mr. WELCH. I do not know.
Mr. PARSONS. But it is over them, is it not?
Mr. WELCH. I believe so.
Mr. PARSONS. Who will know about that?
Mr. WELCH. I don't know.

For the purpose of showing that Mr. Welch did know all about this matter and that his was the directing mind, I shall, at the risk of getting ahead of my story, here set out his cabled instructions to Mr. Poole on December 30, 1909:

California colonia companies, whose charters you now have, should acquire public land between San Jose and Mangarin, factory getting right of way for the railroad from them.

This copy of the cablegram, it may be remarked, was not produced while Mr. Welch was a witness before the committee on January 12, 1911, and did not, in fact, appear until Mr. Poole arrived from the Philippines and appeared before the committee on February 11, 1911, just one month later, when it was offered by Mr. Welch.

After Mr. Welch had testified that he did not know whether the Mindoro Co. had permission to lay a railroad over the lands of the California companies, and did not know whether, in fact, it was over them, and did not know who would know, the following colloquy occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean to say that you just built a railroad across those people's land without their leave or license?
Mr. WELCH. That is about the size of it, Mr. Chairman.

And, on page 802, the following:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you consult with any of the owners or officers or agents of any of these three colonia companies in regard to the matter, as to their wishes as to whether you should go across their land or not?
Mr. WELCH. No; there was no direct consultation, but it was implied at the time that they went in there. There was never any objection raised, and they certainly wanted the railroad through there.

It will not do to assume, however, because of the character of his testimony, that Mr. Welch is a fool, and his testimony, or rather lack of testimony, read in the light of the statements subsequently made to the committee by his agent, Mr. Poole, discloses some method in an apparent lack of business sense and ability which if true would establish him to be utterly unfit to administer the large interests that are under his control in the United States, Cuba, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Poole, be it understood, went from New York direct to the Philippines, without having any communication whatever with Mr. Welch's California relatives. He arrived in Manila on October 11. His first knowledge that Mr. Welch's relatives in California wished him to act as their agent in securing agricultural lands came in the shape of a letter received by him from Lent & Humphrey, the San Francisco attorneys, on November 6, 1909.

No reply was made to this letter until December 30, 1909, on which date it was answered by Mr. Bruce, Poole's Manila attorney.

Mr. Poole did not bring this letter of November 6 with him or one single scrap of documentary evidence of any character whatsoever. After having admitted in various ways that he came from the Philippines without any documentary evidence, this matter was definitely summed up as follows:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You virtually, then, came all this long distance to appear before this committee empty handed, so far as correspondence and documents are concerned.
Mr. POOLE. I did not know that I was to appear before the committee. The cable simply said presence desired in Washington or in New York, I do not remember which.

To return now to the testimony going to show that, notwithstanding Mr. Welch's repeated assertions of lack of knowledge of the affairs of the California companies and Mr. Welch's connection therewith, attention is again called to the fact that on December 30, 1909, which was the very day on which Attorney Bruce, by letter, answered the letter of Lent & Humphrey of November 6, Mr. Poole received from Mr. Welch the cable already mentioned:

California Colonia Co., whose charters you now have, should acquire public land between San Jose and Mangarin, factory company getting right of way from them.

Upon receipt of this cablegram, Mr. Poole immediately began the survey of the railroad from the San Jose estate to the harbor. As nearly as he could fix the time, it was the first week in January, 1909. At that time he had not filed the land applications of the California companies; in fact, did not file their applications until February 2. He had not received any authority from the Philippine Government to run a railway across the public lands, which was the character of lands acquired by the California companies. He had not received any authority from the California parties, because his attorney had only just started on its journey across the Pacific an answer to the only letter that he—Poole—had ever received from them, the character of which letter is, of course, wholly unknown. The only authority he had received from any source whatever was Mr. Welch's cablegram of December 30, concerning which the following colloquy appears in the hearings:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You proceeded in the first week in January, under authority of Mr. Welch's cablegram of December 30, to survey your right of way?
Mr. POOLE. No, sir; I did not. You mean to start in operations on a small scale?
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.
Mr. POOLE. I did. Of course, that was very general. I started the right of way, the survey, several different rights of way, etc.

Mr. Welch's evasiveness with reference to the California companies is still further understandable in the light of the provision in section 75 of the act of Congress that—

It shall be unlawful for any member of a corporation engaged in agriculture or mining, or for any corporation organized for any purpose, except irrigation, to be in any wise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture or in mining.

Mr. Welch did not want to appear to be in any wise interested in the California companies, and yet it is established beyond question that his managing agent in the San Jose estate was likewise his managing agent in the affairs of the three California companies, which are the properties of his immediate relatives and their employees. It is probably fair to Mr. Welch to say that he did not have anything like a detailed arrangement or understanding with his wife, his brother, and his brother-in-law about their Philippine enterprise and Mr. Poole's relations therewith. It was Mr. Welch's affair as much as theirs, and he knew that he had a free hand. If there has not been clearly established such an interrelation and community of interest between these parties and concerns as to bring them within the inhibition of section 75, then it would be impossible to devise a provision of law which would prevent a member of one corporation from being in any wise interested in any other corporation. The language of the statute is the simplest and the most sweeping that could have been devised.

A SUMMING UP.

The law provided that the agricultural lands of the Philippine Islands should be disposed of only to citizens of the islands. It provided that not more than 16 hectares should go to an individual and not more than 1,024 hectares should go to a corporation or association of persons. It provided that agricultural corporations should be limited by their charters to 1,024 hectares. It made it unlawful for any member of a corporation engaged in agriculture or mining and for any corporation organized for any purpose except irrigation to be in anywise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture or in mining.

And yet, in the face of these stringent, sweeping, and seemingly unassailable safeguards, we have a sale of a 56,000-acre tract of Government lands to an association of persons not citizens of the Philippine Islands. We have as the very heart and life force of these lands an American corporation owned and controlled by this association of persons. We have three other American corporations controlled by the family of the head of the other corporation, owning in the aggregate 7,000 acres of public land, tying this estate to the water front with the railroad of the larger corporation running through the lands of the smaller corporations to a wharfage upon which the larger corporation has a 99-year lease, and we have the same managing agent for all these concerns.

We have therefore a condition which it was the obvious purpose, intent, and policy of Congress to prevent, a large community interest which could not be more essentially unified to all practical intents and purposes were there no restrictions whatever in the law, and this with the acquiescence of the officials of the Philippine Government.

SECTION 75 NOT COMPLIED WITH.

An interesting side light is thrown upon the attitude of the insular officials by its dealings with Mr. Poole for the three California companies. On February 2, 1910, Mr. Poole simultaneously filed the applications of the three California companies for nearly the maximum quantity of land allowed by law to each corporation. Stress has been laid by the Philippine officials upon the statement appearing on the face of each application that neither the corporation nor any "member has ever purchased any land or acquired interest therein under said law." This is depended upon by the officials to insure against the violation of the provisions of section 75. It could be absolutely true that neither the applying corporation nor any member thereof had ever purchased any land or acquired interest therein under said law and still not satisfy the requirements of the law. In the first place, this is not a statement that no member of a particular corporation "is in anywise interested" in any other agricultural corporation. In the next place, these applications being filed simultaneously and no land therefore having as yet been purchased or interest acquired, the same individuals might file for a hundred corporations simultaneously, and, while still being within the truth in each application, would be preparing to acquire a multiplicity of interests. I advance these propositions merely for the purpose of showing the insufficiency of the applications, which are in a large measure relied upon by Secretary Worcester and Capt. Sleeper to compensate for their failure to secure the evidence which it will now be shown was called for by them, and demanding full compliance with the law.

It appears that on May 4, 1910, Capt. Sleeper advised the Secretary of the Interior of the applications of the California companies, each of Capt. Sleeper's three letters ending as follows:

> Attention is invited to the fact that this land adjoins tract applied for by the other companies, and that Mr. E. L. Poole is agent for the three companies.

Mr. Worcester being then absent, Acting Secretary Thomas C. Welch on May 9 replied, stating:

> As it does not appear from the papers that the stockholders in one of these companies are not stockholders in another, I would suggest that you request the agent to furnish us with the necessary information on this subject, which may be in the form of an affidavit by some officer of the company having knowledge as to who are the stockholders. The papers will be held pending receipt of such information.

In this letter Mr. Welch also called attention to the requirements of section 75 of the act of Congress.

Thereupon Director Sleeper wired Attorney Bruce at Manila as follows:

> Sales applications held up pending receipt of evidence that stockholders in any one of the corporations are in no way interested in any other corporation. (Sec. 75, act of Congress, July 1, 1902.)

To which Mr. Bruce, on May 10, replied, stating that the articles of incorporation—> show that there are no common stockholders and incorporators among them—

But stating that—

> I shall at once cable to our correspondents in the United States for the affidavits.

Mr. Bruce asked permission to proceed pending the receipt of the affidavits.

Acting Secretary Welch, on May 13, 1910, authorized the Director of Lands to proceed—

> It being understood, however, that the applicants are to furnish corroborative proof of the statements in said (Bruce's) letter before such sale be finally consummated.

The director of lands on May 16, 1910, sent Mr. Bruce a copy of the Acting Secretary's letter.

Mr. Bruce on May 18 wrote Capt. Sleeper:

> I have already written to the United States and requested our correspondents to forward at once affidavits showing the stockholders of the various companies.

It may be said here that these affidavits were never secured, but after my demand affidavits were sent on to Washington by Lent & Humphrey, the San Francisco attorneys, on December 29, 1910, and were inserted in the hearings on January 12, 1911.

The next thing appearing in the record about this matter is a letter from the director of lands to Mr. Bruce asking him for the affidavit of Mr. Poole, "that he is not a stockholder in any one of the three companies," and so forth, which affidavit was executed by Mr. Poole on June 4, 1910.

Mr. Worcester stated that he did not think Mr. Bruce sent to the United States for the affidavits, although later he stated that Capt. Sleeper thought Mr. Bruce had sent for them "in spite of the fact that he was not required to do so."

Mr. Worcester later cited as an instance of his care in enforcing the law his action with reference to the three California companies, saying:

> The question of the propriety of my action was raised, but the information which I requested was furnished. In point of fact, the information was furnished without much demurrer.

It will be borne in mind, of course, that it was not furnished at all.

Again, Mr. Worcester stated with reference to Mr. Bruce's action about the affidavits, "whether they were demanded of him or not, he very kindly wrote for them."

On the same page, Mr. Worcester stated that he considered the affidavits were unnecessary, basing his answer upon the contents of the application.

Mr. Worcester said:

> I should say that a good deal more than was called for by the law has been furnished.

All of which goes to show clearly the laxity with which the law is interpreted and enforced. There is no escape from the facts established by the testimony that, after calling for affidavits specifically showing that the stockholders in any one company were not stockholders in any other company, the applications of the corporations were approved without the production of the evidence called for, although casual examination of the record and the various statements made by Mr. Worcester, and particularly his statement at page 537, would give the impression that the law had been fully complied with. Considering the whole character of the testimony and of the transactions with which we are dealing, it may be said that the affidavits which were sent on to Washington on my demand, in so far as they are worth anything, detract from rather than add to the showing made to the insular officials. If the parties in interest are willing to rest on this showing, then in the light of the whole testimony I invoke the presumption that a complete statement of the facts would show these companies to be the properties of the Welch family, if indeed it can be said that there is anything now lacking in the testimony to establish that fact; and if the present scope of the operations of the Welch family in the island of Mindoro is within the law, then there is no reason why the scope of their operations may not be indefinitely extended to embrace the entire island, or so far as Welches hold out. Being quite wealthy, when they run out of Welches, they could accumulate quite a bit of land through the medium of their many lawyers and employees and in this way the entire island of Mindoro could be benevolently assimilated, and all the blessings of sugar plantation peonage, the truck store, the scrip system, the company bull pen, church, schoolhouse, parks, places of amusement, and so forth, all amply provided for in the charter of the Mindoro Development Co.; could be brought home to the primitive inhabitants thereof.

LAW SHAMEFULLY EVADED.

The testimony give by the insular officials and by Messrs. Welch and Poole is absolutely convincing as to the indifference of these officials to the carefully drawn safeguards of the land provisions of the organic law of the Philippines. It is established beyond dispute, and even more fully than my quotations from the hearings relative to the San Jose estate, the Mindoro Development Co., and the three California companies, that these officials, in their anxiety to dispose of these lands, never gave a thought to the fact that they were creating a condition which, had it been submitted to the precedent sanction of Congress, would not have received even the recognition or courtesy of consideration. The most pronounced advocate of exploitation can not take the position that the Congress, which had refused to increase the limit of land holdings to 10,000 acres or to any other quantity above 2,500 acres, would have sanctioned the sale of 56,000 acres, as was done in the case of the San Jose estate, and of 49,000 acres, as was attempted to be done in the case of the Isabela estate, and of 15,000 acres, as was attempted to be done in the case of the Calamba estate.

Indeed, the disclosures with reference to the foregoing transactions richly merit the following observation in the minority report of the Committee on Insular Affairs:

> Considering these astounding facts, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the land laws of the Philippines are being evaded in the most shameless manner, even if we can be mistaken in our construction of those laws.

THE TALA ESTATE.

But it was in the case of the Tala estate above all others in which the insular officials displayed a total lack of appreciation of the character of the trust devolving upon them in the administration of the lands of the Philippines; and it is much more properly a trust than the administrative duties devolving upon the Interior Department of the United States with respect to the public lands of this country, for the Filipinos are, in a sense, the wards of this country, and until it is finally determined whether they are to remain forever a part of the household of the trustee or are to be emancipated and set up independently in business for themselves, it is the rule of law and of equity and of morals that their estate should be preserved from spoliation and administered and conserved as nearly as possible in accord with the terms, conditions, and objects of the trust.

The Tala estate consists of about 17,000 acres of land, situated within 7 miles of the boundaries of the city of Manila. Owing largely to the difficulties then involving all of these estates, only about 20 per cent of the Tala estate was occupied by tenants at the time the friar lands were taken over by the Philippine Government. Instead of offering this estate for lease or sale to the natives after it had been surveyed and all the steps preliminary to such disposition had been taken, the director of public lands, with the approval of the secretary of the interior, executed an agreement to lease, with purchase option, to the executive secretary of the Philippine Government, for all of the unoccupied land on the estate, and also for all of the occupied land in case the tenants failed or refused to buy their holdings. As this agreement was the most extraordinary instrument of this character of which I have ever heard, I shall summarize for you its more striking features.

THE AGREEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

Paragraph 1 relieved the lessee from paying any rent for land which did not return him a net profit of ₱20 per hectare ($4 per acre).

Paragraph 2 provided that in cases of applications for leases filed by others—and these others, of course, would be natives—he, the executive secretary, would be notified and given the first right to lease the land out from under the native applicant.

Paragraph 3 gave the executive secretary the preference right to lease abandoned lands.

Paragraph 4 required cultivation of a certain acreage per annum, with no penalty for failure to cultivate, and this paragraph was so conditioned that uncultivable lands upon the estate could be set off against the area required to be cultivated, which provision, by reason of the fact that the bad land on the estate exceeded the annual quantity required to be cultivated, relieved the lessee from all cultivation. This extraordinary construction and effect of the provision was made clear by the testimony of the director of lands.

Paragraph 5 contained the significant provision that the Government would sell these leased lands to the executive secretary whenever the Philippine Legislature should so amend the friar-land act as to permit of their sale. The agreement was executed on April 20, 1908, and the desired law was passed June 3, 1908, just six weeks thereafter.

Paragraph 10 contained the extraordinary provision that the director of public lands would use his official influence to obtain adequate police protection and Government aid in the construction of highways and bridges on and to the lands of the estate.

AGREEMENT UNIQUE—COMPLIED WITH.

It was admitted that no other land agreement executed by the director of lands contained any such extraordinary, not to say unheard of, conditions as those above recited. Pursuant to the provision in paragraph 10, the Government had begun the improvement of the road from Manila to the estate by macadamizing 1 mile of it and repairing other parts of it. The Government had also put in one concrete steel reenforced bridge at a cost of $10,000 gold or more; another such bridge with a 10 or 12 foot waterway under it, and about 15 such culverts. In other words, at the time of the investigation the Government had probably expended some $25,000 in gold to improve the road to the estate. Why such improvements could not have been put in for native owners and why native owners should not have been furnished the police patrol said by the insular officials to have been needed in the locality does not seem to have occurred to the officials at all. These conveniences and safeguards appear to have become necessary only under an agreement to lease and sell the land to one of the superior officials of the insular government. It further appeared that the executive secretary had upon his leased lands some eighty-odd subtenants and 15 or 20 employees—a colony, therefore, of a hundred or more able-bodied natives.

A more complete perversion of the declared purpose in taking these lands away from their former owners could not well be imagined. An interesting and somewhat significant development, however, of the attack on this transaction was the practical unanimity with which the Filipino people rose in behalf of the executive secretary. He is not only exceedingly popular with the Filipinos, but would appear to have practically a monopoly of that distinction among the heads of the insular government. Mr. Carpenter, it appears, has labored earnestly for the welfare of the Filipino people and has treated them fairly and considerately, and they all, without regard to the issue involved, came to his personal defense, the Philippine Assembly even going to the extent of adopting resolutions expressive of their regard and concern for Mr. Carpenter. The incident presented a rather peculiar commentary upon the status of colonial officials and was in marked contrast to the treatment accorded the secretary of the interior in a somewhat similar, but much less important case.

It appears that a nephew of the secretary of the interior had leased a tract of 2,500 acres of public lands, and this, because of the hostile attitude of the Filipinos toward the secretary, caused the matter to be published and treated as a crime, as the result of which publication every person connected with the newspaper and including a member of the Philippine Assembly, was criminally prosecuted and sentenced to prison and mulcted in heavy damages besides.

I may say that Mr. Carpenter impressed me very favorably, and I could well understand the regard expressed by the Filipinos for him. Such a transaction, known to and approved by the heads of the Philippine Government, would be impossible in the United States. Such a transaction in the United States would destroy the administration connected with it. A somewhat different standard appears to prevail in the Philippines. Land is plenty and development scarce. Mr. Carpenter proposed to make his estate an object lesson and a sort of agricultural school. He impresses one as being in absolute good faith, and I am glad to say that I can not feel that Mr. Carpenter considered himself as engaged in other than a laudable enterprise, which was to be beneficial to the countryside.

It should, however, require no argument to demonstrate the error of the transaction. If Mr. Carpenter could purchase the Tala estate he could purchase all of the friar estates. And hard though officials have strained to reason themselves into the right in their dealings with the friar lands, they are brought up short when confronted with the question whether they would sell all of these estates to one of their own number, or, indeed, to any other one person. They would sell one estate to one official, or they would sell one tract of 56,000 acres to one individual representing both an association and a corporation. But here they would seek to draw a line which can not be legally drawn. This is not a question of limitations to be made by officials to suit each individual case, but of limitations fixed by law to govern all cases. This is the real proposition the insular officials are up against. In all of these larger transactions the leases differ in their provisions, but all of the leases and nearly all of their provisions were without warrant of law. I have never at any time said that the present limitations in the Philippine land laws are the best for the development of the country. I have said that the limitations are there; that they are clear and specific; and that they should be observed until changed by Congress and not evaded and winked out of existence by administrative officers.

OTHER PRACTICES OF QUESTIONABLE POLICY.

No matter how well meaning and how free from personal or official dishonesty such transactions might be at the inception, it is just as certain as life and human nature that eventually they would result result in undesirable, not to say corrupt, conditions. Many instances developed at the hearings indicating that an overhauling of the land administration in the Philippines did not occur any too soon. Government officials and employees are permitted to purchase and lease both public and friar lands. They are permitted to locate and patent mining claims. All of the foregoing include officials and employees of the land bureau itself. It appears that the assistant director of public lands had on file an application for the lease of 2,500 acres of public lands. The application secured to him the right to the use and occupancy of the land and that without rent until such time as the lease should issue. These lands, as in the case of the lease to the nephew of the Secretary of the Interior, are leased for 50 years, the maximum allowed by law, and at the minimum rental allowed by law, which is as low as 20 cents per acre per annum. The testimony showed that among the lessees of public lands were a number of corporations organized and controlled by officials of the Philippine government, including the heads of bureaus, the legal advisers of the insular government, and, as I have said, even the heads of the land bureau itself. Such a policy is absolutely certain to produce intolerable conditions, and should be done away with by law. All Government officials and employees should be prohibited from acquiring public lands and resources during their connection with the Government.

It seems incredible that officials of intelligence and experience could countenance the practices disclosed in connection with the administration of lands in the Philippines and hope to escape the legitimate consequences. Imagine for one moment the chief of a division in the General Land Office at Washington or the register or receiver of a local land office acquiring 2,500 acres of public domain or organizing and heading a corporation to acquire and develop such land. Indeed, such a thing could not be even imagined in this country, and it should not be permitted in the other.

On the whole, I believe firmly that the result of the investigation into the administration of lands in the Philippines will ultimately result in great benefits. It will stop in their incipiency some errors of practice. It will serve to clear away some misunderstandings. It will serve to bring greater care and system into the administration of lands. It will serve, in a word, to lock the barn before, not after, the stealing of the horse. I feel, therefore, that the investigation which, as one of its results, produced the pending legislation was of good and lasting service, both to this country and the country of which it is the legal guardian.

Instead, therefore, of entertaining the slightest concern over the displeasure of those who were inconvenienced by it, I shall always feel a rewarding satisfaction that I took up, brought about, and pressed the investigation to a conclusion, with the manifest good results accomplished.

PROTEST OF ANTI-IMPERIALIST LEAGUE.

I shall conclude with the resolutions of protest against further sales of the friar lands adopted and sent out for presentation to the House by the executive committee of the Anti-Imperialist League, an organization numbering among its membership many of the leaders of thought in this country, and particularly in New England, these resolutions having been evoked by the stated intention of the President to order the resumption of friar land sales. The resolutions recite the recommendations made in all of the four reports of the friar land investigation in favor of further legislation touching these lands, and I commend them to the consideration of Members:

BOSTON, December 30, 1911.

To the President of the United States:

The undersigned, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Anti-Imperialist League, invite your attention to the following facts:

The sale of the lands in the Philippine Islands which are known as the friar lands was made the subject of an investigation by the Committee on Insular Affairs, under a resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 25th day of June, 1910, and their report was made on the last day of the Sixty-first Congress. Though the conclusions of the members were stated in four different reports, one signed by nine members of the committee, one signed by three members of the committee, one signed by a single member of the committee, and the fourth signed by five members of the committee, the whole committee without regard to party affiliations concluded that further legislation by Congress was necessary in regard to the sale of these lands.

Thus the report signed by Mr. OLMSTED and Mr. CRUMPACKER and seven others concluded with the phrase: "The advisability of enacting reasonable limitations respecting the quantity of friar lands that may hereafter be acquired, either by individuals or corporations, is respectfully commended to the consideration of Congress."

Mr. RUCKER, regarding it as a doubtful question whether the sales already made of friar lands were legal, recommended that a test suit should be brought for the purpose of having that question determined by a judgment of a court.

The report signed by Messrs. HUBBARD, DAVIS, and Madison concluded: "We join most heartily in commending to Congress consideration of the question of placing a reasonable limitation upon the quantity of friar lands that may be acquired by an individual, and we indulge the hope that until Congress has had an opportunity to act no further sales shall be made of such lands in large tracts." The fourth report, signed by Mr. JONES and four others, reached the conclusion that the sales already made were in violation of the law, and that if any change was to be made in the law Congress alone could make it. The reports also disclosed that the policy of the law in regard to the exploitation of the Philippines had been disregarded and its requirements, in some cases at least, evaded.

In view of these reports all further sales of the friar lands were suspended by the Secretary of War, Mr. Dickinson, pending the action of Congress.

Although the Sixty-second Congress did not undertake during the extra session to deal with any but tariff questions and questions of necessary appropriation, and is just beginning a session which will be devoted to general legislation, we observe by your message sent to Congress on the 21st of December, 1911, that you propose to direct the Secretary of War to continue the sales of the friar lands.

The executive committee earnestly hopes that this intention will not be carried out, and that while there is not only a substantial doubt as to the power of the insular government to sell the friar lands in such large tracts as have already been sold, there is also the serious question whether, if the law does authorize such sales, it should not be amended so as to prevent any sales of these lands in quantities exceeding the amounts specified in section 15 of the organic act approved July 1, 1902. These questions involve considerations of public policy far more important to the Filipino people and to the people of the United States than any amount of money which can be realized from the sale, and while these questions are unsettled the continuance of sales by Executive order without action by Congress will not only embarrass Congress and discourage the Filipinos, who are opposed to the sale of their most fertile lands in large tracts to nonresident exploiters, but will also leave a cloud upon the titles of purchasers that may embarrass them in the future.

In the opinion of many good lawyers the purchasers of the lands already sold have not acquired a title to the lands which they have purchased, and important questions of policy are raised in the reports of the Insular Committee which only Congress can settle.

We earnestly protest, therefore, against any further sales of the lands in question, both because such sales tend to foreclose a question that is now under consideration by Congress and because the sales, in our judgment, tend to postpone the independence of the Philippine Islands and to embarrass the relations between those islands and the United States by creating interests adverse to the interest of the Filipino people.

MOORFIELD STOREY, President.
ERVING WINSLOW, Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 1524. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dam or dams across the Kansas River in western Shawnee County or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas; and

S. 5060. An act to provide for the disposal of the unallotted land on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1590. An act providing for an increase of salary for the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of Adam D. Shriner;

S. 3645. An act to amend the law providing for the payment of the death gratuity, as applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps;

S. 3749. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

S. 4341. An act for the relief of Nathan McDaneld;

S. 4461. An act permitting chief office deputy United States marshals to act as disbursing officers for their principals in cases of emergency;

S. 4580. An act to authorize the allowance of second homestead and desert entries;

S. 4679. An act to amend section 95 of the "act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

S. 5254. An act to provide for compulsory education of the children of Alaska, and for other purposes;

S. 5350. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report upon the advisability of constructing roads upon the diminished Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes;

S. 5629. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905;

S. 5674. An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands;

S. 5676. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside for sanatorium purposes not to exceed four sections of the unallotted tribal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Oklahoma;

S. 5990. An act to provide for the extension of the underground system of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. and the City & Suburban Railway of Washington along certain streets in the city of Washington, and for other purposes;

S. 6156. An act to direct that Crittenden Street NW., between Iowa Avenue and Seventeenth Street NW., be stricken from the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia;

S. 6219. An act providing for the purchase of permanent improvements on the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations by the citizens owning such improvements;

S. 6412. An act to regulate radiocommunication; and

S. 5382. An act to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated.

S. 5382. An act to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 6219. An act providing for the purchase of permanent improvements on the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations by the citizens owning such improvements; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 6412. An act to regulate radio communication; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 312. House joint resolution making appropriations for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1524. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dam across the Kansas River in western Shawnee County, or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PORTER, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ADAMSON, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes a point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman withholds that for the present.

Mr. MANN. I withhold it for the present.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill (H. R. 17756) may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. That applies to all gentlemen who have already spoken?

Mr. JONES. Who have already spoken.

The SPEAKER. It applies to gentlemen who have already spoken, and they can extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR RICHARD BRODHEAD, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD addresses in connection with the presentation to the Court of Claims of the portrait of Richard Brodhead, a former Member of this House and a former Senator, who was the author of the law which created the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD certain speeches made on the presentation of the portrait of Hon. Richard Brodhead, of Pennsylvania, to the Court of Claims. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following are the addresses referred to:

ADDRESS OF HON. ROBERT E. JAMES, OF EASTON, PA., DELIVERED ON MARCH 6, 1912, IN PRESENTING TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS ON BEHALF OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION OF NORTHAMPTON COUNTY THE PORTRAIT OF THE LATE SENATOR RICHARD BRODHEAD, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

"With permission of the court, I rise to announce that there is in your honors' presence a delegation of the Bar Association of the County of Northampton, State of Pennsylvania, who present themselves to the court and indulge in the hope that your honors will grant them a few moments for the purpose of respectfully tendering to this body a memorial of the gentleman whom they believe was largely, if not almost entirely, instrumental in the constitution of this court.

"Richard Brodhead was born in 1810. His birthplace was in the far northeastern section of Pennsylvania. There, on the banks of the upper Delaware, in one of the most beautiful spots of all that most favored country, began his useful life. Mountain and meadow and river and forest all combined to make his world beautiful. There was the peace and quiet, the beauty of surroundings and simplicity of life, that best school mind and heart for great endeavor, and amid these surroundings, in such a charming location, Richard Brodhead spent the early days of his life. There he received his early education. There was imbued into his very soul those principles of morality and patriotism which made him the man he was in his after days. Later we find him, in 1830, at Easton, in the law office of the Hon. James M. Porter, who a little later became Secretary of War under President Pierce. Shortly after his admission to the bar he was elected to the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania and served one term. Scarcely had he finished his term when he was sent to the lower House of the National Congress. He remained there from 1841 to 1847. Again an appreciative public called for his ability in the service of the State and he was elected a Member of the United States Senate, representing his native State—a speedy and merited promotion. He was fortunate in living in a period when merit was summoned to place. He had learned in his extended service in the House and in his early experience in the United States Senate that it was necessary for the Congress to try out the vexed questions of claimants against the United States. Those claims were great in number, intricate in character, and most difficult of just adjudication, yet it was a duty incumbent upon the Congress in ordinary session to pass upon the merits and demerits of these claims. Influence was frequently more potent than evidence, and a friendly feeling more effective than uncertain proof. Frequently injustice was done, and in the absence of method and rule the final adjudication was a creature of chance, a resultant of conditions perhaps entirely foreign to the claim and its merits.

"Such were the conditions when Senator Brodhead entered upon his duties.

"At an early period in his senatorial career he was appointed chairman of the Committee on Claims, where this whole matter came to his immediate attention. He immediately conceived the idea that some commission, some court, some judicial body which should ascertain the merits of the contentions of these claimants and determine whether the United States had any legal or moral duty to care for them or their interests should be created. In consequence, a resolution was offered and a special committee was appointed, of which Senator Brodhead was made chairman, to investigate the subject and make subsequent report to the Senate, which was done. A short time afterwards Mr. Brodhead made his report as chairman of the committee, suggesting the advisability of the constitution of a court, a separate judicial tribunal, surrounded by all the safeguards arising from the methods of established legal procedure and with all the precautions that surround such a tribunal, for the purpose of investigating all claims of this character.

"This recommendation was enacted into a statute and this court, with its long record of usefulness, is the beneficent result of his intelligent judgment and persistent energy. If a life crowded with benefit to his people had no other accomplished result which would justify the approbation of his constituency, this alone would suffice.

"He left his impress on public affairs, and when, in 1857, the turning political tide announced the advent of new doctrines and new men, he ended a notable and honorable public career; and with the content that follows duty well performed he turned to the people who loved him and to the mountains he loved. The clouds that foreboded the storm were then already gathering and soon burst into a tempest of war, and when the strife was at its highest and the end might not yet be forecast, Richard Brodhead was summoned by that other Voice from strife to peace. Then passed an able lawyer, an eloquent pleader, a statesman, and a gentleman.

"And now we, as the representatives of the Northampton bar, for that bar which was honored by his career and dignified by his life, tender to this court this portrait of the Senator as a memorial of a useful life and pray that it may fitly find space amid these scenes of highest usefulness, which his labor aided to make possible."

ADDRESS OF CHIEF JUSTICE STANTON J. PEELLE, OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS, IN RESPONSE TO THAT OF HON. ROBERT E. JAMES.

"Gentlemen of the Bar Association of Northampton County: The court receives with pleasure and gratitude this portrait of the late Richard Brodhead, a Senator from Pennsylvania in the United States Senate from December, 1851, to March 3, 1857, and the clerk is requested to cause the same to be appropriately hung in the reception room.

"It is altogether fitting that this should be done, since Senator Brodhead, a man of wide experience in both Houses of Congress and with a keen foresight, introduced and had referred to the Committee on Claims, of which he was a member, the bill to establish a commission for the examination and adjustment of private claims against the Government. When the bill was up in the Senate for consideration Senator Hunter, of Virginia, suggested some amendments, and the bill was finally referred to a select committee consisting of Senators Brodhead; Jones, of Tennessee; Hunter, of Virginia; Clayton, of Delaware; and Clay, of Alabama. This committee subsequently reported, through Senator Brodhead, its chairman, a substitute for the bill, which provided for the establishment of a permanent court instead of a commission. The bill so reported met with the approval of the Senate and passed that body without opposition. When the bill was considered in the House some immaterial amendments were made, and it passed that body February 22, 1855, and two days later was signed by the President and became a law.

"The bill originally provided for the appointment of three judges, but subsequently the law was amended providing for a chief justice and four judges, and the court as thus constituted was given jurisdiction to render final judgment, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

"The wisdom of the founders has time and again been demonstrated in the determination by the court of vital questions affecting the honor of the Nation as well as its good faith toward its citizens in the judicial settlement of claims arising under both international and municipal law.

"The court has not only been a relief to Congress from the many burdens which would otherwise have been imposed on it in an ex parte consideration of claims, but has proved a safeguard against the allowance of fraudulent and unjust claims against the Government.

"The members of the bar of Northampton County, Pa., represented by their committee presenting the portrait, are to be commended in their effort to perpetuate the memory of one of their most distinguished members, who had the honor to serve in the Senate with such distinguished men as Clay, Douglas, Seward, Cass, Chase, Hunter, Hale, and others of lesser note, but of great ability, from various States.

"On behalf of the court I desire to express our thanks through the committee to the members of the bar of Northampton County, Pa., for this portrait."

BRODHEAD, OF PENNSYLVANIA—FATHER OF COURT OF CLAIMS, BUT HIS FAME SHOULD REST UPON RECORD AS ORIGINAL CONSERVATIONIST.

Briefly calling attention to an almost forgotten page of American history, a press dispatch from this capital announced the other day that certain gentlemen, learned in the law, would take steps to honor the memory of Richard Brodhead, sometimes United States Senator from Pennsylvania, and generally recognized as "Father of the Court of Claims."

Mr. Brodhead was a one-term Senator, a man of few words and a strict constructionist of the most rigid type.

I find no biography of him in the Congressional Library, and Lanman's Dictionary disposes of him in fewer than 40 words, saying: "Brodhead, Richard, was a native of Pike County, Pa.; was a Representative in Congress from 1843 to 1849; a Senator of the United States from 1851 to 1857. Died at Easton, Pa., September 17, 1863."

Ben: Perley Poore sheds little additional light, but does inform us that Mr. Brodhead had no opposition at the polls when he entered Congress.

Richard Brodhead was indeed "Father of the United States Court of Claims," but his fame should not rest on that achievement.

He was one of the original, if not the original, conservationist.

He believed that the western lands should be reserved to actual settlers, and he fought in committee and on the floor the proposition to alienate large tracts to corporations.

He was uncompromisingly opposed to railway land grants, a policy that had much to commend it half a century ago, with millions of acres isolated from market; but a policy so abused that it has brought the entire system of railway subvention into disrepute.

It was while he was in the Senate, December 6, 1854, that Senator Brodhead introduced a bill establishing a commission for the examination and adjustment of private claims. It was a carefully drawn and well prepared bill, and was reported back without amendment by the committee. It was Senator Hunter, of Virginia, who suggested that a court instead of a commission be created, and such a bill was drawn later by a select committee, of which Senator Brodhead was chairman.

The wisdom of such a court is no longer doubted. It would be hard to estimate the burden of work it has taken from the shoulders of Congress.

Indeed, Congress had, in 1854, reached a point when it could no longer do the work. Its hands were tied for lack of time, and this was virtually an abridgement of the right of petition as guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution.

The creation of the Court of Claims was indeed a long stride in the direction of broadening the Constitution without changing its text, so that the letter would be at agreement with the spirit.

And it was done by the creation of a court—a fact that some of those who are looking for a "shorter and simpler method of amendment" would do well to bear in mind.

Senator Brodhead was a strong believer in the plain people and in their rights—under the law. His public utterances are fragmentary, but some of them I find to be epigrammatic and philosophical to a degree. In a speech delivered in the United States Senate March 15, 1854, upon the public-land question, he forecasted a condition that has since arisen, and offered as a substitute for the land-grant measure then pending a bill of his own, which looked mainly to the protection of settlers.

The measure before the Senate proposed to grant alternate sections of United States land to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads, and the Iowa delegation was pushing it to a passage. The frank intention was to give these sections—five miles on either side of the right of way—to railroads to aid in their construction. The arguments were plausible and, in fact, not without logic. As I have said already, it was the abuse of the land-grant system—abuses that there is not space to discuss at the present time—that led to scandals at a later date.

But Brodhead held, with Benton, that the lands belonged to the people, and that they should be permitted to settle upon them without paying a profit to the Government. With the aid of such men as Andrew Johnson, Brodhead gave this theory the first interpretation, which led to a homestead law, which is one of the glories of the Republican Party, and yet Brodhead and Johnson were both Democrats.

In the speech of March 15, already cited, Senator Brodhead said:

"We are here to make general laws for the public good, and the fewer they are in number the better. * * * We can not legislate in regard to particular localities. We can not properly or wisely judge whether a railroad should run east or west or north or south. Some of the old States might want a road to run one way, some another way. * * * Why should we provide for a sale and settlement of the public lands in a particular part of a new State and not another? There is but one rational answer to the question. Every general law will operate injuriously in particular cases, and therefore complaints may seem to be justly made, but it should be remembered that it is much easier to point to defects, to touch blemishes, than to extract them, to demolish an edifice than to erect a convenient substitute."

The "blemishes" are all too apparent at the present time; so, too, is the difficulty of "extracting" them. These conditions have led to the conservation movement, and the conservation movement, like everything else of inherent merit, has attracted the demagogues. What Brodhead predicted has come to pass. He was at agreement with President Andrew Jackson, of whom he was a disciple. Jackson said, in 1832—20 years before the Brodhead speech:

"It can not be doubted that the speedy settlement of these lands constitutes the true interest of the Republic. The wealth and strength of a country are its population, and the best part of the population are the cultivators of the soil. Independent farmers are everywhere the basis of society and the true friends of liberty. It seems to be our true policy that the public lands shall cease, as soon as practicable, to be a source of revenue."

Again the Senator showed himself to be a true prophet when he forecasted the unrest of Kansas and similar communities that were already revealing a tendency to cry out "Wolf!" when there was no wolf. "I am willing," declared the Keystone statesman, "that the western people should go on prospering and complaining. That great philosopher and statesman, Thomas Jefferson, made a remark that may well be applied to the western people and the Western States:

"'So we have gone on,' declared Jefferson, 'and so we shall go on, puzzled and prospering beyond example, and shall continue to growl, to multiply, and to prosper until we exhibit an association powerful, wise, and happy beyond what has yet been seen by man.'"

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with the order previously adopted, adjourned until Thursday, May 9, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an additional estimate of appropriation for the subsistence of the sufferers from the Mississippi River (H. Doc. No. 744); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, referring to House resolution 363, asking information concerning contract and payment thereon under "Increase of the Navy," and advising, as soon as the information can be collated, it will be forwarded to the House (H. Doc. No. 745); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting revised estimate of appropriation under title "Salaries, Bureau of Fisheries, Biological Station, Beaufort, N. C." (H. Doc. No. 743); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HARTMAN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6472) to authorize the Secreatry of the Treasury to sell certain land to the First Baptist Church of Plymouth, Mass., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 670), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARNHART, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) authorizing the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to occupy temporary structures erected by the American Red Cross and to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 671), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENRY of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24194) to create a new division of the western judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Pecos, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 673), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23186) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 672), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 9, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AID TO INDIGENTS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 267) providing for assisting indigent persons, other than natives, in the District of Alaska, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, as amended by an act approved May 14, 1906, and as further amended by an act approved February 6, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That all moneys derived from and collected for liquor licenses, occupation or trade licenses, outside of the incorporated towns in the Territory of Alaska, shall be deposited in the Treasury Department of the United States, there to remain as a separate and distinct fund, to be known as the 'Alaska fund,' and to be wholly devoted to the purposes hereinafter stated in the Territory of Alaska. Thirty per cent of said fund, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be devoted to the establishment and maintenance of public schools in said Territory; 10 per cent of said fund shall be, and is hereby, appropriated and authorized to be expended for the relief of persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident; and all the residue of said fund shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory: Provided, That the clerk of the court of each judicial division of said Territory is authorized, and he is hereby directed, whenever considered necessary, to call upon the United States marshal of said judicial division to aid in the collection of said license moneys by designating regular or special deputies of his office to act as temporary license inspectors, and it shall be the duty of said United States marshal to render such aid; and the said regular or special deputies while actually engaged in the performance of this duty shall receive the same fees and allowances and be paid in the same manner as when performing their regular duties.

"That at the end of each fiscal quarter the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall divide the amount of said 10 per cent of said fund so received during the quarter just ended into four equal parts, and transmit to each of the four United States marshals in Alaska one of said equal amounts.

"That each of said marshals is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money received by him under this act as may, in his discretion, be required for the relief of those persons in his division who are incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and who are indigent and unable to assist and protect themselves: Provided, That each marshal, with his quarterly report, shall submit an itemized statement, with proper vouchers, of all expenditures made by him under this act, and he shall at the time transmit a copy of said statement to the governor of the Territory: Provided further, That any unexpended balance remaining in the hands of any marshal at the end of any quarter shall be returned to the Treasurer of the United States and by him deposited in the said 'Alaska fund,' and the said sum shall be subsequently devoted, first, to meeting any actual requirements for the care and relief of such persons as are provided for in this act in any other division in said Territory wherein the amount allotted for that purpose has proved insufficient; and, second, if there shall be any remainder thereof, said remainder shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory."

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide assistance to persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and for other purposes."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the amendments of the House of Representatives be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

CHESTNUT-TREE BLIGHT (S. DOC. NO. 653).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 30th ultimo, certain information regarding the study and investigation of the so-called chestnut-tree blight, which, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 652).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusion of law filed by the court in the cause of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Louisa, Ky., v. The United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House (H. Con. Res. 46) providing for the printing of 5,000 copies of a wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution for the use of the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of members of the Church Street Methodist Sunday School, of Selma; of the congregations of the Church Street Methodist Church, of Selma; the Jasper Baptist Church, of Walker County; and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Walker County; of the Aid Society of the Alabama Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Selma, all in the State of Alabama; and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Springville, Pa., praying the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., and a memorial of the Central Federated Union, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the adoption of a proposed amendment to the immigration law providing an educational test for all immigrants, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WETMORE. I present a memorial signed by nine prominent cotton-manufacturing corporations of Rhode Island. The memorial is short, and I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

There being no objection, the memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, as follows:

APRIL 22, 1912.

We, the undersigned manufacturers, being actively interested in the manufacture of cotton goods in New England, understand that the Covington amendment, so called, to the bill now before Congress regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal provides that "it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any common carrier by water with which said railroad does or may compete for traffic."

We believe in the regulation of common carriers by the Government and in the authority granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We do not, however, believe in such restriction or limitation of investment in or the development of steamship lines or coastwise trade generally as this amendment provides.

We deem it especially important for the great industries of New England that under proper restrictions railroads should be allowed to develop and maintain transportation by water. This is of the utmost importance in the transportation of the freight to and from New England points and the South, especially in connection with the cotton industry. We believe that, with the opening of the Panama Canal, it is of the greatest importance that there shall be adequate transportation facilities by water between New England and the Gulf cities.

Therefore we protest against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill as unnecessarily impeding the development of transportation by water and as thus retarding the development of New England's commerce with southern and Pacific ports, and we urge New England Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat the amendment.

Sayles Bleacheries, Saylesville, R. I., by Chas. O. Read, general manager; Glenlyon Dye Works, Saylesville, R. I., by Chas. O. Read, treasurer; Lorraine Mfg. Co., Pawtucket, R. I., I. R. MacColl, treasurer; Ponemah Mills, Taftville, Conn., J. A. Atwood, treasurer; Lonsdale Co., Goddard Bros., agents; Hope Co., Goddard Bros., agents; Blackstone Mfg. Co., Goddard Bros., agents; Slater Mfg. Co., Wm. H. Harriss, treasurer; Quidnick Windham Mfg. Co., J. H. Hamble, treasurer.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Local Council of Women of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for vocational education, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from E. A. Beaman, president of the Rhode Island Branch of the National Metal Trades Association, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Quincy, Ill., remonstrating against any increase in second-class postage rates, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Decatur, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of members of the Morgan County Medical Society and of the Medical Club of Jacksonville and of the North Central Illinois Medical Association, of Streator, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURNHAM presented a petition of Local Grange No. 167, Patrons of Husbandry, of Candia, N. H., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES. I present a telegram, in the nature of a petition, in support of the Owen medical bill. I ask that the telegram lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., May 8, 1912.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We hope you will see your way clear to give your hearty support to the Owen bill establishing a national department of health. No bill was ever more clearly in the interests of the masses of the people than this one. It would be an essential aid to the pure-food law. It is expressly declared in this bill that the health service established under it shall have no power to regulate the practice of medicine or practice of healing or to interfere with the rights of citizens to employ a practitioner of their choice. There is not a line in the bill that by any construction would interfere with the personal right or liberties of the individual citizen.

THOMAS BURKE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a telegram, in the nature of a petition, relative to the Owen medical bill. I ask that the telegram lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PONTIAC, MICH., May 8, 1912.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.:

The Pontiac Commercial Association at its regular meeting, May 7, in response to request from people of the city by resolution directed me to request you to vote for the Owen bill, now pending before the United States Senate, and to use your personal influence to secure its enactment.

E. B. LINABURY, Secretary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of Holland Camp, No. 38, Department of Michigan, United Spanish War Veterans, of Holland, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Brant, Mich., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of Hopewell Grange, No. 1398, Patrons of Husbandry, of Cross Roads, Pa., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of members of the Westmoreland County Medical Society, of Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mahoning, Pa., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of Coatesville, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the opening of the Panama Canal to vessels of all tonnage irrespective of ownership, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., and a petition of the congregation of the Congress Street Church, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation governing the granting of licenses for bar rooms in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of William M. Bass, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of the United Brotherhood of Leatherworkers on Horse Goods of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama presented a petition of sundry citizens of Tuscumbia and Sheffield, in the State of Alabama, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Auburn and Michigan Valley, in the State of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Goodland, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for free mail delivery in towns, cities, and villages with a population of 1,000 or over, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Baileyville and Emporia, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Muscotah, Concordia, Basehor, Bonner Springs, Holton, Dresden, Michigan Valley, Stockton, and Hollenberg, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to permit the coloring of oleomargarine in immitation of butter, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DU PONT presented a petition of the executive board of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, of Wilmington, Del., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OWEN. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition, in favor of the national department of health bill. I ask that the telegram lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LINCOLN, NEBR., May 8, 1912.

Senator OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Nebraska State Medical Association, of 1,000 members, in annual session unanimously indorse your bill for a national department of health.

Truly, W. H. WILSON, M. D.,
Chairman of Committee on Legislation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4838) to amend section 96 of the "act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it with amendment.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5387) to construct and place a lightship near Monhegan Island, entrance to Penobscot Bay, Me., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 717) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23407) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 718) thereon.

Mr. OLIVER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22731) to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend Oreille River, Wash., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 719) thereon.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1332) an act regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 720) thereon.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4947. A bill providing for the equalization of Creek allotments (Rept. No. 721); and

S. 3843. A bill granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 722).

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2001) to provide for the award of congressional medals of honor to officers of the naval service, and officers and enlisted men of the Revenue Marine, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 723) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5808) granting right of way across Port Discovery Bay, United States Military Reservation, to the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 724) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a report (No. 725) to accompany the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which, on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them, heretofore reported by him.

COAL-MINING OPERATIONS IN WYOMING.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming. For the reason that the necessity for its passage is immediate, I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out the words "in his discretion," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow the Owl Creek Coal Co. to continue the operation of its mine or mines upon any of the lands embraced in Lander (Wyo.) coal entries Nos. 18 to 49, inclusive, in general conformity with the terms of an order made October 5, 1910, by the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Wyoming in a proceeding wherein the United States of America was plaintiff and the Owl Creek Coal Co., Clara H. Carhart, and Elsie C. Carhart were defendants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the title needs amendment. The word is "authorizing." It should be made to conform to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The word "authorizing" is all right. It does not need amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Secretary of the Interior has no discretion about it. The words "in his discretion" have been cut out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That does not affect the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the title expresses it properly, all right.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CO. CONVEYANCES.

Mr. SMOOT. On May 7 the bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like a little further information in regard to the nature of that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There was a bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] on April 29, 1912, similar to the one which passed the House. The bill in the House was referred to the Judiciary Committee and reported out of that committee. It passed the House and came over here, and was, as I stated, referred to the Committee on Public Lands. My attention was called to it this morning by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, stating that he thought it ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and therefore I make the request. It is in relation to a right of way.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the rules of the House and the rules of the Senate differ materially in regard to the jurisdiction over such matters. I have been waiting with a watchful eye for this proposed legislation to come before the Senate with a view of investigating the merits of the proposal. I would ask that the Senator allow it to go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I will withdraw the request, so that the Senator from Idaho may have an opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah withdraws the request for the present.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: I asked that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] objected. After an examination of the bill, however, he has no objection to such reference, and I now renew my request for the change of reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 6757) granting an increase of pension to John Harrison; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 6758) for the relief of heirs or estate of Joseph Melancon, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GARDNER:

A bill (S. 6759) granting an increase of pension to John D. Perkins (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH (by request):

A bill (S. 6760) for the relief of Nathaniel M. Eldredge; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BURNHAM:

A bill (S. 6761) for the relief of Augustus A. Gibson and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 6762) granting an increase of pension to Richard F. Jacks (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 6763) to authorize the cities of Bangor and Brewer, Me., to construct or reconstruct, wholly or in part, and maintain and operate a bridge across the Penobscot River between said cities, without a draw; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 6764) granting an increase of pension to Lansing B. Nichols (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 6765) providing for the improvement of the roadway from the railroad depot at Fredericksburg, Va., to the national cemetery near Fredericksburg; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas:

A bill (S. 6766) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock, Ark.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 6767) to terminate the Indian Office, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 6768) granting an increase of pension to W. E. Roach;

A bill (S. 6769) granting an increase of pension to Levi H. Hahn; and

A bill (S. 6770) granting a pension to Robert W. Shaffer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEA:

A bill (S. 6771) appropriating $250,000 for levee work on the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) creating a joint commission on public highways, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment proposing to create a joint commission on public highways, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 21279), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BACON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying copy of the findings of the Court of Claims, referred to the Committee on Claims.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I gave notice day before yesterday that I would ask the Senate to consider at this time House bill 9061, known as the eight-hour bill. I am not going, however, to ask for anything more than the reading of the bill this morning, owing to the fact that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] desires to proceed with the river and harbor bill, and the further fact that a Senator is absent who desires to be present when the bill is discussed. I therefore, with this modification of the notice, ask unanimous consent to call up the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is no objection to that if it is for the purpose of simply reading the bill. I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that there is at least one Senator who has not had time to examine the bill with the care that he desires to give to it before it is taken up for serious consideration, and I hope the Senator will not unduly press the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I will not unduly press it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know exactly what the Senator means by that. Perhaps I did not use a very apt term.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator used the correct term, but I want the emphasis in the right place.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wanted to suggest to the Senator, knowing the Senator's persistence when he is in charge of a bill, that probably this bill will not be expedited unless we be given full time to examine it and prepare ourselves to discuss it. We have been pretty busy here of late, some of us at least. I hope the Senator——

Mr. BORAH. I do not think the Senator will have any reason to complain. I propose to give time for the bill, because the more Senators study it the more they will be in favor of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be taken up. Without objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. Has the bill been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has not been read. The bill is taken up as in Committee of the Whole, without objection. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the bill was to be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was the request of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate should proceed with the reading of the bill. It will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to suggest the correction of what is a really verbal inaccuracy. On page 3, in line 25, before the words "this act," I move to insert the words "section 1 of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 3, line 25, before the words "this act," it is proposed to insert the words "section 1 of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I did not understand that we were going to consider the bill now for amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no; the bill is not being considered for amendment. The junior Senator from Idaho simply suggested a verbal amendment, and it may only be considered by unanimous consent, and even that——

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the verbal amendment which has been proposed restated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Idaho.

The Secretary again stated the amendment proposed by Mr. BORAH.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is any objection, the amendment can not be now considered. No amendment can be now considered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. There will be something doing when this bill is really before the Senate. I did not understand that it would be before the Senate now.

Mr. BORAH. I have no desire to urge the amendment if the senior Senator from Idaho objects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. The amendment will not be considered as suggested at the present time, but is withdrawn. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that two amendments which I intend to propose to the bill may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. I ask to have the report upon this bill printed in the RECORD in connection with the reading of the bill, and then I ask that the bill be laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report of the committee on the bill will be printed in the RECORD following the reading of the bill.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 601, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

HOURS OF DAILY SERVICE OF LABORERS AND MECHANICS UPON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, submitted the following report, to accompany House bill 9061:

The Committee on Education and Labor, having had under consideration House bill 9061, report the same favorably without amendment and recommend its passage.

The following is a copy of the bill as it passed the House and is now reported to the Senate:

"An act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That every contract hereafter made to which the United States, any Territory, or the District of Columbia is a party, and every such contract made for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, which may require or involve the employment of laborers or mechanics shall contain a provision that no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work; and every such contract shall stipulate a penalty for each violation of such provision in such contract of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day in which he shall be required or permitted to labor more than eight hours upon said work; and any officer or person designated as inspector of the work to be performed under any such contract, or to aid in enforcing the fulfillment thereof, shall, upon observation or investigation, forthwith report to the proper officer of the United States, or of any Territory, or of the District of Columbia, all violations of the provisions of this act directed to be made in every such contract, together with the name of each laborer or mechanic who has been required or permitted to labor in violation of such stipulation and the day of such violation, and the amount of the penalties imposed according to the stipulation in any such contract shall be directed to be withheld for the use and benefit of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Territory contracting by the officer or person whose duty it shall be to approve the payment of the moneys due under such contract, whether the violation of the provisions of such contract is by the contractor or any subcontractor. Any contractor or subcontractor aggrieved by the withholding of any penalty as hereinbefore provided shall have the right within six months thereafter to appeal to the head of the department making the contract on behalf of the United States or the Territory, and in the case of a contract made by the District of Columbia to the commissioners thereof, who shall have power to review the action imposing the penalty, and in all such appeals from such final order whereby a contractor or subcontractor may be aggrieved by the imposition of the penalty hereinbefore provided such contractor or subcontractor may within six months after decision by such head of a department of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia file a claim in the Court of Claims, which shall have jurisdiction to hear and decide the matter in like manner as in other cases before said court.

"SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall apply to contracts for transportation by land or water, or for the transmission of intelligence, or for such materials or articles as may usually be bought in open market, except armor and armor plate, whether made to conform to particular specifications or not, or for the purchase of supplies by the Government, whether manufactured to conform to particular specifications or not: Provided, That all classes of work which have been, are now, or may hereafter be performed by the Government shall, when done by contract, by individuals, firms, or corporations for on behalf of the United States or any of the Territories or the District of Columbia, be performed in accordance with the terms and provisions of this act. The President, by Executive order, may waive the provisions and stipulations in this act as to any specific contract or contracts during time of war or a time when war is imminent. No penalties shall be imposed for any violation of such provision in such contract due to any emergency caused by fire, famine, or flood, by danger to life or to property, or by other extraordinary event or condition on account of which the President shall subsequently declare the violation to have been justifiable. Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or modify the act entitled 'An act relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and of the District of Columbia,' being chapter 352 of the laws of the Fifty-second Congress, approved August 1, 1892, or to apply to work done under contracts made prior to the passage of this act."

The constitutionality of this measure has been discussed at great length before the committee by able counsel, especially as against its constitutionality. There does not seem to the committee, however, to be any serious doubt as to the power of Congress to pass such a measure. The bill provides that every contract hereafter made to which the United States is a party, and every contract made for and on behalf of the United States which may require or involve the employment of laborers or mechanics, shall contain a provision that no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work covered by the contract in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day.

The sole question would seem to be, may the Government exercise its discretion in entering into a contract and require terms which preclude men working for more than eight hours for any calendar day? The numerous questions which have arisen, and which have been many times before the court and most ably discussed before the committee relative to prohibiting individuals and concerns entering into contracts limiting the hours of work, can not be relevant or controlling here. The Government has the right to contract, and it would seem that it would have the right to decline to enter into a contract unless the terms of the same are satisfactory to it as to any contracting party.

The most serious question, and the one to which the more earnest consideration was given, is as to the policy of such a measure. Is it wise for the Government to refuse to contract except upon such terms as will prevent the laborer from working more than eight hours? This in fact brings up the question of an eight-hour day, its moral and economic effects upon society, for the influence and effect of this law will greatly augment the strength of the movement for a universal eight-hour day. The friends and supporters of the measure recognize the effect in this respect which this law is bound to have. It will no doubt in many ways reach in effect beyond the immediate contracts entered into by the Government.

Much has been said as to the inconvenience which would result to the employers in establishing the eight-hour day. Doubtless in some instances and to some extent this inconvenience, necessitating in some instances rearrangement, will follow. It is perhaps true, also, that in some instances there may result a greater expense to the Government. But these things we believe are to be considered as of minor importance compared to the general benefit to be derived from an eight-hour day for laborers. We believe it means better work, better citizens, and in the end far better for society.

Prof. Rao, in his careful study of the eight-hour day and speaking particularly of the eight-hour day in Victoria, says:

"Of course differences in the value of product are not the same thing as differences in its amount, and the figures must be taken for what they are worth. Only I think they tend to support the conclusion that the shortening of the day to eight hours has not been followed by any corresponding loss of product, but rather—whatever it be due to—by an increase of product and even by an increase per hand employed. * * * It is, I think, beyond question that the shortening of the day to eight hours has improved the efficiency of labor during the time employed both as to quantity and quality, and there is every probability that in some trades and some particular kinds of work this cause alone would lead to as much being done in the short day as the long one."

Again the authority says:

"What use does the workingman of Victoria make of the leisure he has obtained through the eight-hour day? The 'go' and energy he is said by so many observers to put into his work is itself good evidence that he does not spend his time in vicious dissipation. If a shorter day in the workshop meant only a longer evening in the tavern he could not possibly show such signs of invigoration, and his day's work and his day's wages would soon have hopelessly declined. The general opinion in Victoria is that the habits of workingmen have improved and not deteriorated through the short hours. By leaving early in the afternoon they are able to live out in the suburbs in neat cottages with little gardens behind them which are almost invariably owned by their occupiers and they spend much of their leisure tending their little garden or in some outdoor sport or with their families. The two first effects of the 10-hour act in this country were the multiplication of mechanics' institutes—night schools and popular lectures on the one hand and the multiplication of the garden allotments on the other. Work people had neither time nor energy for such pursuits before—the only resource of the languid is the tavern. But with the longer evening at their disposal it became worth while devising other ways of enjoying it and the favorite among the English factory hands seemed to be the mechanics' institute in winter and the garden allotment in summer."

The conclusion of the author upon this subject may be stated as follows, and practically in his own language:

The evidence gathered and the facts at hand lead us to believe that the approach of a general eight-hour day of labor has no blight to cast on the economic prosperity either of the working class or of the Nation at large, while it will be certain to contribute greatly to the moral and social elevation of both.

It would be much better, no doubt, if an eight-hour day could be secured without legislation. Legislation in such matters should ordinarily be postponed long enough to give every opportunity for the business world to adjust itself to proper rules and conditions. It would be better for the employer and employee to adjust the hours of labor without the rigid and positive provisions of the law. If it could be brought about in this way peculiar and exceptional conditions could be arranged for and taken care of which it is impossible to do under the law. A law universal in its application, as it must be, makes it necessary for some concerns or employers to suffer embarrassment for a time. But it is believed that legislation is now necessary. This legislation has been up for discussion now for more than 10 years before the Congress of the United States. The business concerns have had ample notice. Those who can best afford to give an eight-hour day and who have most influence by their stand in retarding the movement seem determined not to yield until compelled to do so by law. A distinguished member of Parliament once said while the eight-hour law was under discussion in that country:

"Employers would never introduce the eight-hour law out of their own accord. In all my 40 years of experience, I have never known them of their own accord to either raise wages or shorten hours. And nothing can make the eight-hour day general but legislation."

This is stated too broadly so far as this country is concerned, for many employers have adopted the eight-hour day. But while individual employers have adopted the rule they can ill afford to abide by the rule if their more powerful competitors refuse to do so. So long as the large and dominant business concerns stand in the way of this movement there can be no permanent or general results obtained. Although individuals in particular concerns may receive the benefits by reason of the eight-hour day in those particular concerns, there can be no general benefit from a general rule, and, moreover, in the end these particular individuals must inevitably go back to the longer hours. Too much can not be said in favor or in commendation of many of the employers of labor in this country for the manner in which they have come to treat their employees—the improved sanitary conditions and the voluntary shortening of the hours. But what they voluntarily do others equally able to do refuse to do. It follows, therefore, that these individual employers seeking to better conditions are loaded with an extra burden which they ought not to bear.

No better illustration of the refusal of many of our industries to yield to nothing less than a rigid and exacting rule may be found in a most instructive report lately made by the Department of Commerce and Labor in the steel industry, a part of which is quoted, and it is as follows:

"The fact that stands out most strikingly in any study of the labor conditions in the iron and steel industry in the United States is the unusually long schedule of working hours to which the larger number of the employees in this industry are subject.

"During May, 1910, the period covered by this investigation, 50,000, or 29 per cent, of the 173,000 employees of blast furnaces and steel works and rolling mills covered by this report customarily worked 7 days per week, and 20 per cent of them worked 84 hours or more per week, which, in effect, means a 12-hour working day every day in the week, including Sunday. The evil of 7-day work was particularly accentuated by the fact developed in the investigation that the 7-day working week was not confined to the blast-furnace department, where there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation, and in which department 88 per cent of the employees worked 7 days a week, but it was also found that, to a considerable extent, in other departments, where no such metallurgical necessity can be claimed, productive work was carried on on Sunday just as on other days of the week. For example, in some establishments the Bessemer converters, the open-hearth furnaces, and blooming, rail, and structural mills were found operating 7 days a week for commercial reasons only.

"The hardship of a 12-hour day and a 7-day week is still further increased by the fact that every week or two weeks, as the case may be, when the employees on the day shift are transferred to the night shift, and vice versa, employees remain on duty without relief either 18 or 24 consecutive hours, according to the practice adopted for the change of shift. The most common plan to effect this change of shift is to work one shift of employees on the day of change through the entire 24 hours, the succeeding shift working the regular 12 hours when it comes on duty. In some instances the change is effected by having one shift remain on duty 18 hours and the succeeding shift work 18 hours. During the time that one shift is on duty, of course, the employees on the other shift have the same number of hours of relief from duty.

"That much of the Sunday labor which has been prevalent in the steel industry is no more necessary than in other industries is shown conclusively by the fact that at the time of the investigation made in 1910 by this bureau into the conditions of labor in the Bethlehem Steel Works the president of the steel corporation directed the rigid enforcement of a resolution adopted three years previous, cutting out a large part of Sunday work except in the blast-furnace department. Even in the blast-furnace department, where there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation day and night throughout seven days of the week, there is practically nothing except the desire to economize in the expense of production that has prevented the introduction of a system that would give each employee one day of rest out of the seven.

"Since the beginning of the present investigation, however, this matter of abolishing seven-day work for the individual employees in the blast furnaces, as well as in other departments of the industry, has received the attention of the American Iron and Steel Institute, and through a committee of that organization a plan has been proposed which gives each employee one day of rest each week. A number of the plants throughout the country have, at the instance of the institute, adopted this plan or some modification of it, and have successfully operated it for several months. A thorough discussion of these plans and of their value in solving the problem to which they are applied will be found in the volume dealing with the general conditions of labor in the industry.

"During the investigation those in charge of the plants have in their discussions with representatives of the bureau frequently emphasized the fact that the men working these very long hours are not kept busy all the time. To a considerable extent this is perfectly true; but the employees in question are on duty and subject to orders during the entire period, and they are not, except in rare instances, allowed to leave the plant. It should not be overlooked that it is not simply the character or the continuity of the work, but the fact that in the case of the 12-hour-a-day man one-half of each 24 hours—more than three-fourths of his waking hours—is spent on duty in the mills, which is of significance to the worker and his family. Nothing has been done by the manufacturers nor have any proposals been made to lessen the proportion of men working 72 hours or more per week. It was found in this investigation that nearly 43 per cent of the 173,000 employees in the iron and steel industry were working at least 72 hours per week, or 12 hours per day for six days a week. This proportion remains unchanged, being unaffected by the plan to give the men who were working 84 hours per week one day of rest in seven.

"An added significance attaches to the conditions of labor here described as characteristic of the iron and steel industry when we consider that the general tendency in other industries for years past has been toward a shorter working-day. Years ago the 10-hour day became almost a standard; since that time further reductions have brought the working-day to 9 and in many cases to 8 hours, and this reduction has been accompanied by a part holiday on Saturday. It is, therefore, in striking contrast to this general tendency in other industries to find in a great basic industry, such as that part of the iron and steel industry covered in this report, that approximately only 14 per cent of the 173,000 employees work less than 60 hours per week and almost 43 per cent work 72 hours or over per week.

"Another striking characteristic of the labor conditions in the iron and steel industry is the large proportion of unskilled workmen in the labor force. These unskilled workmen are very largely recruited from the ranks of recent immigrants. For the industry as a whole, not far from one-half of the 91,463 employees in the productive iron and steel occupations included within this investigation were of the class of unskilled workmen. In the blast-furnace department, the largest single department in the industry, more than two-thirds of the 24,722 employees in productive occupations were unskilled laborers, a large proportion of whom do not yet speak or understand English; and even in the South the number of immigrants employed in the industry is rapidly increasing.

"Taking the employees in all occupations in the industry, nearly 60 per cent are foreign born, and nearly two-thirds of the foreign born are of the Slavic races. Large as is the proportion that unskilled labor forms of the total labor force in the iron and steel industry, steel experts have noted the fact that the tendency of recent years has been steadily toward the reduction of the number of highly skilled men employed and the establishment of the general wage on the basis of common or unskilled labor. Nor is this tendency likely to diminish, since each year sees a wider use of mechanical appliances which unskilled labor can easily be trained to handle.

"Of the total of 172,706 employees, 13,868, or 8.03 per cent, earned less than 14 cents per hour (throughout this report the earnings given represent the actual amount earned by the employees less the amount paid helpers and other employees for their assistance, where work is done on a contract basis. No account is taken of deductions for hospital or medical fees and similar deductions for which the employee receives some return); 20,537, or 11.89 per cent, earned 14 and under 16 cents; and 51,417, or 29.77 per cent, earned 16 and under 18 cents. Thus 85,812, or 49.69 per cent of all the employees, received less than 18 cents per hour. Those earning 18 and under 25 cents per hour numbered 46,132, or 26.71 per cent, while 40,762, or 23.61 per cent, earned 25 cents and over. A few very highly skilled employees received $1.25 per hour; and those receiving 50 cents and over per hour numbered 4,403, or 2.55 per cent of all employees.

"In general it may be said that earnings of less than 18 cents per hour represent unskilled labor. The group earning 18 and under 25 cents per hour represents semiskilled workmen, while those earning 25 cents and over per hour are skilled employees. The most common rate per hour for unskilled labor in the New England district was 15 cents; in the Eastern district, 13 and 14 cents; in the Pittsburgh district, 16 and 17 cents; in the Great Lakes and Middle West district, 15, 16, and 17 cents; and in the Southern district, 10, 12½, 13, and 13½ cents.

"A brief summary of the conditions as regards earnings, hours, and days worked per week in the industry is given in the table which follows. It is given here as preliminary to a more detailed examination of the results of the investigation, department by department.

Summary of earnings and hours of labor, by branches of the industry.

[1] Not including 31 employees who worked 2 days only and 2 employees who worked 3 days only.
[2] Not including 2 employees who worked 1 day only.
[3] Actual number of plants. The total number of plants can not be obtained by simple addition of the number of plants having the specified departments as many plants have two or more departments. For example, many plants with blast furnaces have also steel works and rolling mills.
[4] Not including 2 employees who worked 1 day only, 31 employees who worked 2 days only, and 2 employees who worked 3 days only.

"The facts presented in the above table are of such simple character that no explanation is necessary. It is sufficient merely to point out the wide differences which exist between the various departments. The blast furnaces show the lowest general level of earnings, 65.96 per cent of all the employees in that branch of the industry earning less than 18 cents per hour, 31.7 per cent earning less than 16 cents per hour, and only 7.7 per cent, or 1 man in 13, earning as much as 2 cents per hour. More than four times as many employees earned less than 16 cents per hour as earned 25 cents or more per hour. The highest general level of earnings shown are for the puddling mills and crucible furnaces, where 51.46 per cent of the employees earn 25 cents and over per hour and 27.89 per cent earn under 18 cents per hour. Even greater differences exist between the different branches of the industry as regards working time. The blast furnaces and open-hearth furnaces show the longest schedule of working hours, and the tube mills, puddling mills, and crucible furnaces decidedly the shortest."

According to the dividends paid, as shown by the reports of the United States Steel Co., there was certainly little reason for this exacting service. Every right-thinking American citizen must take pride in the prosperity and the success of our business concerns, as their prosperity is indispensable to the success and the prosperity of the people generally. But when such enormous wealth is amassed, partly, at least, through such a cruel and brutal system of industrial slavery this Government is bound in its own defense, for its citizenship is its life, to interpose between the strong and the weak and exert its influence, both moral and legal, to rescue its citizenship from such conditions. No man can meet the obligations and discharge the duties of citizenship in a free government who is broken in spirit and racked in body through such industrial peonage. Even in the strength of his early manhood he has not the opportunity or time to prepare himself for the duties of citizenship, and before he has reached the prime of life under such conditions, sodden in mind and broken in health, he is cast off as a useless hulk—a burden and a curse to society and a menace to the Government. It is just as much the duty of the Government, when it can do so, to protect its citizens from such outrageous treatment as it is to protect a citizen from the burglar or the highwayman. Everyone knows and everyone is willing to discuss what the duty and obligations of the citizen are toward the Government. But one of the proposition which can no longer be postponed in this country is: What is the duty of the Government toward the citizen? If these laws regulating the hours of labor come, therefore, they come not simply because laboring men ask for them; they come because conditions in the industrial world make it impossible to ignore that request.

It has been urged before the committee and it will be argued by many that this bill will greatly disturb business; that it will close some business concerns; and that as it is a step toward a general eight-hour law it will cause business disturbance generally—in other words, that it is revolutionary. "Revolutionary" is an old and familiar friend in the upward movement of the human family, and while he is always on hand he has not so far been an entire success as a prophet. When the question of shorter hours was being discussed many years ago in England almost every economist and most of the leading men of the day condemned it. The great leader, Richard Cobden, declared it would stop every factory engine in the country. But the prophecy remains unfulfilled, notwithstanding the shorter hours were brought about through legislation. No doubt some business concerns will suffer a temporary inconvenience or loss. But in the long run the loss will likely not be nearly so great as anticipated, and even if so, when weighed against the general good it ought not to prevail against such legislation. Some one has said that "the State is justified in passing any law or even in doing any single act which, without ulterior consequences, adds to the sum total of human happiness. * * * The question is a question of balances of advantages to the public. If interference benefits 20,000 persons while noninterference benefits only 10,000, the State's duty is to interfere."

This rule may not be sound in all its application, but it is certainly sound when the manhood and the womanhood of American citizenship are involved.

We call attention in this connection to the message of President Taft, communicated to Congress at the beginning of this Congress, December 6, 1910:

"Since 1868 it has been the declared purpose of this Government to favor the movement for an 8-hour day by a provision of law that none of the employees employed by or on behalf of the Government should work longer than 8 hours in every 24. The first declaration of this view was not accompanied with any penal clause or with any provision for its enforcement, and, though President Grant by a proclamation twice attempted to give it his sanction and to require the officers of the Government to carry it out, the purpose of the framers of the law was ultimately defeated by a decision of the Supreme Court holding that the statute as drawn was merely a direction of the Government to its agents and did not invalidate a contract made in behalf of the Government which provided in the contract for labor for a day of longer hours than 8. Thereafter, in 1892, the present 8-hour law was passed, which provides that the services and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now or may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor on any of the public works of the United States and of the said District of Columbia is hereby restricted to 8 hours in any one calendar day. This law has been construed to limit the application of the requirement to those who are directly employed by the Government or to those who are employed upon public works situate upon land owned by the United States. The construction prevented its application to Government battleships and other vessels built in private shipyards and to heavy guns and armor plate contracted for and made at private establishments.

"The proposed act provides that no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by a contract with the United States in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours a day in any one calendar day.

"It seems to me from the past history that the Government has been committed to a policy of encouraging the limitation of the day's work to eight hours in all works of construction initiated by itself, and it seems to me illogical to maintain a difference between Government work done on Government soil and Government work done in a private establishment, when the work is of such large dimensions and involves the expenditure of much labor for a considerable period, so that the private manufacturer may adjust himself and his establishment to the special terms of employment that he must make with his workmen for this particular job. To require, however, that every small contract of manufacture entered into by the Government should be carried out by the contractor with men working at eight hours would be to impose an intolerable burden upon the Government by limiting its sources of supply and excluding altogether the great majority of those who would otherwise compete for its business.

"The proposed act recognizes this in the exceptions which it makes to contracts 'for transportation by land or water, for the transmission of intelligence, and for such materials or articles as may be bought in the open market, whether made to conform to particular specifications or not, or for the purchase of supplies by the Government, whether manufactured to conform to particular specifications or not.'

"I recommend that instead of enacting the proposed bill, the meaning of which is not clear and definite and might be given a construction embarrassing to the public interest, the present act be enlarged by providing that public works shall be construed to include not only buildings and work upon public grounds, but also ships, armor, and large guns when manufactured in private yards or factories.

"One of the great difficulties in enforcing this eight-hour law is that its application under certain emergencies becomes exceedingly oppressive, and there is a great temptation to subordinate officials to evade it. I think that it would be wiser to allow the President, by Executive order, to declare an emergency in special instances in which the limitation might not apply, and, in such cases, to permit the payment by the Government of extra compensation for the time worked each day in excess of eight hours. I may add that my suggestions in respect to this legislation have the full concurrence of the Commissioner of Labor."

Ex-President McKinley, speaking in the House of Representatives on August 28, 1890, said:

"And the Government of the United States ought, finally and in good faith, to set this example of eight hours as constituting a day's work required of laboring men in the service of the United States. The tendency of the times the world over is for shorter hours for labor—shorter hours in the interest of health, shorter hours in the interest of humanity, shorter hours in the interest of the home and the family—and the United States can do no better service to labor and to its own citizens than to set the example to States, to corporations, and to individuals employing men by declaring that, so far as the Government is concerned, eight hours shall constitute a day's work and be all that is required of its laboring force.

"Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this bill should be passed. My colleague, Mr. Morey, has stated what we owe the family in this connection, and Cardinal Manning, in a recent article, spoke noble words on the general subject when he said:

"'But, if the domestic life of the people be vital above all; if the peace, the purity of homes, the education of children, the duties of wives and mothers, the duties of husbands and fathers be written in the natural law of mankind; and if these things are sacred far beyond anything that can be sold in the market, then I say if the hours of labor resulting from the unregulated sale of a man's strength and skill shall lead to the destruction of domestic life, to the neglect of children, to turning wives and mothers into living machines and of fathers and husbands into—what shall I say—creatures of burden? I will not say any other word—who rise up before the sun and come back when it is set, wearied and able only to take food and lie down and rest, the domestic life of man exists no longer and we dare not go on in this path.'

"Mr. Speaker, we owe something to the care, the elevation, the dignity, and the education of labor. We owe something to the workingmen and the families of the workingmen throughout the United States, who constitute the large body of our population, and this bill is a step in the right direction."

Ex-President Roosevelt, in his annual message to the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, said:

"So far as practicable, under the conditions of Government work, provisions should be made to render the enforcement of the eight-hour law easy and certain. In all industries carried on directly or indirectly for the United States Government, women and children should be protected from excessive hours of labor, from night work, and from work under insanitary conditions. The Government should provide in its contracts that all work should be done under fair conditions, and, in addition to setting a high standard, should uphold it by proper inspection, extending if necessary to the subcontractors. The Government should forbid all night work for women and children, as well as excessive overtime."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will now be laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill will remain on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, certainly; but the consideration of it is dispensed with for the present time.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first acted upon. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I now yield the floor to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words regarding the general bill and also the Mississippi River situation as accentuating the agitation which has been conducted for many years for a different method of organizing the work respecting the regulation of river flow.

It has been the custom of Congress to include both rivers and harbors in one bill, called the river and harbor bill. It is the contention of those who desire a reform in the method of dealing with this subject that there should be one bill relating to harbors and another relating to rivers. It is estimated that the entire expenditure upon both rivers and harbors in the history of our Government have been about $623,000,000. I am unable to say what proportion of that sum has been spent upon harbors on our ocean coasts and the Great Lakes and what proportion has been spent upon the rivers, but I have a statement of the Engineer Corps of the Army regarding the segregation of this large sum as between the different coasts and watersheds of the country. Of this $623,000,000, the sum of $167,000,000 has been spent upon the rivers and harbors on the Atlantic coast, and I presume the larger part of that has been spent upon harbors.

On the Gulf coast, omitting the Mississippi, the sum of $53,000,000 has been expended; on the Pacific coast $41,000,000, $15,000,000 of that sum being spent upon the Sacramento Valley and southern Pacific coast and $26,000,000 on the rivers and harbors of the northern Pacific coast. Upon the Great Lakes the sum of $105,000,000 has been expended. On the Mississippi River basin, including the Mississippi and all its tributaries, the expenditure has been $257,000,000, and that sum is segregated as follows: On the Mississippi up to St. Louis, omitting the Ohio River, $108,000,000; on the Mississippi River above St. Louis, omitting the Missouri, $57,000,000; on the Missouri River, $16,000,000; and on the Ohio River, $76,000,000. Of course this entire sum of $257,000,000, so far as the Mississippi basin is concerned, has been expended upon rivers and not upon harbors, except possibly some expenditures near New Orleans.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator from Nevada how much of this $623,000,000 has been wasted, and if he has any report or document showing that fact?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I know of no document showing any waste. I have no doubt that each individual project has been conducted with the efficiency and the economy that have usually characterized the Corps of Engineers of the Army in the prosecution of this great work; but I also have no doubt that a large amount of money has been wasted as the result of legislation having little regard to the proper relation of projects, the dovetailing one with another, and such a logical arrangement and sequence of projects as to result in a continuous system of related waterways, embracing the standardizing of the channels and the maintenance of a more equal flow, with a view to navigation by vessels of standard draft. I think the waste has been in the system rather than in the construction of the particular projects upon which Congress has instructed the Engineer Corps of the Army to enter.

Mr. GORE. One further question. I ask whether the Senator has any report or document showing the amount of annual commerce or traffic on the rivers included in the Mississippi River Basin?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There are such documents, but I do not have them at present available. I will state, generally, that there has been a steady decline in the commerce on the Mississippi River. That has been due to the competition of the railroads, and mainly due to the unfair competition of the railroads. The methods which they have pursued have been to reduce, during the navigating season, their rates to such a point as to make inland water transportation noncompensatory, and then to restore their rates during the winter season, when the rivers are not competitors, and thus recoup their losses. By these methods they have practically driven off all the steamboat lines that used to exist. Gradually wharf facilities have decayed, the terminals have been abandoned, boats have been laid aside to rot, and the result is that, whilst the river has been improved for navigation, it has been without those advantages of terminal facilities and proper cooperation with the railway systems of the country to enable waterway transportation to exist. I may say that contemporary with any reform which we shall execute in the method of developing our waterways there must be legislation which will prohibit this unfair competition upon the part of the railroads and thus compel proper cooperation between the two public agencies, the two public servants—the railway servants on the one hand and the waterway servants on the other.

Mr. GORE. Under the last interstate-commerce act, passed about two years ago, and which, I believe, is called the Townsend-Elkins Act, such manipulation on the part of the railroads is prohibited by that statute, is it not?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. GORE. That act provided that when a railroad reduces a rate to meet water competition it can not again raise the rate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But that will have to be supplemented by additional legislation compelling the proper cooperation upon the part of the railroads, and particularly by legislation that will result in the restoration of the transfer facilities and terminal facilities and an entirely new equipment of boats and barges, the old one having disappeared. This must be accompanied by such continuous and logical and consecutive development of our waterways as will make them as safe for steamboats and barges and as continuous for their transportation as are our railroad lines.

One of the things we contend for is that it is just as essential to have all these facilities for the waterways as it is to have stations, sidetracks, and terminal facilities for railroads; and it is just as illogical to expect good work from a waterway developed as our waterways have been, without protecting it against unfair competition and without securing proper terminal sites and facilities and proper transfer facilities, as it would be to expect good service from a railway which every fifty or a hundred miles has a break of a mile or two in the track or from a railroad which has no sidetracks, no terminal facilities, and no transfer facilities.

The waste and the lack of result come from the methods that have been pursued, and for those methods the executive department of the Government is not responsible. The legislative department of the Government is responsible, and we have reason to believe that proper legislation has for many years been hamstrung by the great railway systems of the country, Congress acting not consciously, but unconsciously, under influences directed by them in such a way as not to interfere with the expenditure of money, but to prevent that money from being made effective in securing through waterway transportation.

Now, Mr. President, I intend to confine myself this morning mainly to the consideration of the Mississippi River Basin. That basin is bounded by this blue line [indicating on map] and embraces pretty nearly two-thirds of the area of the country. It is bounded by the Allegheny and the Appalachian Mountains on the east, by the Rocky Mountains on the west, and almost all its tributaries on the west take their sources in the Rocky Mountain region, the arid and semiarid region, whose waters come from the melting snows, whilst the tributaries on the east have their source in the Allegheny and the Appalachian Ranges. This vast watershed pours its water into these various tributaries and then finally into the Mississippi River, and the entire basin discharges itself between these narrow boundaries in Louisiana and Mississippi, represented upon the map [indicating], a space of only a few miles.

Now, you can imagine that if that entire surface were concreted, so that it would shed water easily, so that there would be no absorption of water by the soil, so that there would be no obstruction of the flow of the water by the cultivation of the soil or by the natural absorption of the forests and forest cover, how quickly that water would rush down to the Gulf; and the tendency of our civilization has been to increase the run-off. That entire area, of course, has not been covered with a concrete surface, but we have been engaged in the destruction of forests whose moisture-absorbing qualities are well known and the verdure of which absorbs immense quantities of water.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether, as a matter of fact, in prairie countries where the surface has been broken by cultivation and the prairie sod disturbed the tendency is not to hold the water more than to precipitate it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think so. I think that has been a counteracting tendency. I think proper cultivation of the soil increases its absorbent qualities.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Senator made an estimate or has he the information as to the comparative quantity of timber within that area of the Mississippi Basin between periods—the present and past?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. Whether there is as much timber there now as there ever was within the knowledge of anyone?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think so.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Senator ascertained any facts which do give data upon that question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not any available now, because I do not intend to take much time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator. I thought perhaps he had it, because if we discuss it I will go into the question of the comparative quantity of timber at the different periods, for the purpose of showing that there never was a time when there was as much timber standing on the ground in that area as there is now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, Mr. President, the problem before us, then, is to stay the rapid run-off of the water that falls from the heavens and to prevent as much of that water as possible during the period of the flood from coming down and vexing the five or six States within whose borders there are about 30,000,000 acres of alluvial land, called swamp land—about 20,000,000 acres—a region as rich as the region of the Nile, and only needing protection from these extraordinary floods to be capable of wonderful production.

You will observe that on the west the rivers that enter into the Mississippi are the Red River, the Arkansas, the Missouri with all its tributaries—the Missouri extending far into Montana and its tributaries embracing many of the States of the arid and semiarid region.

The problem, therefore, is to save that water as much as possible either by promoting the natural absorption of the soil through forest cover and through improved and scientific methods of cultivation which will have that in view or through artificial storage, that artificial storage to be used beneficially for purposes of irrigation or the development of water power.

Here let me say that whilst the irrigation problem at present relates only to the arid and semiarid region, yet the irrigation of the future will doubtless be extended to the humid region, just as it is to-day in Europe, for you will find that in humid Germany almost all their streams are utilized for irrigation as well as for navigation, this irrigation vastly increasing the production of the soil, because it is a scientific application of moisture to cultivation instead of the accidental application of the rains as they fall from the heavens.

Then, as to the development of water power, we all realize that electric power is entering more commonly into the general and common lives of our people than almost any other element. It is used for heating; it is used for cooking; it is used for power; and electric power is now being used in almost every household, and its use is being graudally extended in various forms.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Senator ascertained how much, if any, electric power has been placed upon the market or made available to the people out of the great, immense withdrawals for that purpose which have been existing for some years?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I beg the Senator to excuse me from entering into questions of controversy of that kind. My purpose is simply to make a general statement. I wish to give way to the Senator from Mississippi, whose region is particularly interested in this matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not desire to interrupt the Senator, to his annoyance. I did not know just exactly how he desired to present the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will be glad to take up that matter hereafter.

Now, Mr. President, what is necessary further than arresting this water and staying its progress above in the various watersheds tributary to the Mississippi River by the promotion of natural and artificial storage, by the use of flood waters for irrigation and their storage for the development of water power? Of course the work that has been going on in the lower reaches of the river for years under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission is absolutely essential. That work consists of channel dredging, bank revetment, and levee building.

Bank revetment consists in protecting the banks, composed of alluvial soil, which melts like sugar under the impact of water, by great mats of willow which are constructed on the surface of the water near the banks and then lined along the banks and sunk by imposing rock upon them. Those willow mats, which are very durable in their character, protect the banks from erosion and bank caving, and in that way the levees which are built back of the banks and are intended to save the interior region from these annual overflows are protected. Without these bank revetments the force of the flood would cave the banks, the caving banks would gradually undermine the levees, and all would go.

That work has been going on under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission, a commission organized under the direction of Congress, composed of Army engineers and civil engineers and acting in cooperation with the various States and levee districts in such a way as to have certain work done by the National Government and certain work done by the States and levee districts.

It was determined some time ago that it would cost about $80,000,000 to complete the work the National Government had in contemplation in the lower Mississippi, from the Ohio down, and it was determined to do that work at the rate of about $4,000,000 annually for 20 years. The mistake was in not making a shorter period and increasing the annual amount. Had that been done the disastrous effects of the present flood would have been averted. The estimate is that the present flood will cause a loss in the production of that entire region of between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000 this year alone. Of the 20,000,000 acres of alluvial land in that region about 8,000,000 acres are overflowed, and of that 8,000,000, assuming that only 3,000,000 acres have been under cultivation and that the total annual product of every acre amounts to $100, you would have a loss of $300,000,000, and if the total product of every acre amounts to $50 you would have a total loss of $150,000,000.

It is feared that the flood will not subside in time to permit even a partial cultivation of this area during the coming year, and thus we will have a total loss in production of between one and two hundred million dollars in a single year, caused by the failure of the National Government to expend $80,0000,000 within 10 years instead of, according to its present plan, $80,000,000 within 20 years.

Now, the system of cooperation which has existed between the National Government and the various States is that the National Government is taking care of the dredging and revetment and the States have assumed a constantly increasing portion of the levee building, so much so that out of the total expenditure last year on the part of the National Government of pretty nearly $4,000,000 in the lower Mississippi, only $130,000 was expended by the National Government for levee building. We have been constantly decreasing the amount and calling upon the levee districts to increase their proportion. Had the National Government this last year expended, instead of $130,000, one million and a half for levee protection, it is probable that the consequences of this flood would have been averted. As it is we are called upon now to expend a million and a half dollars to repair the crevasses that have been made by the flood.

Mr. President, there is another thing that has characterized this entire work, and that is a lack of harmony and a lack of cooperation between the various services of the Government that relate to the development or the use of water. Now, what are those services? First, we have the Reclamation Service, embracing 15 States, the arid and semiarid States, embracing within their jurisdiction all of the tributaries of the Mississippi to the west. That is a vast service. It has expended over $60,000,000 in irrigation works. It has constructed the highest dam in the world. The problems which it has met are greater problems even than those we have been obliged to meet in the Panama Canal. Yet there is no system by which the Reclamation Service, having jurisdiction over the upper reaches of the great tributaries of the Mississippi, can be brought into teamwork with the Engineer Corps of the Army having jurisdiction of the lower reaches of the Mississippi. In addition to the Reclamation Service, we have the Forestry Service, which has entered upon the work of conserving the forests, and Congress has gone so far as to authorize the expenditure of $11,000,000 in the purchase of forests within the watersheds of navigable rivers, notably the White Mountains and in the Appalachian Range. That work is being conducted by a commission composed partly of executive officials and partly of Members of the Senate and of the House. Yet that commission is not engaged in any teamwork, or cooperative work, with the Corps of Engineers of the Army; it is not instructed to consult with it, although the problem which it has in hand is the purchase of forests which are regarded as essential to the preservation of the watersheds of navigable streams.

The only power under which we claim the right to enter upon the acquisition of these vast areas is the commerce power of the Constitution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator to say that there is no teamwork between the irrigation authorities and the authorities in charge of the work on the lower Mississippi.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I recall it, however, an amendment was made to the irrigation act at a recent session of Congress, in which some of the irrigation work was placed under the jurisdiction of Army engineers. Will the Senator explain to what extent that was done?

Mr. NEWLANDS. When it was proposed to expedite the completion of some of the irrigation projects of the West by a loan from the Treasury, to be reimbursed subsequently by the sale of the arid lands reclaimed, provision was made in the act that an examination of all the irrigation projects should be made by a board of engineers of the Army, with a view to their giving their findings and advice as to the places in which the $20,000,000 should be expended. Their cooperation was confined to that, and to that alone. They were not charged with the duty of aiding in the construction of the works; they were not brought into general consultation with the Reclamation Service. Their work was confined simply to an examination of the various projects and a recommendation to the President.

I may say that that instance of cooperation shows how happily a general system of cooperation would work out, for that board of engineers examined every irrigation project most critically, and the result was a clearing up of the public mind regarding charges that were made with reference to the economy and efficiency with which that work was conducted. A very gratifying report was made by the engineers of the Army, and I have no doubt that their suggestions were of great service to the Reclamation Service. That only illustrates the value of teamwork, cooperative work, upon the part of the scientific services of the country.

The men who have been engaged in the Reclamation Service have been engaged in every variety of hydraulic engineering, and their experience will be of value. If the Engineer Corps of the Army in that instance could be called upon to aid the Reclamation Service, why should we not provide the machinery by which the Reclamation Service can give its aid and advice to the Engineer Corps of the Army, and why should we not provide a method by which these two great scientific services, having control of different portions of these great rivers, which constitute the largest navigable surface in our country, can come together and form common plans and present them to Congress for its consideration?

And why should not the Forest Commission now engaged in the purchase of watersheds confessedly for the purpose of promoting navigation be brought into cooperative action? Why should not the Forestry Service and the Weather Bureau also be brought into such cooperation, and the Geological Survey also, which has an annual appropriation of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, with a view to making water investigations throughout the entire country, and whose labors led first to the organization of the Reclamation Service, a survey which by the way has been the mother of many scientific services, such as the Mining Bureau recently organized into a separate service?

The wise and logical action with reference to the entire Mississippi Valley, therefore, is to bring all these scientific services into cooperation with each other through the creation of a river regulation board.

The bill which I have been urging for years provides for such a board, of which the Chief of Engineers of the Army is to be the chairman, the board to be composed of the Chief of Engineers, the chairman of the Mississippi River Commission, the Chief of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of the Forestry Service, the Chief of the Weather Bureau, the Chief of the Geological Survey, the Chief of the Drainage Division of the Agricultural Department, and such other scientific services as the President may bring into coordination with the Corps of Engineers of the Army. My bill provides that they shall view an entire watershed, consisting of the main river and all its tributaries, as a unit, and present their plans for a system of related waterways with a view of regulating stream flow and standardizing the channel so that it can be navigated by boats of standard draft, and also consider the great work of improving the navigation of rivers by slowing up and obstructing and retarding the floods, either by natural or artificial storage, and that they shall also bring into cooperation with the National Government the various State organizations having to do with waterways, drainage, water-power development, and irrigation in such a way as that joint plans can be formed so that these works can be dovetailed into each other for a complete and harmonious development, those plans providing for an apportionment of costs as between the National Government and the State governments or the communities affected.

You will find in this river and harbor bill specific measures of cooperation of that kind. It is simply an enlargement of the system of cooperation which now prevails with reference to the Mississippi River below Cairo, through the organization of the Mississippi River Commission, for that commission has established a complete system of cooperation with the States and with the levee districts and the communities in which it operates.

Mr. President, the next question is as to the plan. Are we going to plan in a big way and execute in a big way or are we going to content ourselves with the sporadic and accidental appropriations that we have been making up to this time, gradually improving it is true in our system, but not yet having reached any degree of perfection?

We all know that the old system was purely the spoils system, under which an individual Member of the House or an individual Senator insisted upon a particular project within his district or within his State, and brought all the powers of energy and of persuasion to the accomplishment of his purpose. We know how necessary it was in those conditions for the different Members and Senators to come to an agreement among themselves, and it was as much a part of the spoils system as the old method of urging the appointment of the officials of the country before civil service was fully organized.

We have gradually improved upon those methods. We have created a board of review in the Corps of Engineers of the Army. Gradually a sentiment has been created under which Congress rejects any project which has not met the approval of the Corps of Engineers or of the board of review, and that policy has been fairly well maintained. But Congress has never yet given the Corps of Engineers of the Army the power to present to Congress a complete plan for the development of the waterways of the country.

When I first took up the consideration of this question, my interest in it being stimulated by my appointment upon the Inland Waterway Commission, I was disposed to arraign the Board of Engineers of the Army for lack of initiative. I complained that they had been content to go along executing individual and detached projects here and there which resulted in the expenditure of money in a particular district, but led to no practical and satisfactory results in creating continuous waterways. But at last I was informed by one of the officers in the Engineer Corps that Congress had not only not authorized them to enter upon such a study, but had absolutely forbidden them in successive river and harbor bills from doing so.

I was amazed to find in these river and harbor bills absolute prohibitions upon the Engineer Corps of the Army preventing them from making any suggestion whatever to Congress except with regard to the specific project turned over to them for their consideration and report.

Now, as a result there is an improvement in this bill in that particular. I will not weary Senators by calling attention to an amendment which I offered to the river and harbor bill, which remedied this difficulty. The committee has placed that amendment in this river and harbor bill. It authorizes the Engineer Corps of the Army to present a comprehensive plan of related waterways to the country, and at the next session of Congress I have no doubt that it will be produced.

But the Commerce Committee was unwilling to act upon my further contention—a contention represented in the amendment which I presented and which I shall insert in the RECORD—that they should in this very bill not only provide that the Engineer Corps of the Army, in the interest of navigation and as a pure matter of transportation, make a comprehensive study of the waterways of the country, but should also provide for a scheme of cooperation of services and of cooperation with State and communities, to which I have referred.

The committee or members of the committee expressed an unwillingness to place my full amendment in this bill, the contention of those who opposed it being, not that they were hostile to its purpose, but that the whole subject matter could be more properly considered in the general bill which I have presented upon this subject and which has been pending in somewhat varying form for years. I stated to the committee that if that was their view I should expect an early report upon my bill. That bill had been previously referred to a subcommittee, which had but one meeting upon the subject. Though there had been an expression at that meeting of friendliness to the general principle of the bill, there had been a disposition to cut down the large fund called for by it, a fund of $50,000,000 annually for 10 years, which, in my judgment, is essential to the entire scheme.

I did not wish to press my amendment against the sentiment of so many of the committee, and I asked an informal expression from the members of the Commerce Committee whether or not they thought the general action called for by my general bill was desirable.

I am glad to say that a majority expressed themselves in favor of it. I hope that I will be sustained by that committee and by the Senate in an effort to bring up that bill for speedy action at this session of Congress, for everything that is contained in it is substantially demanded by the national platforms of both parties, the platform of the Republican Party substantially indorsing in all its details Mr. Roosevelt's recommendations regarding waterways; and this entire scheme was included in the report of the Inland Waterways Commission, which he indorsed in a message to Congress. So also that policy was laid down with the utmost detail in the Democratic platform, which called for cooperation of services, for cooperation of the Nation with the States, and for the creation of an ample fund for continuous work.

Now, I will close by saying that it is useless to enter upon this work unless we enter upon it in a big way and unless we determine now to make a definite expression as to the total sum we are willing to expend. If we only contemplate an expenditure of $100,000,000, we should tell our engineers to plan accordingly; if we intend to expend $500,000,000 within the next 10 years, we should tell them to plan accordingly; and we should provide the funds, so that those funds will not be subject to political exigencies and emergencies that now thwart the purpose of Congress every four years, when a record for economy is desired at election time, and oftentimes at intervening periods.

The amendment which I presented provides for a fund of $50,000,000 continuing appropriations for 10 years; and, until otherwise directed by Congress, it divides that fund between the different watersheds of the country. Of that fund of $50,000,000, $5,000,000, or 10 per cent, is assigned to the rivers of the Atlantic coast, 10 per cent, or $5,000,000, to the rivers of the Gulf coast, excluding the Mississippi; $5,000,000 to the rivers tributary to San Francisco Bay, the Sacramento, the Feather, and the San Joaquin; $5,000,000 to the Columbia Basin, comprising the Columbia River, Snake River, and the Willamette. Then, as to the Mississippi River, the amendment provides that, in addition to all the money now provided, the Mississippi River shall receive, from the Gulf up to St. Louis, $10,000,000 annually, where it now receives $4,000,000; that the Ohio River, with its tributaries, shall receive $5,000,000; that the upper Mississippi shall receive $5,000,000; and that the Missouri River and its tributaries shall receive $5,000,000, making a total for the Mississippi River and its tributaries of $25,000,000 annually. One-tenth of the fund is also set aside for the basin of the Great Lakes and for connecting the Lakes with the Ohio and the Mississippi, where practicable, by canal.

Of course, as we go along with the work, under the advice of this board of river regulation we can vary this apportionment. If we find that one region does not require as much as was anticipated and that another requires more, we can transfer from one segregation to another; but it seems to me important that we should provide this fund, so that we shall know what we have to rely upon hereafter, either out of current revenue or by an increase of revenue through an income tax, a corporation tax, or an occupation tax. It seems to me that in the great constructive work of the country, embracing to-day not more than $125,000,000 annually out of a revenue of a billion dollars, there should be no uncertainty as to the consecutiveness of the work; and to-day in our fortifications, in the extension of our Navy, in our forests, in our river works, and in our public buildings the appropriations do not aggregate more than $125,000,000, outside of the Panama Canal. We could safely increase that to $150,000,000 or even $250,000,000.

I will add that, as we are temporarily engaged in the Panama Canal enterprise, that is taking a large amount of money, my amendment provides for that by appropriating up to the time of the completion of the Panama Canal to this fund only $5,000,000 annually, of which $2,000,000 annually, in addition to existing appropriations, shall go to the lower Mississippi River; $1,000,000 to the Ohio River; $1,000,000 to the Missouri River; and $1,000,000 to the Sacramento and San Joaquin; but after the completion of the Panama Canal then $50,000,000 annually for 10 years shall be put into this fund.

Mr. President, I have taken longer than I expected because of interruptions and suggestions which have been made from time to time respecting this matter. I hope there will be a full expression regarding this important question from Senators, and particularly from those Senators who live in the Mississippi Valley and who realize the importance of immediate action. We can not assume that, because we have had the highest flood in history this year we shall not have another flood next year. It is estimated by high scientific authorities that the losses caused by floods in the United States equal $250,000,000 annually. Pittsburgh alone suffers an annual loss of about $5,000,000 as the result of these floods. By the organization of this great work, by the storage and diversion of flood waters for the irrigation of arid lands and for the future irrigation of lands in the humid regions, and the storage of water for the development of water power, we can take care of a large portion of the flood waters of the Ohio, the Upper Mississippi, and the Missouri, and thus diminish the crest of the flood down below Cairo, where it overflows this great principality.

We can put those floods to the highest and most beneficial purposes, instead of allowing them to be employed, as they now are, for purposes of destruction. And we can put these stored waters not only to beneficial use above, after the floods are over, but below in increasing the ebb flow of the river for navigation during the period of drought. By a system of cooperation with the States of the Mississippi Valley, we can build up a country there larger than Holland, just as perfect in its system of waterway transportation and railway transportation, and more perfect in its intensive cultivation. There is no region in the world that can be made so productive and so attractive for residence as that region, a large part of which is now almost pestilential, for we have learned, through the administration of the Panama Canal, how sanitation can go hand in hand with construction and make a region of this kind most comfortable and attractive for residence.

I shall append in the RECORD the amendment (a) to which I have referred, and which was adopted by the committee as well as the additional amendments (b, c, d, e, f, g), which I desired, but which I was urged not to press at this time, but to rely for its consideration in my general bill.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, viz: Insert the following:

(a) That the Secretary of War shall cause the Chief of Engineers of the Army and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to report to Congress, in which shall be included a preliminary report, not later than December 1, 1912, upon the saving, as well as other advantages, which can be accomplished by the adoption of the continuing-contract system, the rapidity with which projects should be completed, upon methods of standardization by which the waterways of the country may be improved uniformly in proportion to their capacities and to the existing or probable demands of general commerce, and also report upon one or more systematized schemes of such improvement, involving all waterways heretofore examined, together with any natural or artificial channels, essential for the utilization thereof, whether heretofore examined or not; also upon all projects heretofore adopted, the further improvements of which is not desirable or the expenditure upon which is out of proportion to the benefit derived therefrom. Such report may include other related information pertaining to the uses or control of the waters of the country, and the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for such examination and report.

(b) That for the regulation and control of the flow of navigable rivers in aid of interstate commerce, and as a means to that end for the storage of flood waters in the watershed of such navigable rivers, including the beneficial use and control of such flood waters, in the maintenance so far as practicable of a standard flow for navigation, the reclamation of arid and swamp lands, and the development of water power; and for the protection of watersheds from denudation, erosion, and from forest fires, and for the cooperation of Government services and bureaus with each other and with States, municipalities, and other local agencies in plans and works, having in view such river regulation and control, the sum of $5,000,000 annually for each of the years following the 1st day of July, 1912, and up to the date of the completion and opening to commerce of the Panama Canal, and thereafter the sum of $50,000,000 annually for each of the 10 years following the completion of the Panama Canal, is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the river regulation fund.

(c) That of the said river regulation fund, until otherwise directed by law, one-tenth thereof shall be apportioned to the rivers on the Atlantic coast, one-tenth thereof to the rivers on the Gulf coast outside of the Mississippi River, one-fifth thereof to the Mississippi River from St. Louis to the Gulf, one-tenth thereof to the Missouri River and its tributaries, one-tenth thereof to the Ohio River and its tributaries, one-tenth thereof to the upper Mississippi River above St. Louis and its tributaries, one-tenth thereof to the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers and their tributaries in California, one-tenth thereof to the Columbia and Snake Rivers and their tributaries in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, and one-tenth thereof in the connection of the Great Lakes with the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers: Provided, That out of such fund, in addition to the appropriations made in this act, $2,000,000 annually shall be expended in the improvement of the Mississippi River below St. Louis and $1,000,000 annually in the improvement of the Missouri River between Sioux City, Iowa, and its mouth, and $1,000,000 annually in the improvement of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, Cal., in continuing improvement and toward the controlling of débris and floods, in accordance with the recommendations of the California Débris Commission in its report dated June 30, 1907 (printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for 1907, p. 2269): Provided further, That no part of such sum herein appropriated shall be expended on the Sacramento and Feather Rivers unless the State of California shall appropriate for the prosecution of the work herein referred to and deposit in the Treasury of the United States a sum double that annually appropriated by the United States: Provided further, That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to receive from the State of California any and all sums of money that have been or may hereafter be appropriated by said State for the purpose herein set forth, and when so received the said sums are herein appropriated for the purpose set forth, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. The recommendations contained in House Executive Document No. 81, Sixty-second Congress, first session, having been adopted by act of the California Legislature of December 23, 1911, are hereby adopted by the Congress of the United States, and the same are to be made the basis of operations under the appropriation herein made: Provided, however, That, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, work may be begun on any portion, section, or unit of the work when the rights of way and spoil banks needed for such portion, section, or unit of the work have been acquired.

(d) That a board is hereby created, to be known as the board of river regulation, consisting of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, the chairman of the Panama Commission, the chairman of the board of review of the Engineer Corps of the Army, the chairman of the Mississippi River Commission, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, the Chief of the Weather Bureau, the Forester of the Department of Agriculture, the Director of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of the Drainage Division of the Department of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, one hydraulic engineer, one sanitary engineer, and one electrical engineer, the last three to be appointed by the President and to hold office at his pleasure, and each to receive an annual compensation of $7,500, payable out of the river regulation fund.

The Chief of Engineers shall be the chairman of such board, and the secretary shall be annually elected by the board from its members.

(e) That the functions of said board shall be to investigate and obtain full information concerning all matters involved in or specifically related to the objects set forth in paragraph (b) of this section, and for such purpose is authorized to expend a suitable and necessary proportion of the moneys therein appropriated; but said board shall not expend or incur liability for the expenditure of any money for the construction or execution of plans or projects without the specific approval of Congress, as hereinafter set forth; that said board is hereby authorized and directed to enlist through the President the services of any Federal department or bureau the statutory authority of which may involve investigations or constructive work that is necessary or desirable in the comprehensive performance of the objects set forth in such paragraph, and to bring into cooperation and to harmonize and unify the work of said departments or bureaus as may be necessary to provide against duplication or unwarranted or incomplete work with respect to the objects herein provided; and that said board is authorized to defray the expenses of such investigations or assistance to the extent of the ultimate cost thereof to said departments or bureaus through a transfer of equivalent proportions of the appropriation herein provided.

(f) That the board shall develop, formulate, and prepare plans for the accomplishment of the purposes herein provided, and shall report the same to Congress annually and at such other times as may be required; and whenever the recommendations or any parts thereof in said report shall receive the approval of Congress the said board shall proceed to construct and execute the same in accordance with the plans so approved: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall be so administered as in no way to supersede or conflict with any specific provisions which Congress shall from time to time make by way of appropriations other than such as are made by this act for work and improvements to be performed or maintained by the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, but that all work prescribed under this section shall be supplemental to and coordinated with the work as specifically prescribed by Congress in other acts.

(g) That the board shall in all cases where possible and practicable encourage, promote, and endeavor to secure the cooperation of State and local government bodies, public and quasi public corporations, private associations, and persons in carrying out the purposes and objects of this act, including the securing of the financial cooperation of said parties; that it shall negotiate and arrange plans for the apportionment of work, costs, and benefits, and to secure the agreement and consent of said parties, contingent upon the final approval of same by Congress as herein provided, which approval and consent may include the acceptance and use of any funds or property donated or subscribed or in any way provided for cooperative work, but no moneys shall be expended under any arrangement for cooperation approved by Congress until the funds to be provided by the parties to such arrangement shall have been made available for disbursement.

Mr. PERCY obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber by important business.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. ASHURST] has just been called from the Chamber on important business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, for weeks past the public press has been filled with the horrors of the unparalleled overflow disaster in the Mississippi Valley, and, without desiring to delay a vote upon this bill, I wish briefly to advert to the conditions there and to the provisions of this bill which deal with the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau to the Head of Passes, known as the lower Mississippi.

Before doing so, Mr. President, I want to say that Congress has responded to every appeal made to it from that stricken section. An appropriation of $650,000 has been made for emergency work on the levees, and a million and a quarter dollars, in round numbers, have been appropriated for feeding the flood sufferers. Whatever the representatives from the Mississippi Valley have said that the people there needed Congress has been swift to give. In a spirit of unexampled generosity, there has been no opposition, no division of party nor of section, and, representing in part the people of that stricken section, I want to express their recognition of the burden of gratitude imposed upon them by the treatment which Congress has seen fit to accord to them in this the hour of their greatest trouble. Yet, Mr. President, the generosity of the response to these appeals can not disguise the fact that for weeks a proud and a self-reliant people, inhabiting one of the most fertile countries of the world, have been knocking at the doors of Congress like mendicants seeking for charity, and the response made discloses the fact that Congress, by the magnitude of the disaster which has come to that section of the country, has been compelled to embark upon what has been always an unsafe and dangerous governmental policy—that of extending charity—a policy which has no boundary save the boundary fixed upon the efforts of human sympathy to relieve human suffering and human woe.

The question which insistently presents itself for answer is whether this disaster could have been averted, and, still more, whether the recurrence of it can be avoided or the chances of it recurring minimized; and if so, in what way?

When this great flood first began to come down the Mississippi River some weeks ago the people of the valley felt no alarm. No apprehensions were aroused by the coming flood. They had, behind the levees, enjoyed 9 years of complete protection from overflow—15 years of almost total protection, the last overflow having occurred in 1903, which was limited in area, and the one before that in 1897.

During that time they had seen millions of dollars expended in building up a levee system which they had come to regard as impregnable. The total expenditures on the levees aggregated the enormous amount of $82,000,000 up to June, 1910, of which the Federal Government had contributed $24,000,000, and the various levee organizations, by submitting to the most onerous system of taxation to which a people ever voluntarily submitted, contributed $58,000,000. Railroad systems had threaded the entire valley; forests had been felled; villages had sprung up; the population had doubled; the agricultural products had doubled within 15 years.

But the one factor that more than anything else gave to the people of the valley a feeling of confidence and security in their levee system was that the Federal Government was aiding in the maintenance of that system.

The great mass of the people did not stop to scrutinize the extent of that aid or whether it meant safety, but they felt that the Government had taken hold of it and had dealt with it in such a fashion as would afford adequate protection from the floods of the river.

But this year, for the first time since 1844, the flood waters of the three rivers came out in conjunction. Unusual as the statement may seem, it is absolutely correct. For the first time since 1844 the upper Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri came out in conjoint flood. The course of the river has been that the Ohio and the upper Mississippi ran off their floods before being joined by the Missouri, but with these three rivers coming out at flood stage the water crept higher and higher until the feeling of security was changed to dismay and discouragement, and as every record of high water one after the other was broken, the levees for 1,600 miles were manned by anxious workers who strove to raise these frail barriers high enough to prevent inundation; they fought desperately to save their homes, their very lives.

Congress helped with an emergency appropriation of $650,000. The various levee boards, by anticipating their revenues, by issuing certificates of indebtedness, by issuing bonds, by bankrupting their treasuries, contributed $2,000,000 to the emergency fight within a few weeks. Then came the crevasses, and the great river poured its yellow torrent over fertile fields, inundated villages, swept away homes, took everywhere its toll of human life; for many men and women in the open fields and in the lonesome woods struggled, gasped, gurgled, and died in the embrace of the yellow flood.

Eight railroad systems were paralyzed, millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed, and at last, instead of fertile fields there is a yellow lake 10,000 square miles in area, greater in area than the States of Rhode Island, Delaware, and Connecticut added together—as great as the States of Rhode Island, Delaware, and New Jersey—a section of the country producing in cotton alone more than $50,000,000 worth annually. The damage, without reference to the crops of this year, it is estimated, will reach $50,000,000. The cotton crop alone of this year in the submerged area which can not now be made will add $60,000,000 to that sum. In dollars and cents this flood has cost an amount almost twice as much as it would take to build a complete levee system from Cairo to the Gulf on both sides of the river, up to the Government standard and requirement, if there was not a single foot of levee in existence. On this lake, covering that vast area, is borne the wreckage of homes and the saving of years, and to-day 150,000 people are being fed on Government rations at 10 cents per day per head.

Disheartened, discouraged, dismayed, these people are to-day surrounded with Job's comforters, who have brought from the limbo of forgotten things every discarded fallacy and every discredited theory, telling them that "your levee system has been a failure; the bed of the river has been raised; you have to resort to outlets or to reservoirs."

I would say to the people of that valley and to the United States Senate that there is not a single disaster which has come from this unparalleled flood which serves to discredit in any way the efficiency of a levee system; that the Government engineers in charge of the river have reported the cause of each and every break which has occurred in the levees, and not one break has occurred, either in the overflow of 1912 or in any other which has preceded it, where the levee was up to the Government standard in height and in dimensions.

The flood has shown what every engineer, whether Government engineer or a levee board engineer, well knew, that the levees, as constructed, were not sufficient to carry off any such flood as this.

The dealing with the river by a system of levees was not entered upon hastily, nor has it not been prosecuted without proper scientific research and information in regard to it. In 1861 Abbott and Humphreys, most eminent surveyors, wrote a treatise on the Mississippi River, which is to-day a standard work on that subject, and they came to the conclusion then that the floods of the Mississippi River could be dealt with by levees and by levees alone.

Following the flood of 1874 Congress created a commission of five Government engineers, and instructed them to investigate and report upon the floods of the Mississippi River and the best method of controlling such floods, and that commission reported that the levee system was feasible and was the only system that could be adopted for dealing with the question.

Following the flood of 1897 the Senate designated a subcommittee of the Commerce Committee to again investigate the question of how best the river could be dealt with. The distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee to-day was chairman of that subcommittee, and in passing I will say that he and the Senator from New Hampshire are the only two living members of that commission. That commission made a personal inspection of conditions, and in addition to that took the testimony of every surveyor who was familiar with the conditions on the river, whether they were Government surveyors belonging to the Army corps or civilians, and their report on this subject is the most luminous statement now extant on the Mississippi River. In most unequivocal terms they stated that the levee system was the only method of handling the floods of the river; that the outlet system could in the nature of things afford no relief, because no outlet could be made above Red River; that the reservoir system could not be successfully used because no place for reservoirs could be found adapted to control the floods of the river along the Ohio River.

In 1879 Congress created the Mississippi River Commission, composed of members of the Army corps, the Geodetic Coast Survey, and civilians selected because of their high character and familiarity with this great subject; and from that time up to to-day that commission has been dealing with the Mississippi River, investigating the changing conditions of it and making recommendations for the treatment of it as called upon by Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PERCY. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit me to state that whilst he is undoubtedly correct and accurate in his statement that the levee system is a success, and that these existing difficulties are due to the fact that the levees have not reached the standard prescribed by the Corps of Engineers of the Army, yet in his reference to the report of the Senator from Minnesota made some years ago he stated that that report showed that the reservoir system which would stay the flow of these floods down to the Mississippi was impracticable upon the Ohio River.

In reference to that I wish to say that whilst, with reference to the information that then existed, that report was in accord with general sentiment, yet that since then a thorough examination has been made of the reservoir sites on the Allegheny River alone by the Pittsburgh Flood Commission, with the most experienced engineers of the country, and at an expenditure of $100,000, and that report shows that storage can be made there that would save Pittsburgh itself from the disastrous effects of those flood waters of the Ohio into the Mississippi. That view was sustained by Mr. Leighton, the chief hydrographer of the Geological Survey, who has been giving some years of his life to the study of reservoir questions, and who insists that upon the Ohio and its tributaries, the Allegheny and the Monongahela, the Tennessee and the Cumberland, storage is practicable that will materially diminish the amount of water during the flood season in the Mississippi, and that similar opportunities exist upon other rivers.

The Senator will understand that I do not say that at all as minimizing the force of what he has to say and urge regarding the necessity of having protection in the case of revetment work and levee protection regarding the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau down. All the work that has been done has been necessary work. The only difficulty was it was not done with sufficient speed and sufficient expenditure of money, and I stand most heartily for an increase of the annual appropriations in that region.

Mr. PERCY. I do not care to enter into any discussion of the reservoir system nor in any way to take issue with the Senator from Nevada. The more water that can be handled in reservoirs of course the less we would have to control by the levee system, and yet I made that statement upon the judgment of those who have investigated for years the question of controlling the floods of the Mississippi River. Referring to the report made by the committee, of which the Senator from Minnesota was chairman, I will read just a paragraph of it referring to the reservoir subject:

> The evidence, as well as the other data, discloses that on the Ohio River, as well as its main tributaries, where reservoirs could act more directly on the floods than elsewhere, with the exception hereinafter stated, there are no suitable sites or holding grounds where reservoirs could at any moderate or reasonable expense, and without working far-reaching and extensive damage, be constructed that would at all be adequate to pen up and retain the great downpour from innumerable mountain torrents during the great freshets of January, February, and March. There are no great basins adequate for reservoir purposes either on the Monongahela, the Allegheny, the Tennessee, or the Cumberland; and to be effective in repressing the floods of the Ohio, big, strong reservoirs would be requisite on these streams.
> The only place where a reservoir basin can be found, proximate and sufficiently large to afford a holding ground at all commensurate with any material or practicable relief, is the St. Francis Basin; but the cost of constructing and maintaining a system of reservoirs in this basin would be enormous and far greater than the cost of leveeing the entire river front of the basin. The scheme is regarded by nearly all engineers and other experts as wholly impracticable. In short, your committee can discover no just or adequate relief in reservoirs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Mississippi suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am advised that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] does not wish to go on with his speech to-day, and as the Senator from Minnesota is anxious to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, on the request of the Senator from North Carolina, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. PERCY. In testimony recently given before the Commerce Committee the Chief of Engineers used the expression that it would take a reservoir as large as the State of Kentucky to furnish any relief against a flood such as is now going down the Mississippi River. That is the result of the 30 years' consideration of the question by the Mississippi River Commission.

I will mention just one other feature, without unnecessarily prolonging the discussion, which this commission considered, and that was the idea that the bed of the river was filling up, and the task of building levees to control floods was a hopeless one. In 1881, 1882, and 1883 they had soundings made every quarter of a mile across the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau down, and on every cross section they took 75 soundings as to the depth, thus enabling the commission to plat the entire bed of the river. In 1894 and 1895 they again took soundings over 429 miles of the river which had been more perfectly inclosed by levees than any other section of it, and those soundings showed that there had been no raising of the bed, but, if anything, a lowering of it by the levee system.

They also took the trouble to investigate the common rumors and generally accepted fallacies that the Yellow River of China and the Po and the Rhine had had their beds raised by a levee system, and in every instance, for instance, by Gen. J. H. Wilson as to the Yellow River of China, and Gen. Comstock as to the Po and the Rhine, it was affirmatively shown that these were fallacies and superstitions rather than facts. The only river that there is any accurate testimony as to the bed having been raised at all by floods is the Nile; and during a period of 1,600 years the bed of that river has apparently filled up 2.11 meters.

So, Mr. President, the consensus of all expert authority is that the situation along the Mississippi River must and can be controlled by a levee system. If there was needed a practical illustration of the correctness of this scientific proposition it was furnished by the present flood. There is but one section of levee along the entire Mississippi River on either bank that has been constructed up to the dimensions that the river commission has denominated as the ultimate grade, and that is the levee system along the upper Yazoo levee district, 125 miles in length. Along that levee system there has not been a single crevasse during this flood, and that notwithstanding the fact that the river along that levee district attained an altitude of 2.4 feet higher than any known flood which has preceded this one.

Not only that, but the report of the Government engineers shows that those levees have been from 3 to 4 feet above the present flood. The Government has not contributed a dollar to the maintenance of those levees for four or five years except some revetment work, and of the $650,000 appropriated as an emergency fund by this Congress not one dollar was asked for in that district.

So this flood has demonstrated that the present levee system is inadequate to care for a flood such as this has been, but it has just as assuredly demonstrated that a levee system built according to the grade and specifications recommended as the ultimate grade by the Mississippi River Commission would afford safety. It is simply a question of dirt in the levee and of a sufficient amount of money being furnished to put that dirt there. There is no engineering problem connected with it. There is not an engineer along the Mississippi River who could not build a levee system which would in all probability have carried off this water, provided he had been furnished with sufficient means to construct it.

Is the amount that is necessary to insure safety a prohibitive amount? The estimate of the Chief of Engineers, I am informed, made since this flood, and I think that is concurred in by the Mississippi River Commission, is that it would take $11,000,000 to build the levees up to what the commission denominated its tentative grade. This water has demonstrated, too, that the tentative grade is not the one which will afford any ultimate safety, and consideration of that grade must be discarded.

The Chief of Engineers also estimates that it will take $30,000,000 to construct the levees up to those dimensions which in his judgment would have carried off this flood. That amount in magnitude is beyond the reach of the local levee boards along the Mississippi River. If Congress to-day would announce the policy that no more governmental aid would be extended to the building of levees along the Mississippi River, within 15 years that whole vast fertile area would be a wilderness. The people of the valley realize that the task is one beyond their strength. While, as I have said, by the most onerous system of taxation that a free people have ever imposed upon themselves they have in the past raised $58,000,000 for levee purposes, in the raising of this $30,000,000 they realize that they must have Government aid of a most substantial kind.

The Federal Government, in 1910, undertook to deal with the Mississippi River question and announced the policy of expending $80,000,000 in the treatment of the river in revetment, channel, and levee work, to be expended four million a year over a period of 20 years. This flood demonstrates the fact that such a policy is unwise, narrow, and illiberal; and not only that, but whenever you extend that relief over a period of 20 years, during every year of that 20 you are inviting the recurrence of some such disaster as has overtaken the valley this year.

If a man with funds to build a 10-story building should start out to build a story of it every year for 10 years, before he completed that task his relatives would have him in the asylum. And yet, in judgment, he would be a Solomon compared with the wisdom displayed by the Federal Government in dealing with this question and spending $80,000,000 over a period of 20 years, for at least when he returned each year he would have the stories that he had theretofore constructed to build on, while every year during these 20 years when the Government goes back to take up its work it is liable to find a part of its work gone and its ally in that work, the local districts, impoverished and pauperized.

For many years it has been known of all men who have studied Mississippi River conditions that the "dribbling" policy of the Government in doling out money for the Mississippi River rendered almost certain the occurrence of the disaster which has now befallen the great valley.

Following the flood of 1882, President Arthur sent to Congress the following message:

> The immense losses and widespread suffering of the people dwelling near the river induce me to urge upon Congress the propriety of not only making an appropriation to close the gaps in the levees occasioned by the recent floods, as recommended by the commission, but that Congress should inaugurate measures for the permanent improvement of the navigation of the river and security of the valley. It may be that such a system of improvement would as it progressed require the appropriation of $20,000,000 or $30,000,000. Even such an expenditure, extending as it must over several years, can not be regarded as extravagant in view of the immense interest involved.
> The safe and convenient navigation of the Mississippi is a matter of concern to all sections of the country, but to the Northwest, with its immense harvests, needing cheap transportation to the sea, and to the inhabitants of the river valley, whose lives and property depend upon the proper construction of the safeguards which protect them from the floods, it is of vital importance that a well-matured and comprehensive plan for improvement should be put in operation with as little delay as possible. The cotton product of the region subject to the devastating floods is a source of wealth to the Nation and of great importance to keeping the balance of trade in our favor. It may not be inopportune to mention that this Government has imposed and collected some $70,000,000 by a tax on cotton, in the production of which the population of the lower Mississippi is largely engaged, and it does not seem inequitable to return a portion of this tax to those who contributed it, particularly as such an action will also result in an important gain to the country at large, and especially so to the great and rich States of the Northwest and the Mississippi Valley.

Following the floods of 1903, I appeared before the Commerce Committee of the Senate urging larger appropriations for the Mississippi River, and I quote from my statement then made to that committee:

> The high water of 1903 wrought a destruction of $5,000,000 on levee property and the property behind the levees. The next flood that comes along, while you are giving us a million dollars a year, and we are, by the most burdensome taxation, raising a million more, may inflict $20,000,000 instead of $5,000,000.

Mr. President, this flood does not teach any lesson as to the inefficiency of the levee system, but it does teach a lesson as to the inefficiency of the method by which the National Government has been dealing with that question. The Committee on Commerce increased the bill by two and a half million dollars, making it six million instead of three and a half million dollars. The increase was as great as the committee felt warranted in making to a bill which had passed the House, the increase having to be by way of amendment. Again, in all probability, the committee felt that right under the shadow of a great disaster was not an opportune time to change a governmental policy which would reach throughout the years. But when the total effects of this flood are accurately and correctly reported to Congress by the Mississippi River Commission, when they can see the disaster which has been wrought and see the cost of the safety which can be secured, the people of the Mississippi Valley and of this entire country will expect that Congress shall deal with the question by a method which will minimize at least the chances of the recurrence of such a disaster. I believe that Congress will answer that expectation. If $80,000,000 is to be expended, and there is now seventy million left of that amount, it should be expended in the shortest time in which it can be economically and properly disbursed.

There can not be any other rule. Whether it should be $10,000,000 a year for seven years or on some other basis will be better determined when the report of the commission comes in; but it must be on a basis which will bring protection to that area as speedily as possible. It is just the difference between a stupid policy and an intelligent one, and I submit that Congress should adopt the policy which will afford protection to an area which to-day produces as much cotton as the Valley of the Nile and the potentialities of which are seven times as great.

While in this bill, Mr. President, the representatives from the valley do not press for any more than the committee has incorporated in it, yet they feel that with the proper information before Congress it will at its next session embody into a bill an intelligent policy for handling the river.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question before he takes his seat. I understand from him that the estimate of the engineers is that $30,000,000 expended on the levees would bring their height and their strength up to a standard that would enable them to resist such a flood as we have had this year.

Mr. PERCY. As expressed by a member of the commission, it would carry such a flood, in his judgment, from Cairo to the Gulf without disaster.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would ask whether that $30,000,000 would go entirely for levee purposes, or whether a part of it would go for revetment work.

Mr. PERCY. The $30,000,000 contemplated in that estimate was to go for levees. It is not contemplated that the Government would have to furnish the entire $30,000,000. Under an appropriation of $10,000,000 a year for three years, if seven or seven and a half million dollars was devoted to levees and the balance to revetment, the local organizations could increase the seven and a half million dollars up to something like $10,000,000 a year for levees, thus completing the work within a period of three years, and thereafter, the $10,000,000 appropriations continuing, eight millions or more could go to revetment and channel work and the balance to levees.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But the appropriation of $10,000,000 annually for three years, applied to levee building, would bring the levees up to the standard that the Engineer Corps intends to establish in the future?

Mr. PERCY. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And to that amount the Senator thinks the districts affected would be able to contribute how much? They have been very seriously crippled, I presume, by this disaster.

Mr. PERCY. They have been seriously crippled; their treasuries have been absolutely depleted, and their revenues will be seriously affected for the current year by the inability to make crops in the overflowed areas. Still, I would say that during the three years, the Government contributing seven and a half million to levees, the local organizations could be relied upon to raise as much as two and a half million dollars a year.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it is not my intention to vote against this bill, but I am unwilling to see it pass without pointing out some of the defects which appear in it and the reason for such defects. They have been the result largely of conditions which do not indicate any blame on the part of legislators; and for this reason I do not intend to criticize my old associates in the House or any person in the Senate.

Prior to 1910 the question was much discussed whether we should have an annual river and harbor bill or pursue the old method of biennial bills. The arguments in favor of the annual bill were, first, that a yearly appropriation would place our river and harbor improvements in the same standing as the other activities of the Government, and that these improvements were worthy of an annual bill as much as the Navy or the Army or other public activities. It was also argued that in case of emergencies such as were arising in the Mississippi River better provision could be made if there were an annual bill, and also that the appropriations might better meet the requirements of existing conditions. The arguments against it were, first, that it was impossible to frame in a single session a river and harbor measure which would adequately take into account all the existing circumstances; that it was a practical impossibility to prepare in each session a well digested and fair measure of this kind. Again, it was argued that with the pressure for appropriations there was a far greater probability that undeserving projects would be adopted.

I think I may state, Mr. President, that the policy of an annual river and harbor bill adopted in 1910 has not justified the change, at least not up to date. It has accentuated the old defects. It has caused an increase, I believe, of waste, and Congress has made many injudicious selections which would not have been made under the old method of biennial, or, as in some cases, less frequent bills. There are certain reforms in our river and harbor policy which are absolutely essential if we are to prosecute these improvements in a business-like and economical manner. They are absolutely essential if we be fair to the whole country.

In the first place, we should make a sweeping reform in the adoption of the so-called continuing-contract system in the case of large projects. As some may not understand it, I will explain what is meant by the continuing contract system. Under it when an improvement is adopted provision is made by appropriation or authorization for its total cost. If, for instance, a river or a harbor improvement is adopted which will cost $3,000,000, and it will require five years for its completion, $600,000 is appropriated in the bill; and there is added an authorization under which contracts may be made for the remaining $2,400,000, the required appropriation being made year by year in the sundry civil appropriation bill. After a project is adopted there is no further attention paid to it in the river and harbor bill.

Under this plan of annual bills the method pursued would be to appropriate $600,000 one year. That would be the ideal method, though, in fact, it would be more likely to be $100,000; the second year another $600,000, and the third year another $600,000, and so on until all is appropriated.

Now, the advantages of the continuing-contract system are perfectly manifest. In some instances the economy made possible has caused a reduction of at least 40 per cent on the total cost. It requires an installation of a large and expensive plant, whether a fifth of the work is done or the whole. Economy can be secured in a great variety of ways by planning at the start for the completion of the entire work.

The second advantage is that every community interested in a particular improvement knows, if it is provided for under a continuing contract, that the work will be pushed, presumably, to speedy completion. If ships are to be built, if wharves are necessary to handle the freight, private enterprise can be enlisted to provide them by the time the work is finished and can begin them with the beginning of the improvement.

There is a third advantage which in its effect upon practical legislation is as important as the other two. If the whole project is adopted at one time, more careful and discriminating attention will be given to it, and it will not be adopted at all unless it is worthy.

The bill here is full of appropriations for projects costing millions of dollars upon which a first appropriation was made of $100,000 or sometimes less. It was easy for this small first appropriation to slip into the bill, and then after this was made the argument could be presented to Congress that the Government was committed to the completion of that project, which never ought to have been commenced at all. I might give one or two illustrations. A year ago a partial appropriation of $100,000 was made for the construction of three locks and dams in a certain river, the cost of which would be $350,000 apiece, a total of $1,050,000. The $100,000 was allowed to lie in the Treasury because the appropriation was too small to commence operations. When this bill came to us from the House $75,000 more was appropriated, making an aggregate of $150,000—less than one-half the sum required for the completion of one of the three locks and dams. I may say that the Senate committee struck it out, and I trust that the Senate will concur in our action in placing the seal of disapproval on a proposal so utterly unbusinesslike. I may say in this connection that the smallness of the proposed appropriation indicates that there was a doubt on the part of Congress whether it should ever have committed itself to the project at all, and that that was one reason for the very small initial appropriation of $100,000.

Another reform in our system which is very much needed is more discrimination in the selection of projects. Since 1902 every survey or preliminary examination for a river or harbor must be examined by a board of review, consisting of engineer officers. It is first examined by the local engineer in the locality in which the river or harbor is located. It then goes to a division engineer, if the first engineer is an officer of minor rank. It then passes from the one or two who have first examined it to this board of review. The creation of this board has worked a revolution in our river and harbor appropriations. It has eliminated many undeserving schemes. The board oftentimes in approving projects also makes salutary modifications which confer a great deal of benefit. The great essential object of it is to have one standard for the whole country. Formerly an engineer in one section of the United States might favor a certain project, while an engineer in another portion would have opposed one of equal merit. With all these differing standards their recommendations came here to Washington. Now there is a uniform standard.

It is with the utmost deference, Mr. President, that I criticize this board or the engineering corps. I have so often spoken in eulogy of them. Their lives are given to the service of the Government with a skill and honesty unsurpassed, I believe, by any body of public servants in the world. But I think in recent years they have sent to us with their approval recommendations which are not justified by existing conditions.

We here in Congress are largely to blame. When surveys have been ordered and the engineers have sent in an unfavorable report, not infrequently a request has been made for a resurvey, and in some instances, though I am glad to say that the cases are rare, Congress has adopted a proposed river and harbor project after the board of review has put the seal of condemnation on it. But in examining their recent reports it is very apparent that the engineers are far more liberal in recommending projects than they formerly were. I want to bring up as one illustration the proposed improvement of the Missouri River. In their first report the engineers did not favor this improvement, or if one was recommended it was only for a comparatively limited expenditure; but after one or two further requests for surveys had been made by Congress a report came to us favoring that project.

I concede, Mr. President, that this appropriation will become a law, but I am unwilling to allow it to pass without expressing my opinions upon this subject. I most confidently appeal to the future, that best final judge of all things, in support of the opinion that this proposed expenditure of $20,000,000, so far as benefit to navigation is concerned, will be altogether ineffective and wasted. It is proposed to expend for a channel from the mouth of the Missouri River to Kansas City, a distance of about 400 miles, $20,000,000, and for an equal distance from Kansas City to Sioux City $22,500,000 additional. It is also stated that the cost of maintenance from the mouth to Kansas City will be $500,000, with an additional expense of $60,000 per annum for snagging, an amount greater than the total required for the maintenance of the harbors of Portland, Boston, New York, Baltimore, Norfolk, and Charleston, with their enormous commerce—and for what?

What is the prospect of commerce there? You can tell pretty readily, Mr. President, from the figures relating to a section of the Mississippi River extending up from Cairo to St. Louis and the mouth of the Missouri. There is certainly no magic that will make this stream, 400 miles above the Missouri, with a projected depth of 6 feet, a better avenue for commerce than the 180 or so miles from the mouth of the Missouri River to the mouth of the Ohio, upon which there is the great city of St. Louis.

Let me call attention to results in that stretch of the river. Up to date the United States has expended approximately $15,000,000 on that 180 miles. The quantity of shipments from St. Louis in 1880 was 1,038,000 tons; it fell in 1900 to 245,800 tons; and in this last year the quantity fell to 191,965 tons. In the year 1871 44 per cent of the shipments of freight from the city of St. Louis were by river; in the year 1909 the percentage was one-half of 1 per cent; that is, the proportion a little less than 40 years earlier was 88 times as great as it now is. Does anyone for a moment think that to improve that river 400 miles to Kansas City will bring results more favorable than in the channel already existing?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the matter which the Senator from Ohio is discussing interests me, because I have wondered why it was that Congress has shown a disposition to resume the custom of making large appropriations for the Missouri River. I recall the fact that some years ago—possibly the senior Senator from Minnesota can state what year it was——

Mr. NELSON. It was in 1897.

Mr. GALLINGER. In 1897 a committee of this body was appointed to make an investigation of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, the Senator from Minnesota being chairman of that committee. The late Senator Vest, of Missouri, was on the committee, as was ex-Senator Berry, of Arkansas, and I chanced to be designated as a member. We made a very thorough investigation, going from the headwaters of the Mississippi to the Gulf, taking testimony along the way. The committee unanimously came to the conclusion that it was a waste of money to make any further expenditures upon the Missouri River and recommended the abolition of the Missouri River Commission. In response to the views of the committee, the Missouri River Commission was abandoned, and I think for a few years afterwards no appropriations were made for that stream. Now it seems we are going back to the system that prevailed before that investigation was made, and, as I think, we are going to waste every dollar that we appropriate for that purpose.

I thank the Senator from Ohio for permitting me to say a word along that line.

Mr. BURTON. I will state, Mr. President, that under the river and harbor bill brought into the other House in 1902, the Missouri River Commission was abolished, and I think it a very serious retrograde step to again take up the improvement of this river. That does not mean that some slight appropriation ought not to be made to maintain the present channel of 4½ feet.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would ask the Senator from Ohio whether there is not the same reason for the cooperative development of the Missouri River between Kansas City and St. Louis as there is for the development of the Mississippi River below Cairo?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think there is.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do they not involve the same problems, first, of the regulation of the river itself for navigation and, second, the reclamation of a vast area of alluvial land of incomparable fertility?

Mr. BURTON. I think they do, although the conditions are not quite the same. There are, however, not the very wide bottom lands to be overflowed for which levee protection is required. The conditions in a measure are the same, because there is a certain quantity of land in great basins and a certain quantity in the bottoms to be protected by levees.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator realizes that there is a valley there of alluvial soil over 300 miles in length, varying in width from 3 to 10 miles, does he not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, that is a pretty large body of land.

Mr. BURTON. I doubt whether it is as much as 10 miles in width in any portion between Kansas City and the mouth, but in some portions of the river it is.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In some portions of the river it is. That soil is just as rich as the soil below, is it not?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly; just as rich, though, of course, the tropical, the climatic conditions are different.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The climatic conditions are different, it is true; the production may not be of so tropical a character as it is below, but, as I understand, the problems are the regulation of the flow of the river and the reclamation of land of great fertility. Those are the two problems; they can be dovetailed into each other; and, according to the Senator's statement, it would cost very much less on the Missouri River, because there you do not require the levees that you do on the Mississippi River, and all that you have to accomplish will be the revetment of the banks and the dredging.

Mr. BURTON. And the making of impermeable dikes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So that, the problems being the same, the expenditure per mile of development would be very much less. I ask, how can the development of the Mississippi River—the cooperative development of the Mississippi River—as it has gone on for years, be sustained, and yet the development of the Missouri River for this distance be denied? My judgment is that relatively it is of equal importance, and that it ought to be extended to that large area between Kansas City and Sioux City, embracing a distance of 300 miles and also embracing a very large alluvial area.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if this change back to the project of improving the Missouri River has not been a deliberate change, the result of powerful public sentiment brought to bear by great communities like Kansas City and other vast communities that contribute to this general plan, and who have a firm conviction that there is some substance to their demand that that project be considered? I know—of course, the Senator knows much more about it than I, for I know very little about it—it became such a live question that the people in Kansas City put boats on the river, started navigation back and forth so as to protect themselves against the extortions of the railways, and that it was the uprising of those people and the demand from those great communities which I supposed had caused the committee to again take up those projects, and that there was something substantial back of their demands.

Mr. BURTON. Answering first the question of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], I would say that, in my opinion, just the same reason exists for cooperation in the Missouri Valley as exists in the lower Mississippi; but there is a difference in degree. In support of the opinion that there should be cooperation, the official report on which this appropriation was based states that in the treatment of the river in the neighborhood of Jefferson City for a distance of 45 miles 15,000 acres of very valuable land were reclaimed. Those lands are probably worth $100 an acre. So there was a valuation created by this Government improvement of $1,500,000. The same report states that the total value of the property protected, which is now threatened by the river, between its mouth and Sioux City, about 800 miles, is about $125,000,000. Where private property is benefited to such an extent the localities and other interested parties should be required to contribute a substantial share of the expense.

Mr. President, I want to dwell a little more on the futility of this project. A glance at the map of the Missouri River will show that, beginning at its mouth, it flows west 400 miles, then turns at right angles and goes to the north. Parallel with that river there are great railway systems, and the portion of the river between Sioux City and Kansas City, running nearly north and south, is frequently crossed by railroads, with connections to St. Louis and to Chicago. A singular feature of the improvement of the Mississippi River as a regulator of freight rates is that the regulation of the differentials that are granted by railroads because of water competition has conferred a greater benefit upon Chicago than upon St. Louis, because Chicago, with its great railroad systems running out through Iowa and to northern Missouri, are all the while contending for this traffic in localities near the Missouri and the Mississippi Rivers. The railroads make the differential rates so as to drive water competition out of existence, it is true, and thus railroad rates to St. Louis are lower than they otherwise would be; but Chicago is compelled to meet that competition and the railways running out of Chicago have still further lowered their rates; so that Chicago has derived a greater benefit than has St. Louis from the transportation possibilities of the upper Mississippi. Now, does anyone suppose, with all those railway systems crossing and parallel with the Missouri River, that any considerable quantity of freight is going to be carried to St. Louis or elsewhere by the river?

Again, the freight that is carried in that locality is very largely grain. I should like to have any Member of the Senate point out to me a case in which grain is carried to a shallow river, unless it be some stream like the upper Missouri, where transportation facilities are very largely lacking, and then transferred to the river and carried to a final market. The fact is that on the upper Missouri, in the Dakotas and up into Montana, although the stream is small and comparatively a small sum has been spent, there is a bigger traffic than there is on the whole of the lower Missouri. Why? Because conditions are different.

Some one was calling attention a few days ago to the fact that, as he maintained, the Missouri River had a large traffic, amounting to 762,720 tons. That is quite a traffic, Mr. President and Senators. Of those 762,000 tons, 721,000 tons is sand and gravel, barged an average distance of only 1 mile. The rest is made up of riprap willows, a very small quantity of grain—not more than 4,000 tons—and 3,000 tons of coal.

But, it is said, if the river is improved traffic will develop upon it; that it is unfair to dwell upon the statistics as they are to-day. Mr. President, I challenge contradiction on this point: Has there been a single case where traffic has not existed on a shallow depth before a greater depth was created? There may be cases where there are insuperable obstacles which have to be remedied by locks and dams; but you may be sure, if a river promises anything in the way of improvement and has an assured depth—I do not care what it is—there will be traffic on it, and you will not create traffic by a greater depth. You may multiply the amount; you may greatly increase it; but, if it is a proper artery of commerce, that commerce will be there on the four feet and a half which now exists just as surely as it would be on a greater depth.

Now, in answer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], it is true that organizations have favored this improvement. There has been a strong public sentiment in favor of it, and I do not wish to disparage the importance of that public sentiment. Out in Kansas City they raised something over a million dollars to put boats on the river. They have shown, however, most commendable prudence; they put that money in the bank, and it was stated a few days ago that they had purchased a boat from the proceeds of the interest on the money they had put in the bank. They have spent some minor sums for boats, I believe, and perhaps for wharves at East St. Louis; but the quantity of traffic that has been developed has been trivial, and I feel that as usual railroad freight rates will be decreased, and this will draw traffic from the river to the railroads. I have known a number of instances in which men have gotten together and uttered their condemnation of the railways, declared for river improvements and projected boat lines, and have continued that until Saturday night, and on Monday morning they have made some arrangement with the railway lines to carry all their freight. That is what I fear will happen in this particular case, although the interval may be somewhat longer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that true peculiarly of the Missouri River?

Mr. BURTON. Not at all. I merely mention that as an illustration.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has that not occurred in connection with practically every river in the United States?

Mr. BURTON. The fact of the matter is that the whole situation there is due to an unnatural division of freight rates. The rate on first-class freight from New York City to St. Louis, a distance of nearly 1,000 miles, is 87½ cents a hundred pounds; to Kansas City, less than 400 miles farther, it is $1.47½, or 60 cents for that 400 miles alone. Anyone can see in a moment that that is an unnatural division of freight rates. You can not blame the people at Kansas City or anywhere else for agitating for this waterway, but the question is, Mr. President, Shall we spend $20,000,000 and incur a burden of $560,000 a year merely for the sake of bringing down the freight rate, when one order, one stroke of the pen of the Interstate Commerce Commission, could accomplish the same result? I have such absolute confidence that this will result in nothing but waste and that no traffic will develop that I feel, Mr. President, that I should not be doing my duty if I did not point out the prospect ahead of us in making this appropriation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not hear the early part of the Senator's address, and consequently I can not tell just what conclusion the Senator is going to draw from the facts which he has stated, but the facts which he has just pointed out as to the effect of water transportation on freight rates to Chicago, for instance, operating so far as that from the Mississippi River, and the fact that Kansas City had raised a million dollars for a project to put a boat line on the Missouri River and had purchased a boat to put on the river, the result of which was the lowering of the freight rate——

Mr. BURTON. It has not been done yet. It may be, and yet I doubt it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, the Senator said, as I understand—that was practically the burden of his argument—that that would be the result. Does not that demonstrate the fact, notwithstanding the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, even under the statute as it is now, although it has hardly as yet had a full opportunity to operate, having only been passed in 1910, that water competition is a far more effective regulator of freight rates than the Interstate Commerce Commission? And does it not demonstrate that water competition, even though it is not actually competing, is worth all that we propose to expend on it?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, that is a question which would require a good while to answer, but I will go into it briefly. First, there is no question but that water competition, actual or potential, does have a tendency to lower freight rates on railroads. But whether the waters be improved at Government expense or the railroads built by private capital, in either case it is a contribution from the resources of the country. Any judicious policy should cause the two to harmonize. It is a waste of capital and an injudicious line of action to do in an indirect way, by wasting millions of dollars in the digging out of a channel, what can be done by legislation without such waste.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is undoubtedly familiar with the effect which the Interstate Commerce Commission itself gives to water transportation as a competing factor in fixing railroad rates.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And that if water transportation was not possible, if it did not exist at all, there would be apparently no prospect of securing the same effect from governmental regulation. It is recognized by the highest court in the land, and constantly recognized by the Interstate Commerce Commission as a factor in determining freight rates; that is, where water competition exists the Interstate Commerce Commission recognizes it as a legitimate reason for lowering freight rates, and where it does not exist it recognizes the absence of it as a legitimate reason for refusing to lower freight rates.

Mr. BURTON. Water transportation does already exist there. The depth which is stated in the report is a minimum of 4½ feet the year round, sufficient for barges, and, no doubt, in great degree, it has already had its effect in lowering freight rates; but the true principle is this: Waterways as well as railways are proper agencies for the carrying of freight, but each has, and should occupy, its proper field. If there is a river where there will be no profitable result in improving it as a factor in developing the resources of the country it ought not to be improved, because every dollar expended upon it is wasted. As was stated by President Hadley, it would be a good deal cheaper to spend a few thousand dollars more for judges and commissions who would fix fair rates.

Now, there is one other point with which I want to deal before passing from the Senator's question. Is it quite fair to the interior localities in the country that have no waterway competition for the United States Government to build canals and waterways simply for the sake of compelling competing railways to lower their rates? This money that is paid on the Missouri River is raised by taxation from the whole United States, from the inland localities as well as those bordering on the sea and on the river. Now, by every dollar which you diminish rates on a railroad where it competes with a waterway, you inevitably compel an increase in the rates which the railroad will charge in the interior, away from the waterways. Is it not fair that those who have the burden to pay alike in the interior should have fair treatment? Is it fair that they should be discriminated against because of the amount that is raised from them for this purpose? It is a perfectly clear proposition that if you lower rates in one locality below a normal level you have to raise them in another.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The question which the Senator from Ohio asks raises, in my judgment, the most important principle in the fixing of freight rates in this country, particularly as applied to interior points. Undoubtedly this is an injustice to the interior cities of the country to require them to contribute to the development of harbor facilities at the terminal points of railroads——

Mr. BURTON. I would not go quite that far; not on a river, where there is a natural harbor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. You may limit it to a harbor, but I regard that the same principle in less degree applies to the improvement of terminal facilities in harbors, for transcontinental railroads. Take any of the great ports on the Pacific coast where Congress has expended millions of dollars in order to improve harbor facilities which are used for terminals, for transshipment, by the great transcontinental railroads. In other words, any just principle of railroad regulation ought not to allow the railroads to lower their rates so as to shut out water competition or to lower them for that reason below a reasonable degree and then recoup themselves by charging higher rates to interior points. The just principle of freight rate, considering water competition and real competition, is that there shall be real competition; and when the point is reached where the railroad can not compete profitably with the waterway, the waterway should get the freight and do the business. The entire country would get the benefit of it, and the rate of the railroads to the point where there is water competition should not be fixed lower than a reasonable rate; and the interior points would have the benefit in accordance with conditions, if different conditions existed there, of the same reasonable rate as was enjoyed at the point where there is water competition.

Mr. BURTON. There are two things I would suggest to the Senator from Washington. In the first place, where there is a natural waterway and traffic exists upon it, its improvement can not do otherwise than promote the general interests not only of the section in which it is located, but the whole country. That applies especially to the improvement of our harbors. I think it would not be an exaggeration to say that the improvement of the harbors on the Gulf coast raised the value of agricultural lands for five or six hundred miles to the north.

A word on the other point to which the Senator from Washington referred, when he said that if the waterways can carry the freight more conveniently, they should carry it. You can not dispose of that proposition quite so briefly, for the variety of freight to be carried is great and some commodities would naturally be carried on the waterways and some by the railroads.

Very often the opening of a water route does not detract from but adds to the business of the railroad parallel to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understood him, he thought it was poor economy to appropriate so much money for improving these rivers, when the same result might be accomplished through a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BURTON. Or by legislation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is true that some of the Missouri point rail rates, as well as Pacific point rail rates, are what would be considered an unremunerative rate or a rate below what any commission would fix.

Mr. BURTON. If that is the case, I fancy they would not order them to be lowered. I really do not know, but I have not understood——

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is my understanding that a great many of these rates are fixed at water competitive points at rates which would be absolutely unremunerative, but they were so fixed for the reason that the railroads could collect the freight and get traffic which otherwise they would lose altogether, and they might better haul that at cost, or even below cost, than to let it go to the river.

My point is this: That potential or actual water competition does fix the rate and lower rates below what could be fixed by the commission, because the only authority of the commission would be to fix a just and reasonable rate, which must of itself be remunerative. Otherwise it would not be a consitutionally fixed rate.

Mr. BURTON. I am not informed as to the rates on the Missouri River, but I desire to state to the Senator from Michigan certain practical facts. It can not be that any condition would arise from this improvement which would have the effect of lowering those rates so as to divide the business with the river.

First of all, let me say that previous to 1903 there was shipped from St. Louis a considerable quantity of grain down the river to New Orleans. Now I understand there is not a single ton shipped on the Mississippi. In 1906 there was a great cotton crop. Not only were all the warehouses at Memphis filled, but cotton was stored on the street. There was an ample channel, 10 or 12 feet, from there on down to the mouth of the river at New Orleans. Yet in spite of this railway congestion not a single bale of cotton went by the river.

In 1910 ex-President Roosevelt bound a bale of cotton at Memphis, with the intention of reviving river shipments of cotton from Memphis to New Orleans. I do not know whether that bale went down by water or not, but I am quite sure that if it did no other bale was shipped from Memphis to New Orleans by the river. If that is true it shows the waterway can serve no useful purpose as a freight regulator.

Mr. PERCY. Does the Senator know how much of that cotton which was then stored in Memphis came into Memphis over the Mississippi River?

Mr. BURTON. A very considerable amount, no doubt.

Mr. PERCY. Is it not true that the rate by the Mississippi River affects the freight rates of railroads?

Mr. BURTON. No one would think of abandoning the Mississippi River as a factor in the problem of transportation.

I want to say in this connection that one of the presidents of the Mississippi River Commission told me that on three trips which he made down the Mississippi River no request was made of him for a greater depth than now exists. Requests were confined to those for revetment or levees or something of that kind. What does that show? It shows that there is sufficient depth.

Mr. PERCY. Nine feet.

Mr. BURTON. Nine feet from Cairo. As to the river at St. Louis, the reports of 1911 state:

> During the past year the river stages have been remarkably low, yet there was maintained a channel depth of 8 feet during the entire season, while the river was unobstructed by ice, except for short periods, at several places where the depths were reduced to 6½ feet, until readjustment was brought into action from these shoals, when the required depth was obtained.

There is now from the city of St. Louis a depth of 8 feet, and yet the traffic has been steadily diminishing. Nevertheless it is proposed to carry the 8-foot depth up 400 miles into the interior, in the delusive hope that traffic will be developed.

I thank the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] for asking me a question which leads me to make a suggestion that the traffic on this river is almost exclusively conveyed for short distances. Cotton is hauled on the river to Memphis from points above and below and also to Vicksburg and other points, but when it reaches those places—certainly Memphis—it goes on to destination by rail and no further resort is had to the river.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. We hear a great deal about river navigation in Europe. I think the Senator went abroad one year as a member of a commission. I should like to ask him what river or canal in Europe has an equal channel or an equal depth to the Mississippi from St. Louis to the sea?

Mr. BURTON. The Rhine has the same; 9 feet, 10½ feet part of the way. I would suggest, however, that the Rhine has a more perfect channel than any river I know of, but we have spent more money on the section of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio than the German Government in the same time has spent on the Rhine. The results are 191,000 tons on this section of the Mississippi River and 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 tons on the Rhine. If I had time I would go over the whole subject of the very wide difference in conditions which exists in relation to these rivers, but I do not wish to detain the Senate. One of these differences is the greater quantity of freight that can be carried by American trains. The trains on the railways on both sides of the Rhine look like toys, consisting of 5 to 8 ton cars. I want to give some figures taken from the Railway Age Gazette in regard to the maximum haul by freight trains in this country. The figures may have been increased in the last few years.

> On the 18th of June, 1909, the Pennsylvania Railroad hauled a train of 94 gondola cars from Altoona to Harrisburg, 124 miles, with a load of 5,042 tons, and an average load of 56.3 tons per car. The total weight of the train, including locomotive and cars, was 6,992 tons. In August, 1909, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway hauled 100 steel cars loaded with 7,433 tons of iron ore from Ashtabula, Ohio, to Youngstown in the same State, a distance of 65 miles. This is an average per car of 74.3 tons.

It will be noted by this that in the perfection of the railroad equipment and of the roadbed it has now become possible to carry 7,500 tons of freight on a single train. I think I am safe in saying that there is no European railway, outside of one near Cardiff, would be able to carry a thousand tons.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit, I was about to ask him if it was not a fact that the German Government, controlling to a considerable extent both the railways and the water transportation of that Empire, practically prohibits the use of large cars and large engines on their steam roads?

Mr. BURTON. I would not say that it is a practical prohibition. The smaller size is due to the conditions existing there. The fact that the roadbeds usually have heavy grades and curves is one factor. The extremely high cost of new right of way is another factor having an important bearing on railway construction.

Then, again, their whole system of distribution affects the size of the cars to be used. They want to fill a car for one customer or for one locality. I presume tradition, also, has something to do with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if the German Government does not absolutely direct, at least encourage, the transportation of all heavy material by water?

Mr. BURTON. Decidedly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Decidedly.

Mr. BURTON. It is not only an encouragement, but the conditions are such that they can do it properly.

I do not agree with those who ascribe the large traffic on rivers and canals in Europe to the governmental policy. There is a difference of natural conditions which contributes largely to the same result.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. CRAWFORD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Washington is next.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just wanted to ask a single question of the Senator, who has been to Germany and no doubt made special observations with reference to this question. Is it not true there are a number of railroad lines paralleling the Rhine River?

Mr. BURTON. One on each side.

Mr. POINDEXTER. One on each side; and notwithstanding that fact there is water traffic on the Rhine?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not true that the same conditions exist, probably to a less extent, on the Seine in France?

Mr. BURTON. Not by any means to the same extent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Are there not a large number of boats coming into the city of Paris?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; from points near to the city of Paris. The city of Paris has the largest tonnage of any city in France, consisting largely of building material and supplies for the city.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not fundamental, making allowance for the difference in the amount of traffic, that water transportation in one country is controlled by the same conditions in another country, and if it exists in Europe in competition with the railroads it can exist in this country in competition with the railroads, the same amount of traffic being in existence?

Mr. BURTON. I would say most certainly not, because there are radical differences. I do not wish to go into that to any great extent, but in the preliminary report of the National Waterways Commission the difference between the two are very fully set forth. If anyone desires to study the subject it is treated there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under the law of Germany there is a preferential in favor of water transportation?

Mr. BURTON. There is in France, not in Germany. The rate must be 20 per cent higher on the railroads in France; not in Germany. If 20 per cent is not sufficient to sustain water-borne traffic, the Government would undoubtedly afford other advantages. The State governs the canals.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not think that the difference of conditions here and on the Rhine and on the Danube are owing to our existing law and to the rulings the Interstate Commerce Commission have made concerning that law. We have a sort of a long and short haul provision, but it was modified so that a railroad was permitted to reduce its rates where it had water competition without being compelled to reduce its intermediate rates where no water competition exists.

If I understand the condition of things in Germany and in Austria, such a law and such a ruling do not prevail; and when a railroad there reduces it rates, say from Mannheim to Düsseldorf on the Rhine, it must make a corresponding reduction in local rates. As a consequence it does not do it, and as a consequence of not doing it the river carries the heavy, bulky products—ore and coal and lumber and various things—and the railroads carry other articles between Mannheim and Düsseldorf. They thus avoid railroad freight congestion, and as another consequence the river does an actual business. Is not the trouble here owing to the fact that we permit the railroad to meet water competition without requiring them to make the same reduction as to intermediate or interior points?

Mr. BURTON. I think the statement the Senator from Mississippi has made is an item in determining the difference, but those are not the essential differences between conditions here and in Europe.

I will refer to the preliminary report of the United States National Waterways Commission made in 1910, beginning on page 30.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the number of the document?

Mr. BURTON. Senate document No. 301, Sixty-first Congress, second session.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that the success of river and canal navigation in France and Germany is largely due to the fact that the Government owns the railroads, and that the rivers and the railroads cooperate in a general system of distribution?

Mr. BURTON. I think that has some effect, because where there is harmony there will be development. But in Russia, where the Government improves the rivers and also owns the railroads, there is the same policy of rate cutting in summer, and of discriminating against places that develop a big boat traffic, as there is in the United States, where the waterways are improved by the Government and the railroads are owned by private capital.

One reason for the supremacy of railway transportation in this country is that we are very much better furnished with railroads than Europe, as a whole. The railroad mileage here, not only by population but speaking geographically, is greater than in Europe.

It is a notable fact that the railway mileage per square mile in the United States, at least in the settled portions, is equal to or greater than that in Europe, while the entire mileage per thousand of population is five times as great, thereby showing that the United States is much more adequately furnished with means for railway transportation.

I might at this point dwell briefly on a subject which I had intended to speak on a little later. The most effective policy will be to provide cooperation between the railroads and the waterways, voluntary or compulsory. Then the question will settle itself. Where the river or the waterway is the best agency for carrying freight it will be adopted. Where it is not, the railway or some other agency will be adopted. To a large extent all our appropriations for rivers and canals will be wasteful and ineffective until that policy is brought about.

For instance, take a railroad leading to a city on the Mississippi River. There ought to be a common terminal or wharf to which the railroad can bring its freight and transfer it to boat. Instead of there being cooperation there is at present constant conflict between them. Until cooperation is brought about there will be rivalry, and in that rivalry the railroads will be sure to get the advantage. No matter how much you may regulate them, no matter what statutes you may pass, they will be sure to get the benefit because of their enormously greater mileage and the greater ease and convenience of distribution. A railroad can overcome considerable elevations and be built to almost any point, but the river only goes in a fixed channel. Our warehouses and our manufacturing establishments are located on railroads. The manufacturer can bring the railroad to his establishment, but it is impossible to bring the river to it.

I think these appropriations for locks and dams in rivers are very largely premature until we settle the basic problem of securing cooperation between these two agencies.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would ask the Senator from Ohio whether, if we can secure legislation such as he refers to, that would accomplish cooperation between the railways and the waterways, he would then be prepared to enter upon a comprehensive plan for waterway development—river development.

Mr. BURTON. I would favor improving now a river where it is a useful agent of transportation, but I am afraid there are very few of them that are useful agencies outside of a few exceptional trunk-line channels and some minor streams where there is local traffic.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I recall hearing a very able speech from the Senator from Ohio before the River and Harbor Congress in which he approved of their motto—a policy rather than a project—and intimated that he would not oppose the aim of their operations, which was the expenditure of $50,000,000 upon the waterways and harbors of the country, if a proper system could be devised. May I ask the Senator what system he would suggest as an appropriate one that would result in the expenditure for a continuous number of years of $50,000,000 in the development of our waterways.

Mr. BURTON. I remember very distinctly what I said before that River and Harbor Congress. I said it was a question not so much of money, but of what was actually needed. I would not oppose an appropriation of $50,000,000, or even more. I have the credit or discredit, one or the other, of bringing in the largest river and harbor bill ever passed by Congress. It carried $86,000,000 in appropriations and authorizations, and I did not fear it at all, because I thought it was unusually free from waste or improper items and because it carried so many great projects to completion. That was the bill of 1907.

But in order to answer the Senator's question more fully, I would say, however, that it is putting the cart before the horse to say you will spend $50,000,000 on river and harbor projects. First, you want to select out your river projects, which, I believe, was a part of the Senator's plan. After selecting the rivers that need improvement, then find out how much it will cost to improve them.

Neither do I wish to be understood, Mr. President, as favoring the suspension of appropriations for rivers. There are certain classes of them that may be improved very profitably now. But what I do say is that any large development, any comprehensive development, of the inland waterway system of this country is not possible under present conditions; that is, you can not make it a valuable asset to the country. The money that you expend for it will be very largely wasted.

While I am on that subject let me say another thing. Before any such system is commenced, there should be a proper adjustment of costs and benefits between the General Government and the localities particularly benefited.

We have in one of the engineers' reports a recommendation for locks and dams costing well over $1,000,000, and with a possibility of their costing $3,000,000; and if you will examine the document, you will find that the argument most strenuously pressed by its advocates is that it would make available 1,150 acres of land.

Now, take the case to which I shall refer in a few minutes, the Big Sandy River, near my own State, the boundary line between Virginia and Kentucky. That has been improved, and the appropriations for it thus far have been $1,701,000. What is the object? To afford transportation to certain coal mines that are up that river. It does not seem to me that the Federal Government should be subjected to the burden of paying that expense just to bring out coal from that river and its two branches. Let those who are benefited pay a part of the cost.

Now, there is another thing about it. It is almost always true that the pressure for an appropriation here is strongest just in the degree that it will benefit some private interest, and the pressure is much less where it is for the general benefit.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not in his judgment private individuals have a right to go upon a navigable stream and take possession of it for the purpose of making an improvement in that stream.

Mr. BURTON. There has never been any difficulty about their getting consent to make improvements. Of course, if they went there to build a lock or a dam or any obstruction, or if they went there to change the course they would need to have the consent of the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. We would first have to authorize the Secretary of War to grant his consent. Now, take the New River, for instance, in Tennessee, which was improved some 25 or 30 years ago for the purpose of getting at the New River coal mines. The Government made that navigable for flatboats in order that that coal might be made accessible and could be taken to market. Could an individual enterprise have gone into that stream and made improvements, under the law, as an interstate proposition?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly; if it had the consent of the Government to do it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Whose consent?

Mr. BURTON. The consent of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. They must get it, and that is just what they were asking for; not that, because it is completed, but similar enterprises are sought to be developed under the legislation of Congress. Is not that what this appropriation bill undertakes to do?

Mr. BURTON. This appropriation bill is made up for the most part of appropriations payable directly from the Federal Treasury. In perhaps 15 or 20 instances there is provision made for participation.

Mr. HEYBURN. If in that enterprise they had improved New River, for instance, would they not have been either interfered with in their enjoyment of the river as improved or compelled to share it with others?

Mr. BURTON. Of course, if they charged tolls or exacted the exclusive use for one company they would need to have the consent of Congress, and that would have been rather grudgingly granted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it not better that the Government should make the improvement and control the use of the river?

Mr. BURTON. I think not when it is so largely for private interests.

Mr. HEYBURN. Those mines have opened up an entirely new section of coal development which, perhaps, never would have been known to exist.

Mr. BURTON. Not only have we new sections of coal to be developed but we have a great many old ones under existing facilities of rail or water.

One other thing in this connection which, I think, bears a very important relation to the whole subject of river and harbor improvements is the protection of banks and the building of levees. This bill raises the appropriation for the Mississippi River below Cairo, or rather below Cape Girardeau, from $3,500,000, as it came from the House, to $6,000,000. It also provides that $4,000,000 of the amount shall be expended in the building of levees.

Mr. President, I do not think that any voice here will be raised in opposition to fair, generous provision for those people who have suffered a most frightful misfortune because of this great flood, but I do not wish the bill to carry any inference that hereafter the Government is going to bear by general taxation the cost of the building of levees in the lower Mississippi. So far as navigation is concerned, which is the proper function of our legislation, it is not necessary to protect those lands from overflow. That may seem a harsh view to take of it, but the main object has been the protection of the great areas of adjacent property. In the past the people of the lower Mississippi have contributed very liberally. They have spent more money for levees than the Federal Government. In view of this great emergency this year, we ought to take care of the situation, but, as far as I am concerned, I do not wish it to be understood that this bill is a committal to the policy that the United States shall take exclusive charge of those levees in the future. There is a great amount of work to be done in revetment. That has a bearing principally upon navigation, and incidentally upon the protection of levees and private property. I think it must be agreed by all that that is the proper function of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, there is another point that I wish to make.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. PERCY. Right at that point, I do not understand that the Senator's statement means that he would hereafter expect to antagonize the building of levees upon some scheme of contribution to a joint fund by both the Federal Government and the local levee board.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that I should. What the Mississippi River Commission ought to have accomplished before this great flood was a permanent division under which their funds were to be devoted to dredging and to the building of revetment, while the abutting property should take care of the levees. They probably labored under a sort of misapprehension. They thought the levee system was practically finished.

I would not say that under a proper division I would oppose a certain participation by the Federal Government in the construction of levees, though, as I stated, I should be very glad to see that division absolutely made; that is, revetment of the channel to be taken care of by the Federal Government and the levees by the adjacent States.

Mr. PERCY. With the levees up to what the Government engineers say would be a safe grade, I should think that thereafter the principal sums appropriated by the Federal Government should be used for revetment purposes. Until that grade is reached, I think the principal portion of those funds should be used in levee building.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly in the present emergency the most pressing construction is the levees.

Mr. PERCY. There is one other feature to be noted. While the engineers do not say that levee building is as imperatively necessary in aid of navigation as the revetment, the voice of the commission has always been that levees are essential to regulate the navigation of the river. Doubtless the Senator recalls the testimony of Col. Sutler, of the Corps of Army Engineers, and of Capt. Leach, and of Col. Kingman, corroborating them, that if the levees did not protect a single acre of land they would recommend the construction of them there by the Federal Government as an aid to navigation.

Mr. BURTON. I have given considerable attention to the effect of levees on navigation, and I think up to a certain point they are of essential importance.

I wish to state in this connection, Mr. President, that there ought to be a review of our river and harbor projects so that our policy may harmonize with the present conditions. There are a great many streams in the country that were very valuable for navigation before a dredge was ever put into them by the United States Government, and now after the expenditure of very large amounts they are almost useless. Two years ago I called attention to the Red River in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas. I think it also touches another State. At the close of the Civil War a great fleet gathered at Shreveport, scores of boats, some of them 200 feet long, fine palatial passenger steamers, bringing out the cotton.

Let us see what the traffic was for the last year over the 476 miles below Fulton Harbor. The tonnage, aside from saw logs, which would go there without any improvements, was 10 tons of grain, 16 tons of provisions, 26 tons of fish, and 10 tons of ice. In all, 62 tons were carried on those 476 miles of river. The Government has expended about $3,000,000 on that stream. There is an appropriation of $50,000 for it in this bill, which is at the rate of $806 for every ton of merchandise or grain carried on that river in the preceding year.

It seems to me, Mr. President, it is a pretty strong case to appropriate $50,000 for a stream that carries 62 tons, with a valuation of $6,667. The amount we are asked to appropriate in this bill is practically eight times as much as all the value of the merchandise and freight carried.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the question of railroads paralleling the river enter into it?

Mr. BURTON. There are railroads in that region, of course. I do not recall whether they exactly parallel it or not, but I fancy that they reach all the important towns.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the existence of navigable water that might be used for the purpose of transportation affect the railroad rates at all?

Mr. BURTON. I am inclined to think it does, to speak with entire fairness.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have in mind a river on which the Government has spent a lot of money to make it navigable, and while the river was not much used it reduced the freight rate $8 a ton on the railroads.

Mr. BURTON. That, I maintain, is an entirely unnatural way of producing or obtaining a salutary result. We ought to have some other way besides wasting money in the improvement of channels.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the freight rate on the rail line was the normal charge made for carrying the traffic on lines that are not connected with a river in any way, does the Senator not think the river traffic might be much heavier than it is?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I think it would. It does evidently lower freight rates; but that is not all by any means. There is the quicker transmission, the better preservation of freight by putting it in wooden cars, and the fact that when loaded the shipper can get a bill of lading and take that to a bank and borrow on it as security. All those things enter into the problem. Those are natural advantages which the railroad has over the waterway.

Then there is this artificial advantage that the railway has over the waterway of adjusting its rates so as to get just below the figure which the freight can be profitably carried by water.

I want to call attention to a class of appropriations which I think has been more objectionable than any other, those in which provision has been made for locks and dams in numerous streams. I am glad to know that there is omitted from this bill, and I congratulate the chairman of the committee——

Mr. NELSON. How many locks and dams are on the Ohio River, if the Senator will tell me?

Mr. BURTON. Twenty or thirty, and all in active use.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the Senator object to locks and dams on the Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I have often heard——

Mr. NELSON. I want to say further to the Senator from Ohio, if he will allow me to interrupt him, I am conscious of the fact that probably we have not as good a river and harbor bill in the Senate as we had while the Senator from Ohio was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That is our misfortune, and I can easily reply to it, but I do not want to weary the attention of the Senate with that matter. I will concede for the benefit of the Senator from Ohio that we had a more perfect river and harbor bill when he was chairman of the committee of the House.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I regret the Senator from Minnesota takes so antagonistic a position. I have always taken it for granted that any item in any appropriation bill could be criticized and that it was the duty of a Senator to criticize it. I know the opposition that arises in the newspapers of some locality when a Member of Congress points out injudicious items in which it is interested, but I think I should be lacking in courage, I should be lacking in my obligation to the Senate and to the country, when objectionable items creep into a bill if I did not point them out. That is the course I propose to pursue at all times, whatever the opposition may be or from whatever source it may come.

I was about to congratulate the Senator from Minnesota on the fact that the Big Sandy River and the Levisa and the Tug Forks are left out of this bill. This was a project for 21 locks and dams. To show how readily persons may go astray, beginning in 1899 delegations came to Washington to advocate that improvement. They gave the most glowing account of the quantities of coal near the river and its two branches. They stated that by the building of several dams a very large amount would be available. That was an improvement which was provided for very largely by amendments added here in the Senate. It was opposed, and somewhat strenuously, in the House from the start. There are now five locks and dams built at a cost of about $1,500,000.

Several years ago there were 545 tons of coal transported on this river and its two branches. A year later the amount had decreased to 6 tons, and last year not a single ton was transported.

Another thing, those people asserted that you could not build railroads into that region. Now, let us see what is said in a report made by a Government engineer on that subject:

> So far the improvement has reached but one coal mine which ships principally by rail.

In the same letter it is said:

> Few, if any, of the coal mines lie in such a position that the coal can be readily placed on coal barges.

In addition to this cost of a million and a half, or thereabouts, there is an average cost of about $20,000 for annual care and maintenance.

Mr. President, I will give a few figures in regard to the Kentucky River. I do so because I think that is one of the most valuable object lessons in regard to the effect of improvements upon the development of traffic.

Until 1889 there were five dams. A comparison of the traffic of 1889 with 1909, when there were 11 dams, shows that the amount carried has diminished. A comparison with two years later, in 1911, when another dam was added making 12 in all, shows it has still further diminished; all of which indicates the gradually decreasing importance of water-borne traffic in the growth of the country.

There are other streams to which I thought of referring, like the Brazos and the Trinity in Texas and the Muskingum in my own State, but I have already detained the Senate much longer than I had intended and I will not dwell upon it.

Mr. President, occasionally when views which seem to a Senator valuable on questions of legislation are presented the attempt is made to destroy the influence of what he may say by some reference to his own State. It is in line with the old plan of those who defend themselves against accusations for offenses by abusing the prosecuting attorney. I do not think there is very much force in it, but I am perfectly ready to explain my connection with the Ohio River.

In the first place the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] with his community at Pittsburgh is far more interested in that river than is my State, although it bears the proud name of the Ohio River. In like manner are the States of West Virginia, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois interested.

A comparison of the Ohio with others has been made. Why, it has 300 times the traffic that is carried on the Missouri River. It has an annual tonnage of ten or twelve million. This with the Erie or barge canal are the most hopeful projects to improve in this country. If those two do not succeed I do not know of any waterway that will pay for its improvement. The improvement was commenced 20 years before I had any connection with the River and Harbor Committee. The completion of this great project under the present plan was not commenced until after I had left that committee. It was made a political issue against me in my State, it being maintained that I had stood in the way of this improvement, because I treated it as I did all other projects whether in my own State or elsewhere, by the same iron rule, the same standard of comparison.

So I may state, Mr. President, it is hardly fair to suggest the idea that the Ohio River is obtaining a larger appropriation than it deserves. It is my duty, as it is the duty of every Senator who represents his State, to see that it has fair treatment and not one iota more. Not only is this the case, but, as I have already stated, I think it is by no means just to lay upon me the responsibility for the initiation of that improvement or for its prosecution.

Mr. President, in many ways I approve the suggestions of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I think, to speak freely, that many of his projects anticipate an ideal condition rather than those which now exist. Many of us have given much attention to the impounding of waters by reservoirs. As regards the upper Mississippi that would be impracticable. We have some reservoirs there but they are few. A reservoir system in the upper Missouri or, I think, on the Missouri anywhere would be entirely impracticable. You must always bear in mind that floods are liable to come not from the headwaters but from the central or lower portions of the stream. I do think, however, that there is enough in this subject to merit our careful attention. So, on the recommendation of the National Waterways Commission, a provision has been made for an examination of the headwaters of the Monongahela and the Allegheny. There is the place, if any, where a reservoir system might diminish the floods in the Ohio and the Mississippi. But with the present stage of the development of our country the cost of constructing reservoirs is likely to be altogether out of proportion to the benefit. When we have densely populated areas, as in Japan and in Holland, and the value of agricultural lands reaches the same figures here and the pressure of population on every acre becomes the same, then, perhaps, reservoirs or other similar provision against floods will be feasible and profitable. I do not say but that in exceptional cases it would be feasible now. In any event it is worthy of examination.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that the proper working out of this proposition requires not only cooperation between the Federal Government and the communities affected but the improvement of streams in such a manner as to develop all their possibilities of beneficial use. In a well-developed country such a policy can be carried out. But the problem before us just now, while it should look to an ultimate policy of most adequate and complete development, must stop short of that in my judgment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had expected when the discussion of this bill was on that we would have an expression and reference to the work of the Waterways Commission, its investigations abroad, involving cheaper transportation through a system of canals. There has been great silence upon the question of the control of the waters in foreign countries. I know the Senator who now occupies the floor gave careful attention to that question abroad, and it would have been gratifying, and I have no doubt illuminating, to have had some reference to the work and the results of the work of that commission which examined these same questions as applied to those older countries.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I can not but express my thanks to the Senator from Idaho for his very friendly expression. In the first place, our conclusions are concisely stated in printed reports, the final report having been brought to my desk this very day. It is Document No. 469, Sixty-second Congress, second session. The first portion of it particularly—somewhat less than a hundred pages—dwells on the subjects to which the Senator from Idaho refers, as well as on others. I would state, however, that that report occupies a somewhat wider field than the question of river and harbor appropriations.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask, then, under what legislative head will we come in contact with the consideration of the developed facts gathered by that commission? I had thought that when such questions as were raised by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] came before the Senate the information gathered by this Waterways Commission would be most valuable, and that it was gathered with a view to the consideration of just such questions as are now before us.

Mr. BURTON. I will state in that connection, Mr. President, that not later probably than Saturday it is my expectation to introduce two bills relating to water power, one on public lands and the other as an amendment to the general dam act, both of which are recommended by the commission, or in line with its recommendations, and other bills may perhaps follow.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, I can not anticipate the nature of that presentation, but it would seem to me that it would be duplicating to some extent the work proposed by this bill. If we are going to have a new and better system of controlling and using the waters of the country as a result of the work of the waterways commission, why not bring it in in connection with this legislation?

Mr. BURTON. Well, this bill is largely an appropriation bill, and whatever suggestions we might make would be on general questions of policy. I do not think they run together.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I merely want to call attention to section 2 of this bill, being an amendment which is proposed and approved by the Senate committee.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall cause the Chief of Engineers of the Army and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to report to Congress, in which shall be included a preliminary report not later than December 1, 1912, upon the saving, as well as other advantages, which can be accomplished by the adoption of the continuing contract system, the rapidity with which projects should be completed, upon methods of standardization by which the waterways of the country may be improved uniformly in proportion to their capacities and to the existing or probable demands of general commerce, and also report upon one or more systematized schemes of such improvement, involving all waterways heretofore examined, together with any natural or artificial channels, essential for the utilization thereof, whether heretofore examined or not; also upon all projects heretofore adopted, the further improvement of which is not desirable or the expenditure upon which is out of proportion to the benefit derived therefrom.

I hope for favorable information as the result of such a report.

I end as I commenced, by saying that I am not intending to vote against this bill, but it is nevertheless one in which there are glaring defects, not so much the fault of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, as of the system under which we are working and the difficulty of avoiding the insistent demands of localities and local interests and of developing, in the face of pressure, a system which shall be fair and helpful to the whole country.

[Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to consume about 5 or 10 minutes of the time of the Senate.

My own people down in the lower Mississippi Valley are suffering great hardships and are destined to suffer still greater hardships before the expiration of this crop year. The water is on the land; the boll weevil is waiting to get on the cotton; and the charbon is amongst the stock, killing horses, mules, hogs, sheep, and cattle. The disease is a result of water exposure and food deprivation. The negroes are huddled helplessly in the towns. There is industrial anarchy and chaos everywhere.

I do not want to take much of the time of the Senate. I do not want to assume a critical attitude toward the Committee on Commerce. It has acted very kindly to us, with a spirit we could not have asked anything further from. But I do wish to express a few ideas in connection with the general subject more fitted for future than for present consumption.

I think that the great Mississippi River problem ought to be segregated, and ought to be dealt with as the Panama Canal was dealt with. Its magnitude justifies it, and the greatness of the results as an investment to the American people would justify it; and I am a great deal dissatisfied with the present dribbling policy.

The Mississippi River does not present a thousand problems; it presents one. It ought to be dealt with as one. There is a great valley, unexcelled in fertility, unparalelled in potentialities, and it ought to be handled in a way worthy of itself.

Mr. President, if it cost as much wherever necessary to canalize and straighten, and wherever necessary to revet, and wherever necessary to levee the Mississippi River as it has cost and will cost to build the Panama Canal—$400,000,000—that amount of money spent upon the Mississippi River would be worth as an investment to the American people ten times what the Panama Canal as an investment is or ever will be worth to them.

I do not want to say anything that will leave bad feeling behind. I do not mean as a criticism what I am about to say now. I do not mean to leave with its utterance the thought in anybody's mind that I am even complaining of conditions as they are, but I do know—I do at least believe—that if the Mississippi River had taken its source in the northwestern part of Pennsylvania and had flowed through the thickly settled portions of the northern and eastern country and had debouchèd somewhere in Massachusetts it would all be walled by now with granite, if granite had been found necessary to confine its waters. This Mississippi is one problem, and the problem consists in dredging the Mississippi River, in canalizing it and straightening it at places, in revetting it at other places, and above all in giving everywhere continuous lines of levees approximately equidistant from one another upon the opposite bank of the Mississippi River.

There is no fault about the Eads theory. It works perfectly. Wherever that great river is controlled during flood times between embankments, keeping it within its channel, and the levees approximately equidistant from one another, there will follow mathematically the result of scouring out the bottom of the river, deepening the channel, preventing future floods by that process, as well as preventing present floods by the levee embankments themselves.

The only trouble is this: When you have a theory founded upon a condition, you must comply with the condition or your theory will not work. Thus far it has not worked, because there have been long distances where levees have not been built. In my State and a part of Louisiana, for example, there are 214 miles where the Government has adopted the walnut hills, as they are called, as a levee. These hills sometimes abut into the river, are sometimes a quarter of a mile from it and sometimes 20 miles from it, thus causing sagging and currenting and cross-currenting which has defeated the theory, because the condition of the theory has not been complied with, and it must be complied with if the theory itself is to work out.

But more than that has to be done, and it ought to be done not with a dribble year by year, but we ought to get at it like we went at the Panama Canal. "Here is your problem. Let us do it, and let us be done with it."

More than mere leveeing is necessary. At places the river ought to be straightened out and canalized. That was a part of the Eads theory, as well as levees and jetties and revetments. I think it would pay the United States Government, when they get through in Panama, to move up the dredge boats and other machinery and put them in the Mississippi River from St. Louis down, and above St. Louis as well, and utilize this plant in dredging the river to a depth of 12 or 14 feet.

You say the levees would cost $30,000,000 to bring them up to the Mississippi River Commission's standard. Now, remember, Senators, that in so far as the levees have been brought up to the standard, we have suffered no disaster. There is only one section on the Mississippi River where that has taken place, and that is in my levee district, in the Yazoo country. The man who worked there was called a crank upon the levee system. He has had the levees built not only to the tentative height and the tentative base, but to the standard height and base, and as a consequence the levees are 3 or 4 feet out of the water, and there has been no trouble and no disturbance. I say this, although my own land to-day is lying under water, because the levees in the lower districts broke and the water backed up onto the lands in the lower part of the upper district.

Here is a case where people have spent their money. In the lower levee districts, where my colleague lives, the people are paying 9 mills taxes, $1 a bale on their cotton, and, I think, $1 an acre on their land.

Mr. PERCY. Ten mills.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ten mills instead of nine.

Now, where we did complete the levees properly, as we did all above, we have not called upon the United States Government for anything for, I think, four years, nor have we called upon them for anything this year.

Why do you want to dribble? Why do you want to say a thing will cost $30,000,000, and we will put in $6,000,000 of it this year and $6,000,000 next and $6,000,000 next, instead of putting in $30,000,000 this year or next and having it done with. Why run the risk of having water like this come and destroy what improvements you have made? The calculation is that the present waters will destroy a million and a half in levees. I think when we get through with it is will be nearer two and a half millions. Why have what you have in process of construction destroyed, instead of completing the construction and being done with it? Why not defy the floods for all time by a completed structure?

Do not tell me we are not rich enough to do it. We are rich enough to do anything that is an investment and not a mere expenditure. You are spending millions upon nonproductive works, and this is a productive work. It is an investment. It is in no sense an expenditure at all. It is like building a house to rent. Just in proportion as you do the work, the people there are able to pay taxes to State, county, and Nation—to the Nation in shape of increased consumption of goods which are taxed and the tax upon which flows into the National Treasury.

I am not complaining now at all. I do not want to be understood as doing it. I understand that under the circumstances the Commerce Committee has acted more generously by us than I expected. I am very much pleased, but I do think that they ought to consider this matter as one worthy of being segregated and treated as one great national problem, and they ought to consider it from the standpoint of the navigability of the river more than they are now doing. I tell you, until you have got the continuous line of levees without a break in it you can not bring into operation the forces that you relied upon under the Eads theory to deepen the channel and thereby to anticipate the necessity of building higher embankments by deepening the channel, so as to confine the river within the banks. Thus in the future it will not be necessary to build higher and higher levees, but, on the contrary, we can spend less for embankments year after year.

I want to thank the Senate for its attention. I should like at some future day to make an address to the Senate upon the subject of the Mississippi River problem as it presents itself to my mind. I have uttered these few thoughts now because it seemed to me important to do it in connection with the question in its present attitude. I have said what little I have said as something suggestive of thought for the consideration of a great and complete scheme.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have abstained from making any remarks on this bill, because I have been so anxious to have it considered, and not because I had nothing to say. I will merely ask the Senate to sit here while we go through the bill. I am not going to make any speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. NELSON. We have dispensed with the formal reading of the bill, and the bill is now to be read for committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that order has heretofore been entered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

Improving South Bristol Harbor, Me., completing improvement in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 564, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 17, to insert:

Improving north of Pollock Rip Channel through the shoals lying near the entrance to Nantucket Sound, Mass., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 536, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendments were, on page 3, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty" and insert "forty," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That local interests shall contribute an equal amount," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Malden River, Mass.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 77, Sixty-second Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $40,000: Provided, That local interests contribute an equal amount.

Mr. NELSON. I hope the amendments will be disagreed to.

The amendments were rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 11, to insert:

Improving harbor at New Bedford and Fairhaven, Mass., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 442, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and upon the conditions therein prescribed, $56,610.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 20, to insert:

Improving the harbor of refuge, Block Island, R. I., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 828, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert:

Improving West River (New Haven Harbor), Conn.: For construction and maintenance in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 535, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $54,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 14, to strike out:

Improving Connecticut River, Conn.: For maintenance of improvement above Hartford, $25,000.

Mr. NELSON. We were in some doubt whether it was below or above Hartford, and we have agreed to let it go into conference and be settled there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

Improving harbor at Mamaroneck, N. Y., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1087, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $29,500: Provided, That any necessary easements for right of way and for the disposition of dredged material on Harbor Island be furnished by local interests free of cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 3, to insert:

Improving Jamaica Bay, N. Y., and entrance thereto in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1488, Sixtieth Congress, second session, $500,000, from which amount the Secretary of War may reimburse the city of New York each month for the dredging and the disposition of dredged material of the preceding month at the actual unit price per cubic yard, place measurement: Provided, That such cost does not exceed 8 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if the dredging is done by the city of New York?

Mr. NELSON. The dredging is done by the city of New York under contract, but must conform to the regulations of the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "one hundred and ninety"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount so much as may be necessary may be used for the construction of a dredge: Provided, That if, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, dredges of a suitable character to do the work at Absecon Inlet are readily obtainable for doing the work by contract at reasonable rates, the amount herein appropriated shall become immediately available for the prosecution of such work," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Arthur Kill, N. Y. and N. J.: For maintenance of improvement of Arthur Kill and the waters connecting Raritan Bay with New York Harbor, including channel north of Shooters Island, $20,000.

Improving Absecon Inlet, N. J., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1395, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $190,000, of which amount so much as may be necessary may be used for the construction of a dredge: Provided, That if, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, dredges of a suitable character to do the work at Absecon Inlet are readily obtainable for doing the work by contract at reasonable rates, the amount herein appropriated shall become immediately available for the prosecution of such work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 8, to insert:

Improving Newark Bay and Passaic River, N. J., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 707, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $5,000. The Chief of Engineers may, in his discretion, with the approval of the Secretary of War, consolidate existing projects and cancel existing contracts for the improvement of said bay and river and use available unexpended balance for the new project if, in his judgment, such consolidation and cancellation would be in the interest of the Government: Provided, That any of the said projects may be so modified as to allow for the narrowing of said channel width where necessary to prevent encroachment upon existing docks and to allow for the widening of the channel at the bends of the river where considered desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to strike out:

Improving Passaic River, N. J.: For maintenance of improvement above the Montclair & Greenwood Lake Railroad bridge, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 23, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Delaware River, Pa., N. J., and Del.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance from Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, to the sea, $1,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 23, to insert:

Improving Leipsic River, Del., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 574, Sixty-first Congress, second session: Any unexpended balance of appropriation heretofore made for the improvement of Leipsic River, or so much thereof as may be required, may be expended for making cut-offs Nos. 1 and 5: Provided, That the necessary land for them shall be furnished free of cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 6, to insert:

Improving Leipsic River, Del., in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 647, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and upon the condition specified in said report, $19,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 11, to insert:

Improving Little River, Del., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 626, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and upon the condition specified in said report, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 16, to insert:

Improving harbor at Wilmington, Del., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 359, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $250,000, of which amount so much as may be necessary may be used for the purchase or construction of a dredging plant to be used in connection with the work of improving and maintaining the harbor at Wilmington, Del., and at other places in the engineer district, with headquarters at Wilmington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 2, to strike out:

Improving Youghiogheny River, Pa.: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 9, after the word "Delaware," to strike out "For maintenance, and completing" and insert "Completing," and in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "fourteen," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Broad Creek River, Del.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 601, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $14,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 8, to insert:

For the dredging of Elk River to Elkton, Md., $8,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of section 11 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, are hereby made applicable to the Potomac and Anacostia Rivers, and hereafter harbor lines in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere on said rivers, shall be established or modified as therein provided; and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this proviso are hereby repealed: Provided further, That hereafter the officer in local charge of the improvement shall have authority, with approval of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, when no public building is available, to rent suitable offices, to be paid for pro rata from the appropriations for works in his charge: And provided further, That the proviso in the act of June 3, 1896, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," under the item "Improving Potomac River at Washington, D. C.," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 18, to insert:

Improving Aquia Creek, Va., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 579, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $21,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 12, after the date "nineteen hundred and twelve," to insert "(H. Doc. No. 589, 62d Cong., 2d sess.); and the foregoing appropriation shall be devoted to that purpose. For the construction of a dredge to be used in the improvement and maintenance of said inland waterway, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which amount not to exceed $10,000 may be expended for contingent improvements of said inland waterway; in all, $700,000," so as to make the clause read:

Improving inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., in accordance with the report printed in House Document No. 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $500,000. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase from the Chesapeake & Albermarle Canal Co. the canal and appurtenant property belonging to said company in accordance with the agreement entered into between the Secretary of War and said company under date of February 17, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 589, 62d Cong., 2d sess.); and the foregoing appropriation shall be devoted to that purpose. For the construction of a dredge to be used in the improvement and maintenance of said inland waterway, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which amount not to exceed $10,000 may be expended for contingent improvements of said inland waterway; in all, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 2, to insert:

For the construction of a harbor of refuge at Cape Lookout, N. C., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 528, Sixty-second Congress, second session, or such modification of the plan contained in said report as may be deemed advisable after examination and survey, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 4, to insert:

Improving Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington, N. C., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 287, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 9, after the word "report," to strike out "of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, dated April 3, 1911," and insert "of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors submitted in Senate Document No. 350, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and upon the conditions set forth therein," so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Charleston, S. C.: Continuing improvement of the 28-foot channel to the sea, $50,000; completing improvement of a 20-foot channel in Ashley River up to Standard Wharf, in accordance with the report printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 4, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $51,150; completing improvement of Shipyard Creek in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors submitted in Senate Document No. 350, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and upon the conditions set forth therein, $5,000; in all, $106,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent to turn back. I have an amendment to offer at page 11.

Mr. NELSON. Let the committee amendments be disposed of first. That is the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement was that the committee amendments should be first considered.

Mr. DU PONT. Very well.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-two" and insert "twelve," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Winyah Bay, S. C.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $112,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 20, to insert:

Improving St. Marys River, Ga. and Fla., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 697, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $19,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert "and that the provision in the river and harbor act approved February 27, 1911, authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to enter into contract with the Ragland Water Power Co. to complete the dam partially built by the United States at Lock No. 4, on the Coosa River, is hereby reenacted, and the time fixed therein for making said contract and for beginning said work is hereby extended six months from the date of the approval of this act," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Coosa River, Ga. and Ala.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance between Rome, Ga., and Dam No. 4, Alabama, $20,000; continuing improvement by the construction of a lock in Dam No. 4, and by the construction of Dam No. 5, in the State of Alabama, $124,000; in all, $144,000; and that the provision in the river and harbor act approved February 27, 1911, authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to enter into contract with the Ragland Water Power Co. to complete the dam partially built by the United States at Lock No. 4, on the Coosa River, is hereby reenacted, and the time fixed therein for making said contract and for beginning said work is hereby extended six months from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, after the word "Florida," to strike out "by the new route between Sapelo and Doboy Sounds by way of Front River," so as to make the clause read:

Improving waterway between Savannah, Ga., and Fernandina, Fla., as recommended in the reports submitted in House Document No. 1236, Sixtieth Congress, second session, and in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1911, $40,000: Provided, That of this amount so much as shall be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for maintenance of harbor at Darien, Ga.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 1, to strike out "Improving harbor at Key West, Fla.," and insert "Improvement at Key West, Fla.: Deepening and widening the main ship channel at the entrance and at Triangle Shoals, so as to afford a channel 30 feet deep and 300 feet wide, and removing shoals in the anchorage in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 706, Sixtieth Congress, second session, $48,000"; in line 8, before the word "maintenance," to strike out "For" and insert "for"; and in line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $63,000," so as to make the clause read:

Improvement at Key West, Fla.: Deepening and widening the main ship channel at the entrance and at Triangle Shoals, so as to afford a channel 30 feet deep and 300 feet wide, and removing shoals in the anchorage in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 706, Sixtieth Congress, second session, $48,000; for maintenance of improvement of the northwest entrance channel, $15,000; in all, $63,000.

Mr. NELSON. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment. Before the word "Congress," in line 7, I move to strike out "Sixtieth" and insert "Sixty-second."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 14, to insert:

Improving the entrance of Charlotte Harbor, Fla., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 699, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $20,000, upon the condition that local interests contribute one-half of the estimated original cost of said improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 23, to insert:

Protecting shore of Anastasia Island, in St. Augustine Harbor, Fla., by groins, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 580, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 3, to insert:

Improving the entrance to St. Josephs Bay, Fla., so as to secure and provide an available channel 24 feet deep at mean low water and 300 feet wide through the bar, $20,000, the work to be done by the Government plant: Provided, That local interests will contribute an equal sum toward the execution of the project, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 660, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 14, to insert:

That the provision in the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1905 (33 Stats., p. 1128), granting Louis M. Tisdale the right and authority to construct and operate a channel through Mobile Bay, and to construct and maintain wharves, piers, anchorage and turning basins, and other similar structures in said bay, is hereby revived and reenacted: Provided, That the said provision is hereby so amended as to vest in the South Mobile Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, all the rights, privileges, and authority thereby granted to the said Louis M. Tisdale, upon full and complete assignment and transfer of all such rights, privileges, and authority of said Tisdale to the said South Mobile Terminal Co.: Provided also, That the said provision is hereby further amended so as to extend the time for completing the work therein authorized for a period of five years from the approval of this act: And provided also, That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount $120,000 may be applied to the purchase or construction of a suitable dredge: Provided, That the U. S. dredge Barnard may be transferred back to the improvement from which it was transferred by act approved February 27, 1911, and the balance remaining on hand of the $60,000 authorized by the act of February 27, 1911, to be expended for the repair and modification of the U. S. dredge Barnard, may be expended for the purchase or construction of the dredge herein authorized," so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Gulfport, Miss.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance of anchorage basin at Gulfport and channel therefrom to the anchorage or roadstead at Ship Island, and for the improvement and maintenance of channel at Ship Island Pass, $200,000, of which amount $120,000 may be applied, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 2, to insert:

Bayou Terrebonne, La.: That the proviso in the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, making appropriation for improving Bayou Terrebonne, La., be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "Provided, That before any expenditures are made the right of way for the additional width required for excavation and for depositing dredged material be given by local interests free of cost to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 17, before the word "three," to strike out "The Secretary of War may appoint a board of five engineer officers whose duty it shall be to examine Galveston Harbor and Channel, Tex., and make report, with estimate of cost, with a view to securing and maintaining a depth of 35 feet by extension of the jetties, or by dredging, or by both, as the board may deem most economical," and insert "The Secretary of War may appoint a board of three engineer officers whose duty it shall be to examine the following harbors and channels in Texas, at or near Galveston, to wit: Galveston Harbor and Channel, Texas City Harbor and Channel, Port Bolivar Harbor and Port Bolivar Channel leading thereto, all with a view to a depth of 35 feet," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of War may appoint a board of three engineer officers whose duty it shall be to examine the following harbors and channels in Texas, at or near Galveston, to wit: Galveston Harbor and Channel, Texas City Harbor and Channel, Port Bolivar Harbor and Port Bolivar Channel leading thereto, all with a view to a depth of 35 feet. The said board shall also make an investigation as to the advisability of constructing a dike or dikes along the Houston Ship Channel and report whether or not such dike or dikes will operate in lieu of the dike recommended in the report for Greater Galveston to be built east of the Texas City Channel for the purpose of protecting the Texas City Channel and Galveston Channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 1, before the words "engineer officers," to strike out "five" and insert "three"; in line 5, after the word "feet," to insert "or such depth as may be considered advisable in the interest of commerce," so as to read:

The Secretary of War may appoint a board of three engineer officers, whose duty it shall be to examine Port Aransas (Aransas Pass and the Harbor Island basin), Tex., and make an estimate of the cost of securing a depth of 25 feet, or such depth as may be considered advisable in the interest of commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 9, after the words "Mustang Island," to strike out "All the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland are hereby declared nonnavigable" and insert "and the question of declaring all or any of the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland nonnavigable," so as to make the clause read:

And said board shall report fully upon all matters pertaining to the creation of a deep-water harbor of the first class, including the dike on St. Joseph Island and harbor facilities at the northern end of Mustang Island, and the question of declaring all or any of the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland nonnavigable.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what authority Congress has to declare a stream nonnavigable? A stream is navigable or nonnavigable, according to the fact. There is generally a purpose behind the attempt to get possession of a stream.

Mr. NELSON. We have struck those lines out of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I observe that. Let me just call attention to it in a moment, because it is quite a burning question. The language proposed to be inserted reads:

And the question of declaring all or any of the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland nonnavigable.

Mr. NELSON. We have reported that the words be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Lines 10 and 11 are stricken out, but how about lines 12 and 13, which I have just read?

Mr. BURTON. This board of engineer officers are to report on that.

Mr. NELSON. That is left for the Engineer Department to report on.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know; but——

Mr. NELSON. They are simply to report to us on that question. They are not to take independent action; they are to submit it to Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not believe that Congress or any board in the Government may be authorized to declare a stream nonnavigable. I know where it has been attempted it has always been the forerunner of turning the river over to private enterprise. I have applications and petitions now from various business enterprises, as they call themselves, to declare Clear Water River nonnavigable, and I have advised them that neither Congress nor any board of the Government has that power. A river is navigable as a matter of fact or it is not navigable, and we ought not to start in upon a system of making streams navigable by legislation or by the report of a board. It is particularly objectionable.

Mr. NELSON. We have struck that clause out of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that; I have the bill before me; but you authorize a board to declare——

Mr. NELSON. Not to declare, but simply to make a report.

Mr. HEYBURN. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to eliminate from legislation the recognition of the right to declare a stream nonnavigable by any department of the Government. You might as well authorize some board to report to us upon the sun, whether or not it rises in the east or in the west. Rivers are navigable to some men and not to others; they are navigable for some purposes and not for others. If you can once get a foothold for people to stand where they can have a river declared nonnavigable in order that they may use it or take exclusive possession of it, you will have laid the foundation for a great deal of trouble. I do not like the recognition in this bill or in any legislation of the existence of power anywhere in anyone to declare a stream nonnavigable. I object to the use of that word or to the inferential right of anyone to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. What is the vote upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the amendment striking out lines 10 and 11 and inserting the words in italics.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am still occupying the floor in regard to it in the hope that I may attract the attention of some Senator to the importance of this quesion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon. The Chair thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it were a trivial matter I would not occupy the attention of the Senate for a moment, but I do sincerely hope that Senators will recognize the importance of reserving against any branch of the Government the right to declare that a stream is navigable or nonnavigable, because it is always made the basis of some attempt to retain exclusive possession of that stream. I hope that——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this is not a stream, it is a harbor. I will read the whole clause as it will read with the words stricken out:

And said board shall report fully upon all matters pertaining to the creation of a deep-water harbor of the first class, including the dike on St. Joseph Island and harbor facilities at the northern end of Mustang Island, and the question of declaring all or any of the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland nonnavigable.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to that amendment because it undertakes to confer a power upon the board to do that which they should not have the power to do. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I reserve the right to object to that amendment later on, and perhaps it will have been thought about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have an opportunity when the bill is in the Senate.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 13, to strike out:

The expenses connected with making the two foregoing investigations and reports shall be paid from the appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 7, to insert:

Improving the Sabine-Neches Canal, Tex., from the Port Arthur Ship Canal to the mouth of the Sabine River, the Neches River up to the town of Beaumont, and the Sabine River up to the town of Orange: The authorization for the improvement adopted by the river and harbor act of February 27, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 943), is hereby extended so as to include the cutting off of bends or the widening of the channels to such extent as may be recommended by the Chief of Engineers and approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the total cost shall not be increased beyond that specified in the act of February 27, 1911: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall change the terms of cooperation specified in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 24, to insert the word "and" before the word "Cedar."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 10, to insert:

Improving mouth of Brazos River, Tex.: For maintenance, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and commencing the construction of two additional locks and dams, four hundred and twenty" and insert "three hundred and forty"; in line 20, before the word "survey," to strike out "instrumental"; in the same line, after the word "river," to insert "and reexamination of the project"; and, on page 39, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and thirty-five" and insert "three hundred and fifty-five," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Trinity River, Tex.: Continuing improvement with a view to obtaining a depth of 6 feet between the mouth and Dallas by the construction of locks and dams heretofore authorized, $340,000: Provided, That of this amount so much as shall be necessary may be expended for an accurate survey of the river and reexamination of the project as recommended in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1911; continuing improvement and for maintenance by open-channel work, $15,000; in all, $355,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty-two"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the construction of highway bridges at points where the said waterway will intersect existing county roads"; and, in line 13, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twelve," so as to make the clause read:

Improving inland waterway on coast of Texas: For maintenance of improvement of that section of the waterway between West Galveston Bay and Brazos River, $10,000; continuing improvement between Brazos River and Matagorda Bay, $62,000, of which amount $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the construction of highway bridges at points where the said waterway will intersect existing county roads; and completing improvement of the Guadalupe River up to Victoria, $40,000; in all, $112,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized to change the route of the channel from Aransas Pass to Pass Cavallo so as to pass by the town of Port O'Connor, Tex., and to expend available funds for this work instead of maintaining the channel along its present route, in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 8 on page 40.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee if there is not an amendment from the committee in line 6, page 40?

Mr. NELSON. The Senator has the wrong place in the bill. The amendment comes in later.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. My understanding is that it comes on page 40, after line 6, as an independent paragraph.

Mr. NELSON. No; the Senator's amendment comes after the Mississippi River appropriation, as I understand it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No, sir.

Mr. NELSON. On page 49.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There are two amendments. The Secretary may proceed with the reading, and I will call the attention of the Senator to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator that the agreement was that the committee amendments should first be considered.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But this is a committee amendment.

Mr. NELSON subsequently said: I offer an amendment to come in on page 40, at the end of line 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

For improving the Arkansas River, in Arkansas: For protecting the north bank thereof, in the bend in front of the Crawford County Levee, south of Van Buren, in sections 8, 9, and 10 of township 8 north, range 30 west, $30,000. This appropriation shall be expended as soon as practicable in accordance with plans to be approved by the Chief of Engineers of the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 40, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the purchase of flowage rights over lands submerged as a result of the construction, operation, and maintenance of Dams Nos. 6 and 7, $2,500; in all, $7,500"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: For maintenance of improvement by open-channel work $5,000; for the purchase of flowage rights over lands submerged as a result of the construction, operation, and maintenance of Dams Nos. 6 and 7, $2,500; in all, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 6, to insert:

That the item in the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, making appropriation for improving Kentucky River, and providing that, of the amount appropriated, "the sum of $6,000 may be expended for the construction of a bridge across Tates Creek and the restoration of the county road near Otter Creek," be, and is hereby, so amended as to authorize the Secretary of War to use so much of said sum as may be necessary (not exceeding $1,500) for reimbursing the county of Madison, in the State of Kentucky, the moneys expended by said county for the restoration of the said county road near Otter Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 10, to insert:

Improving Ohio River: For the raising and strengthening of the levees in the city of Cairo, Ill., on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and in the Cairo drainage district, $250,000: Provided, That the city of Cairo shall expend, or cause to be expended, the same amount for the same purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 43, after line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

For the raising and strengthening of the levees in the city of Mound City, Ill., on the Ohio River, $20,000, on the condition that the city of Mound City shall furnish an equal amount for the same purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 43, after the amendment just adopted, to insert:

Improving the Allegheny River, Pa., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 540, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $300,000: Provided, That local interests contribute an equal amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 23, to strike out:

Improving harbor at Manistee, Mich: For maintenance, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 44, to insert:

Improving the harbor at Manistee, Mich., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 599, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 5, to insert:

Improving harbor at Arcadia, Mich.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 23, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to make the clause read:

Improving St. Marys River at the falls, Michigan, by the construction of a fourth lock, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 64, Sixty-second Congress, first session, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the third condition imposed upon the city of Kewaunee, Wis., as set forth in House Document No. 324, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and authorized by the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 656), be, and the same hereby is, waived in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, dated February 26, 1912. (House Rivers and Harbors Committee Doc. No. 7, 62d Cong., 2d sess.)

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Kewaunee, Wis.: For maintenance, $10,000: Provided, That the third condition imposed upon the city of Kewaunee, Wis., as set forth in House Document No. 324, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and authorized by the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 656), be, and the same hereby is, waived in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, dated February 26, 1912. (House Rivers and Harbors Committee Doc. No. 7, 62d Cong., 2d sess.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 12, after the name "Minnesota," to strike out "For maintenance, $3,200," and insert "For improving and deepening channel to secure and maintain a depth of 8 feet, $13,200," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Warroad Harbor, Minn.: For improving and deepening channel to secure and maintain a depth of 8 feet, $13,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 3, to insert:

Improving harbor at Chicago, Ill., by the construction of a breakwater to form an outer harbor, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 710, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $350,000: Provided, That the work hereby contemplated shall not be commenced until assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War shall have been received that the work contemplated by the city of Chicago as a part of said improvement will be actually undertaken and completed by said city.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 23, after the word "feet," to strike out "three" and insert "six"; in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred thousand"; on page 48, line 4, after the word "levees," to insert "which shall be considered extraordinary emergency work"; in line 10, after the word "river,' to insert "Provided, That in view of the existing emergency $4,000,000 of the money hereby appropriated may be devoted to the repair and construction of levees"; in line 13, before the word "money," to insert "residue of the"; and in line 24, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

Provided further, That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be allotted, from the appropriation made in this paragraph, to the Auburn and Linwood levee districts on the Arkansas River, in the counties of Lincoln and Desha, in the State of Arkansas, for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding the levees under the control of said districts, respectively, damaged or destroyed by the overflow of the waters of the Mississippi River during the present year of 1912; the proportion in which said sum shall be allotted to said districts, and the specific work for which the same shall be expended therein, shall be made as the Mississippi River Commission shall direct.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent channel depth of 9 feet, $6,000,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building of levees, which shall be considered extraordinary emergency work, between the Head of Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That in view of the existing emergency $4,000,000 of the money hereby appropriated may be devoted to the repair and construction of levees: Provided further, That of the residue of the money hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary shall be expended in the construction of suitable and necessary dredge boats and other devices and appliances and in the maintenance and operation of the same: Provided further, That the water courses connected with said river and the harbors upon it, now under the control of the Mississippi River Commission and under improvement, may, in the discretion of said commission, upon approval by the Chief of Engineers, receive allotments for improvements now under way or hereafter to be undertaken, to be paid for from the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be allotted, from the appropriation made in this paragraph, to the Auburn and Linwood levee districts on the Arkansas River, in the counties of Lincoln and Desha, in the State of Arkansas, for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding the levees under the control of said districts, respectively, damaged or destroyed by the overflow of the waters of the Mississippi River during the present year of 1912; the proportion in which said sum shall be allotted to said districts, and the specific work for which the same shall be expended therein, shall be made as the Mississippi River Commission shall direct.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to offer several amendments to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee on page 49, line 5, before the word "rebuilding," by striking out "and" and inserting "or"; in line 6, after the word "destroyed," by striking out "by" and inserting "during"; and in line 8, after the word "twelve," by inserting the words "or by protecting the bank in front of said levees."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 49, after line 12, to insert:

The traveling expenses of the civilian members of the Mississippi River Commission, when on duty, shall be computed and paid in the same way as the traveling expenses of the Army members of said commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 16, to insert:

The Mississippi River Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make an examination and survey of all the lands subject to overflow from the Mississippi River, situate on the east bank of the river between Brunswick, Warren County, Miss., and Bayou Sara, for the purpose of ascertaining the location, quantity, character, and value of such lands, and for the purpose of ascertaining what portions of such lands, if any, it would be advisable to protect from overflow by levee construction, and the cost of such construction, and for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of acquiring such portions of said lands as it would not be advisable to protect from overflow by levee protection. The commission is further directed to prepare topographic maps of the lands so examined and surveyed, and to make its report on such examination and survey, with its recommendation thereon, to the Chief of Engineers before the 1st of November, 1912, and the Chief of Engineers shall transmit the said report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December, 1912. The sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of making and reporting the foregoing prescribed examination and survey.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether there should not be, in lines 10, 11, and 12, the usual provision "or so much thereof as may be necessary"? That is an arbitrary appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. NELSON. Those words could very well go in, but the Engineer Department would not use any more than was necessary.

Mr. HEYBURN. But, still, we ordinarily in legislating insert that provision "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that qualification. Let it read "the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 11, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by inserting "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, at the top of page 51, to insert:

Reservoirs at headwaters of Mississippi River: For completing construction of low reservoir dam at Gull Lake, Minn., provided for in the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., 1105), $15,000, of which sum so much as may be necessary may be applied to the erection of dam-tender's dwelling and to the digging of necessary ditches between Gull Lake and Round Lake, and between Round Lake and Long Lake, including purchase of the rights of way needed in connection therewith, and construction of necessary bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That cooperation from the localities benefited may be required in the prosecution of the said project in case any comprehensive plan is hereafter adopted for an apportionment of expense generally applicable to river and other projects in which any improvement now or hereafter adopted confers special or exceptional benefit upon the localities affected.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River, with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1287, Sixty-first Congress, third session, and with a view to the completion of such improvement within a period of 10 years, $800,000: Provided, That cooperation from the localities benefited may be required in the prosecution of the said project in case any comprehensive plan is hereafter adopted for an apportionment of expense generally applicable to river and other projects in which any improvement now or hereafter adopted confers special or exceptional benefit upon the localities affected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire how you would enforce a provision of that kind? Of course, the residents along that quite considerable section of the river would be benefited, but how would you compel them to contribute?

Mr. NELSON. We would do it as we have done it in many other instances in this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I notice that you have been doing it in many instances.

Mr. NELSON. This is intended to meet a contingency on the Missouri River in case levee construction shall be necessary on one side of the river. In the event that levee construction is needed to protect navigation there, we believe the localities should contribute, as they have done on the lower Mississippi.

Mr. HEYBURN. But how would you enforce a provision of that kind?

Mr. NELSON. Well, that is a question for future determination.

Mr. HEYBURN. We ought always to have in view the ability to enforce any law we may enact.

Mr. NELSON. We can always do it, as we have done it in many instances, by making the Government appropriation conditional on the local interests appropriating a certain amount. That is the way we do in other instances.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator probably is somewhat familiar with that section of the country. I am.

Mr. NELSON. I am.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would be rather difficult to collect any assessment that might be levied upon those living along the river.

Mr. NELSON. The provision does not contemplate that; it simply contemplates that local communities will probably have, as is the case on the lower Mississippi, levee districts and levee boards, and we would operate through them.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not a rich district there.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a poor district; and this provision will result in rendering the appropriation of no avail, because, of course, the Government would not be able to collect the necessary sum.

Mr. NELSON. The provision does not affect the appropriation made in this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, would the Government go on and do this work?

Mr. NELSON. The Government would go on and expend this money. There is already nearly a million dollars on hand outside of this. This does not affect in the least the appropriation made in the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no doubt at all that the Government could expend this money and do this work; but, then, why put in a provision here that contemplates that a community in such financial condition as that community is, as a matter of fact, shall be compelled to contribute equally with the Government? In other words, we would have the Government matching pennies with a poor community along the river. It does not seem to me to be wise, but I merely call attention to it in passing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 52, line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For improvement of said river in Dakota County, State of Nebraska, opposite the city of Sioux City, Iowa, by revetment and other protecting work along said river as may be needed for the permanent protection of said banks, $60,000.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that that amendment may be disagreed to. Since the bill was reported the House of Representatives has passed a bill, which has also been passed by the Senate, making an appropriation for this special purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 52, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty," and in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred and eighty-five," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River: For improvement and maintenance from Kansas City to Sioux City, $75,000; for improvement and maintenance from Sioux City to Fort Benton in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 91, Sixty-second Congress, first session, $150,000; in all, $285,000.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment in line 12, on page 52, by striking out "eighty-five" and inserting "twenty-five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee on page 52, line 12, before the word "thousand," by striking out "eighty-five" and inserting "twenty-five."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 52, after line 16, to insert:

Improving Kansas River, Kans.: For improvement of Kansas River up to Argentine, Kans., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 94, Sixty-second Congress, first session, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 53, to insert:

Improving Los Angeles outer harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $327,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 5, to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to that portion of the submerged land around the military reservation of Deadmans Island, acquired under act of the Legislature of the State of California approved March 9, 1897, which lies west of the westerly pierhead line of Los Angeles Harbor between station 15, as established by the Secretary of War July 29, 1908, and station 12, as established May 31, 1911, containing an area of 9.75 acres, more or less, in exchange for the grant by said city to the United States, for use for public purposes, of an approximately equal area of submerged land of said city in that portion of Los Angeles Harbor known as the outer harbor, having a frontage of 950.53 feet on West Channel, and lying adjacent to and southerly of the submerged lands in front of the San Pedro Military Reservation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire where the title will rest in the lands which we are to receive for those in exchange.

Mr. NELSON. It will rest in the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, under what law of the United States will that land be disposable?

Mr. NELSON. They will be public lands of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Submerged lands?

Mr. NELSON. Submerged lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the committee taken into consideration the rule of law established in reference to submerged lands in the Potomac cases?

Mr. NELSON. I understand that law, but of course the Government officials will see to it that we get good title.

I will state the purpose of the exchange. The city of Los Angeles is spending a large amount of money in improving the harbor. To make that improvement complete they require a small strip of land—9 acres—on the eastern side. We get another piece of the same kind of submerged lands on the western side. The engineers appeared before the committee, and they had a map showing the location, and they were satisfied the exchange should be made. I have no doubt they will see to it that the title is good. Of course, being tidal land, the title must be taken from the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had that in mind.

Mr. NELSON. There is no doubt about that, but the Government officials are familiar with that and will see to it that we get good title.

Mr. HEYBURN. The submerged lands belong to the State.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly, unless in this case—and that I do not know—the State may have conveyed it to the city. But I want to say that in any event, wherever the title to these submerged lands may rest, the Senator may rest assured that the Government officials will not make the exchange until they get good title.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us stop for a moment. It is worth while, because it may involve us in a very serious proposition. The Government is proposing to give up its title where it has none and to receive for it in exchange land that it can not take title to. There may be some difficulty about it. I do not know that much harm can come out of it, because the whole thing may be a nullity.

Mr. ROOT. This is land acquired under the act of the Legislature of the State of California.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where is the act of the Legislature of California assenting to this exchange? We are taking the chances of doing a thing that may not be realized upon; and I wanted to call attention to it, so that the RECORD might show that we did not pass it over without notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 7, before the word "thousand," to insert "and thirty," so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 23, to insert:

Improving Stockton Harbor, Cal., by dredging McLeods Lake and Fremont Channel, with a view to securing a permanent channel depth of 9 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 581, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 4, to insert:

Improving Tillamook Bar and Bay, Oreg.: For maintenance, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for maintenance of improvement, $5,000; in all, $105,000," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Tillamook Bay and Bar, Oreg., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 349, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 13, to insert:

Improving Nehalem Bar and entrance to Nehalem Bay, Oreg., in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 623, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and subject to conditions set forth in said document, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 8, to strike out:

Improving Columbia and Lower Willamette Rivers below Portland, Oreg.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $155,000.

And insert:

Improving Columbia and Lower Willamette Rivers below Portland: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document, No. 1278, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 21, to insert:

Improving Oregon Slough, Oreg., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 712, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Columbia River between the foot of The Dalles Rapids and the head of Celilo Falls, Oreg. and Wash.: Continuing improvement, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Columbia River and tributaries above Celilo Falls to the mouth of Snake River, Oreg. and Wash.: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 13, to insert:

For the protection of the buildings and property of the United States at Valdez, Alaska, from glacial floods, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 16, to insert:

Improving Apoon mouth of Yukon River, Alaska, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 556, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to report to Congress as to the advisability of providing for the west breakwater referred to under project No. 2 in House Document No. 593, Sixty-first Congress, second session," so as to make the clause read:

Improving Kahului Harbor, Hawaii: Completing improvement, $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of the National Waterways Commission necessarily incurred for clerical and stenographic services in publishing hearings (S. Doc. No. 274) and completing the final report (S. Doc. No. 469).

Mr. NELSON. I have an amendment to offer at the end of the paragraph.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the paragraph, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following words:

And all books, maps, charts, and other material relating to waterways in the possession of the National Waterways Commission shall be turned over to the College of Engineers, Washington Barracks, D. C., and all similar material relating to railways shall be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 17, to strike out:

The depth of water in tidal waters, as well as in rivers and nontidal channels, whenever referred to in this act shall be understood to mean the depth at mean low water unless otherwise expressed.

And insert:

The depth of water in tidal waters, as well as in rivers and nontidal channels, whenever refered to in this act, shall be understood to mean the depth at mean low water during the lowest water month of the navigation season, unless otherwise expressed; and for purposes of estimates, construction, and maintenance of river and harbor improvements herein or heretofore provided for, shall imply that the actual channel way may be given such increased depth and width as may be necessary to allow of free movement of boats of draft equal to the specified depth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 15, after the word "examinations," to insert "and minor surveys," so as to make the clause read:

The Chief of Engineers, in his discretion, and after approval by the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized to make preliminary examinations and minor surveys and to remove snags and other temporary or readily removable obstructions from tributaries of waterways already under Federal improvement or in general use by navigation, to be paid from the appropriations for the adjoining waterways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 62, to insert:

Whenever the appropriations made by Congress for river and harbor works can be more advantageously expended by combining in one contract two or more works, such combinations shall be made. And whenever the appropriations made, or authorized to be made, for the completion of any river and harbor work shall prove insufficient therefor, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, apply the funds so appropriated or authorized to the prosecution of such work.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have some explanation of that item. That opens the way to selection—as to whether this work or that may be carried on, and the appropriation diverted from some work specifically provided for.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator misapprehends the purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the effect of it. I want to see.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator misapprehends the object.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely heard it read.

Mr. NELSON. It frequently happens in making appropriations that where the Government engineers' report indicates that a certain project will cost, for instance, when completed, $500,000, Congress sees fit to appropriate only a hundred thousand dollars to begin with. That is adopting the project, and this is to permit the Government to go on and go far as they can with the hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HEYBURN. But projects may be united.

Mr. NELSON. But the project has to be adopted by Congress, and it is also prescribed in the appropriation made.

Mr. HEYBURN. It opens the door to the diversion of an appropriation for one purpose to a joint purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. It would not allow the diversion of money to another purpose. That is not the purpose at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 9, to insert:

In their execution and inspection of river and harbor improvement work, at points beyond easy reach of ordinary regular transportation lines, Engineer officers are authorized to hire and use such transportation as they may consider desirable and advantageous to the progress of work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 14, to insert:

The Chief of Engineers is authorized, in case of emergencies during the preparation for and the consideration of river and harbor estimates and bills, to employ such additional office force as he may find necessary for that purpose, to be paid from the appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 20, to insert:

The board of five Engineer officers for rivers and harbors created by section 3 of the act of June 13, 1902, is herewith increased in numbers to nine Engineer officers, of whom at least the majority shall be of rank not less than lieutenant colonel.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 24, after the word "to," insert "not exceeding."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 63, to insert:

For the construction at the Engineer School of a building with library accommodations and other facilities for the instruction of officers of the Corps of Engineers in duties pertaining to the improvement of rivers and harbors, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 9, to insert:

In order to make possible the economical future development of water power the Secretary of War, upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to provide in the permanent parts of every dam authorized at any time by Congress for the improvement of navigation such foundations, sluices, etc., as may be considered desirable for the future development of its water power.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 17, to insert:

Section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved February 27, 1911, shall not be interpreted to prevent the assignment or transfer as second lieutenants in the Corps of Engineers, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, of such graduates of the United States Military Academy as have been or who may be recommended for such assignment upon graduation by the academic board of the said Military Academy in excess of the minimum number made mandatory therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 4, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall cause the Chief of Engineers of the Army and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to report to Congress, in which shall be included a preliminary report not later than December 1, 1912, upon the saving, as well as other advantages, which can be accomplished by the adoption of the continuing contract system, the rapidity with which projects should be completed, upon methods of standardization by which the waterways of the country may be improved uniformly in proportion to their capacities and to the existing or probable demands of general commerce, and also report upon one or more systematized schemes of such improvement, involving all waterways heretofore examined, together with any natural or artificial channels essential for the utilization thereof, whether heretofore examined or not; also upon all projects heretofore adopted the further improvement of which is not desirable or the expenditure upon which is out of proportion to the benefit derived therefrom. Such report may include other related information pertaining to the uses or control of the waters of the country, and the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for such examination and report.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 3, to change the number of the section from 2 to 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. That brings us down to section 3. I ask to go back to page 11, line 25, and I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota in behalf of the committee submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 25, after the word "Wilmington," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That if, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, dredges of a suitable character to do the work at Wilmington, Del., are readily obtainable for doing the work by contract at reasonable rates, the amount herein appropriated shall become immediately available for the prosecution of such work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to state that we have now covered all the bill except surveys, and if the Senate will stay a few minutes, I think we will get through with the bill. There are very few amendments to the remaining portion of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 7, after the word "feet," to insert "and of widening the channel on the northern side by the removal of the ledge near the Essex Bridge," so as to make the clause read:

Beverly Harbor, Mass., with a view to securing a channel depth of 24 feet and of widening the channel on the northern side by the removal of the ledge near the Essex Bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 20, to insert:

Harbor of refuge at or near Scituate, Mass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 22, to insert:

Narragansett Pier, R. I., with a view to the construction of a breakwater at or near the life-saving station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 67, to insert:

Dutch Island Harbor, R. I., with a view to the removal of rocks now obstructing the approach channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 15 on page 67.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the following amendment. On page 67, after line 15, I move to insert:

Great Chazy River, N. Y., from the village of Champlain, N. Y., to the mouth thereof, with a view to deepening and making navigable the channel of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I also move to add:

Little Salmon River, N. Y., at Fort Covington, N. Y., with a view to deepening the channel thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. On page 67, after line 12, I move to insert:

Buffalo Harbor, N. Y., with a view to increasing the width of the entrance of the inner harbor to 400 feet by removing the Government south pier at the mouth of Buffalo River.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. On page 67, after line 12, I move to insert:

Wethersfield Cove, Connecticut River, with a view to securing a navigable channel from said river into said cove.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 22, to strike out:

Tarrytown Harbor, N. Y., with a view to the modification or abandonment of the existing project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 4, to insert:

Rahway River, N. J., including the construction of the necessary cutoffs, and with a view to the consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 14, to insert:

That a preliminary investigation be made to determine whether a system of impounding reservoirs at the headwaters of the Allegheny, Monongahela, and Ohio Rivers is needed to provide sufficient water during dry seasons to operate the present and proposed system of locks and dams in these rivers, and to what extent the Federal Government, on the basis of their benefit to navigation, is justified in cooperating with local communities which may be interested in the construction of such reservoirs primarily for the purpose of flood prevention, and the feasibility of operating such reservoirs for the double purpose of flood prevention and improving navigation; and that this investigation be conducted by a joint board of two engineers, one to be designated by the Chief of Engineers, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and the other by the Director of the Geological Survey; and that the results of this investigation be reported to Congress, with such additions as may be made thereto by the said Chief of Engineers and Director of the Geological Survey, not later than December 7, 1912; and that for this purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think, in line 17, after the word "Rivers," the words "and their tributaries" ought to be inserted?

Mr. NELSON. I think that is a good amendment. I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 17, after the word "Rivers," insert the words "and their tributaries."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to lines 17 and 18, on page 68, where the investigation is required to determine whether the impounding of the waters is needed. I think it ought also to express the idea as to whether it is practicable to do that. It might be needed and yet might not be practicable or feasible.

Mr. NELSON. What amendment does the Senator suggest?

Mr. REED. I suggest to change the word "needed" to "feasible" or "practicable."

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 18 strike out the word "needed" and insert the word "feasible."

Mr. BURTON. I think the Senator's first suggestion would cover the case, so as to read "is needed and is practicable."

Mr. REED. Very well; that is satisfactory.

The SECRETARY. After the word "needed" insert the words "and practicable."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I ask the Senate to go back to page 66, and I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In behalf of the committee the Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 3, insert:

Wills Strait, between Orrs and Bailey Islands, Casco Bay, Me.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 16, before the words "Curtis Bay," to strike out "to" and insert "in," and in the same line, after the words "Curtis Bay," to insert "and," so as to make the clause read:

Channel in Curtis Bay, and in Patapsco River, Baltimore Harbor, Md., with a view to securing a channel depth of 34 feet, or such increased depth over the completed project as may be deemed advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 19, to insert:

Cabin Branch and Curtis Creek, Md., to connect with the main channel from the Patapsco River to the pier of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 6, to insert:

Hunting Field Creek, Md.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 7, to insert:

Rock Hall Harbor, Md., with a view to extending navigation beyond its present head.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 9, to insert:

Breton Bay, Md.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 10, to insert:

Chesapeake Bay, Md., off Pooles Island, on the route between Baltimore and Philadelphia, between the southwest bar and the northeast bar.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 3, to insert:

From deep water to Oyster, Va., to provide a channel 100 feet wide and 6 feet deep, with a suitable anchorage for small boats.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 6, to insert:

Chesapeake Bay, with a view to providing a suitable channel at Tangier, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 8, to insert:

Jackson Creek Bar, Va., with a view of cutting through same to provide a harbor at Deltaville.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 10, to insert:

Nassawadox Creek, Va., with a view to the removal of the bar at its mouth so as to connect with the bay and provide a suitable channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 13, to insert:

Chesapeake Bay, with a view to straightening the north side of the channel at the entrance of the harbor at Cape Charles City, Va., and to increasing the width of the channel 200 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 17, to insert:

Hampton Creek, Va., for purpose of making this river deeper and more suitable for anchorage and use of boats and vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 20, to insert:

Savages Creek, Va., with a view to providing a suitable channel from Chesapeake Bay to Eastville.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 18, after the name "South Carolina," to strike out "from its mouth up to Lumberton" and insert "from its mouth to the turnpike bridge over said river in Hoke and Scotland Counties, N. C.," so as to make the clause read:

Lumber River, N. C. and S. C., from its mouth to the turnpike bridge over said river in Hoke and Scotland Counties, N. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 21, to insert:

Northwest prong Bay River to public wharf at dam in town of Bayboro, N. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 23, to insert:

Meherrin River, N. C., from its mouth to the head of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 73, to insert:

Trent River from Newbern to Pollocksville, N. C., for a depth of 10 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 2, to insert:

Cape Fear River, below Wilmington, N. C., with a view to securing a depth of 20 feet to quarantine station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 9, on page 73.

Mr. NELSON. On page 73, after line 9, I move to insert:

Savannah River at North Augusta, S. C., with a view to determining what improvements are necessary in the interest of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. On page 73, line 9, after the words "South Carolina," I move to add, "by way of Alligator Creek and Seewee Bay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 9, to strike out:

Tugaloo River, from Fort Madison, S. C., to Toccoa, Ga.

And to insert:

Tugaloo River, Ga. and S. C., from the mouth of Panther Creek to the head of Chandlers Shoals, with a view to its improvement by means of open-channel work.

Mr. BACON. I do not know that it is very material, but the name of the river is improperly spelled. It is Tugalo. There is only one "o" instead of two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the final "o" in the name "Tugaloo."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 2, to insert:

Channel from Pineland, on Pine Island, Lee County, Fla., running westerly to deep water at a point in Pine Island Sound, about 1 mile in length, such channel to be not less than 5 feet deep and of sufficient width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 10, after the name "Gulf of Mexico," to insert "and between Stokes Ferry and Panasoffkee," so as to make the clause read:

Withlacoochee River, Fla., including channel from Port Inglis to the anchorage in the Gulf of Mexico, and between Stokes Ferry and Panasoffkee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 12, to insert:

St. Johns River, Fla., from outlet of Lake Harney to Lake Washington, including removal of bars in Lakes Harney and Puzzle.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 15, to insert:

Charlotte Harbor, Fla., from the 24-foot contour inside Boca Grande Pass to the 16½-foot contour west of Punta Gorda Point, thence to the town of Punta Gorda, with a view to obtaining a channel 20 feet in depth with suitable width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 22, to insert:

Inland waterway from Pensacola Bay through Bay La Launch, to the western shore of Wolf's Bay, Florida and Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 1, to insert:

Conecuh River, Ala., from River Falls to its mouth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 14, to insert:

Horse Shoe Lake, which leaves Tchula Lake in Holmes County, Miss.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 21, to insert:

Mouth of Bayou St. John, Orleans Parish, La.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 15, to strike out:

Inland waterway on the coast of Texas with a view to a change of route at or near Port O'Connor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 17, to insert:

Rio Grande River, from Velarde, N. Mex., to the sixth standard parallel south New Mexico meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 20, to insert:

St. Francis River, Ark., from its mouth to Madison, and the L'Anguille River from its junction with St. Francis to Marianna, for the purpose of ascertaining the feasibility and cost of providing permanent navigation thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2, on page 78.

Mr. NELSON. On page 78, I move to add, after line 2, the following:

Black River in Arkansas, an examination thereof near Buttermilk Bank, with a view of protecting bank, and for obtaining estimate of cost thereof if found to be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 16, page 78.

Mr. NELSON. On the same page, after line 12, I move to insert:

Kanawha River, W. Va., with a view to increasing the height of the locks and dams of said river so as to make a 9-foot stage to the Ohio River.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. On the same page, after line 16, I move to insert:

Harbor at Spring Bay, on the Illinois River, between Copperas Creek and La Salle, Ill., with a view of improving it by dredging to a suitable navigable depth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 16, to insert:

Ohio River, Shawneetown levee, Ill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 18, to insert:

Little Wabash River, at Maunie, Ill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendments were, on page 79, line 9, after the word "River," to insert "Ohio"; in the same line, to strike out "as," before "with," and after "with" to insert "a"; and in the same line, before the word "snagging," to strike out "of" and insert "to," so as to make the clause read:

Mahoning River, Ohio, with a view to snagging that portion between Warren and Levittsburg and 5 miles farther toward its source.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 13, to insert:

Charlevoix Harbor, Mich., with a view to an increased depth between Lake Michigan and Pine Lake.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 15, to insert:

Survey, for the purpose of charting only, of Crooked Lake, Burt Lake, and Mullett Lake, and their connecting waters, constituting the so-called inland route extending easterly from the vicinity of Petoskey, Mich.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 19, to insert:

Grays Reef Passage, off Waugoshance, in Lake Michigan, with a view to removing shoals and deepening passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 13, to insert:

Mouth of the Siskiwit River, Wis., on Lake Superior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 15, to insert:

Brule Harbor, Wis., with a view to its improvement for minor lake craft.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 13, to insert:

Mille Lacs Lake and Onamia Lake, Minn., with view to improving the navigability of the Mississippi River by constructing a dam across Rum River at or near Onamia and thereby creating a reservoir in said lakes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 9, to insert:

San Francisco Bay, Cal., from the mouth of the Guadaloupe River to a point 4,150 feet northwest therefrom, with a view of securing a permanent channel 300 feet wide with a depth of 18 feet at low tide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 21, to insert:

Crescent City Harbor and vicinity, California, with a view to securing a suitable harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 4, to insert:

Redondo Harbor, Cal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 8, to insert:

Yaquina Bay and bar entrance, Oreg., including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 11, to insert:

Port Orford Harbor, Oreg., including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 13, to insert:

Port Orford Harbor, at Grave Yard Point, Oreg., with a view to improving the same for the establishment of a harbor of refuge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 20, to insert:

Columbia River, Wash., between Vancouver and the mouth of the Willamette, with a view to improvement in cooperation with the port of Vancouver.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 85, to insert:

Columbia River, Wash., from and through Rickey and Grand Rapids to the international boundary line, with a view to open river navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 12, to insert:

Waterway connecting Similk Bay with Padilla Bay, Wash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 14, to insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, and upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, to permit any corporation or association of persons, at their own expense and without cost to the United States Government, to modify or relocate any navigable channels in Padilla Bay necessary in connection with the reclamation of tidelands in Padilla Bay, Skagit County, State of Washington: Provided, That the work so done shall be in accordance with plans approved by the Chief Engineer of the War Department.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just that the record may be clear, I call attention there that you are attempting to do with tidelands in Washington something that you have no power to do, and in order that it may appear of record that we were not oblivious to that fact. Of course those are the lands regarding which the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was rendered.

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest that all we do in this amendment is to get the permission of the Secretary of War to allow local people to make some changes in the channel.

Mr. HEYBURN. The legislature of your State has control of those lands.

Mr. JONES. It does not control the navigable channel, however, and that is all this provision does.

Mr. HEYBURN. If they are merely tidelands, it does.

Mr. JONES. This is a navigable channel.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am referring now to lands between high and low water.

Mr. JONES. This does not affect those lands at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, the record will hereafter stand as an indication of the fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, at the top of page 86, to strike out:

Willapa River and Harbor, Wash., including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Willapa Harbor and Willapa River, Wash., from Raymond to the sea, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 6, to insert:

Nasel, North, and other streams entering Willapa Harbor, Wash., with a view to snagging the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 8, to insert:

Channel connecting Admiralty Inlet with Crockett Lake, Wash., together with a report upon any other benefits which may accrue aside from those pertaining to navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 16, to insert:

San Juan Harbor, P. R., with a view to improvement in cooperation with the local government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 24, to insert:

The printing of matter relating to river and harbor works, including all reports, compilations, regulations, etc., whose preparation is allowable under War Department regulations, may, upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and approval by the Secretary of War, be paid for from river and harbor appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 5, to change the number of the section from 3 to 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 1, to change the number of the section from 4 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 4, to change the number of the section from 5 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 20, to change the number of the section from 6 to 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 3, to insert:

There shall also be printed 1,500 copies of the index to the Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, from 1866 to 1912, inclusive, to include the reprinting of House Document No. 439, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, covering the period from 1866 to 1900, inclusive, authorized by section 13 of the act of June 13, 1902; the additional information covering 1901 to 1912, inclusive, to be furnished by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 15, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That section 8 of the act of June 18, 1878 (20 Stat., p. 164), entitled "An act to organize the Life-Saving Service," authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to detail officers of the Revenue-Marine Service to act as inspectors and assistant inspectors of life-saving stations in the Life-Saving Service, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have one reserved amendment. I ask to recur to page 36, lines 11, 12, and 13, and I renew my motion to strike out all after the word "nonnavigable," in line 11. The matter was rather lightly considered, I think, by the Senate, and it is important.

Mr. NELSON. What is the Senator's motion?

Mr. HEYBURN. The language reads:

And said board shall report fully upon all matters pertaining to the creation of a deep-water harbor of the first class, including the dike on St. Joseph Island and harbor facilities at the northern end of Mustang Island.

I do not move to strike that out, but I move to strike out these words:

And the question of declaring all or any of the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland nonnavigable.

I object to the recognition of any power in Congress, either by its own action or by its authorization, to declare water navigable or nonnavigable. That matter rests with the courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Idaho kindly permit the bill to be reported to the Senate, at which time his amendment will be in order?

Mr. HEYBURN. I reserve the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reserved.

Mr. NELSON. A separate vote can be taken on that amendment in the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now renew my motion, on page 36, line 11, after the word "nonnavigable," to strike out the words:

And the question of declaring all or any of the waters lying between Harbor Island and the mainland nonnavigable.

Of course I realize that that is confined to the waters mentioned in this bill, but if Congress once recognizes that principle, it will make trouble in the courts; it will make trouble in the State legislatures; it will make trouble wherever cupidity desires to possess itself of the exclusive right of a stream. I suppose all of us have had many applications—I think I would be safe in saying that my colleague and myself have had applications—to have certain streams declared nonnavigable.

There is no such power vested in any department of the Government or in Congress as to declare a stream nonnavigable. That is a question of fact. The citizens of the United States have a right to navigate any stream upon which they may navigate for their purposes. I am not willing that Congress shall even suggest that it has this power. Application has been made time and again to seize one of the rivers of our State that was used for years by the inhabitants dwelling along it, extending many miles back into the country. Why Congress should in this way, as an adjunct to a bill of this kind, undertake to establish such a principle is entirely beyond my understanding.

I give notice now that I am going to discuss this question, and if it comes back in any conference report I will discuss it again for some length of time, because it involves a big principle of government; it is important to hundreds of thousands of people; and we might just as well thrash it out. If you vote it down, the record will stand as an evidence that it either did not receive attention or that it was not understood by the United States Senate; that is all.

I do not propose that the Senate shall act unadvisedly in this matter. The people who want this kind of legislation are those who want to seize the streams of the country for their exclusive use and to shut out those who are entitled by the natural rights and conditions surrounding them to use these streams.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, to save any discussion, I will agree that those words shall be stricken out.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not want an agreement. I want a vote.

Mr. NELSON. Well, a vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have passed the point of agreement. A vote will come when I have said what I want to say. I am not going to be caught between two streams.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Idaho will excuse me, I think he misapprehends the situation here entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. BURTON. I do not remember the exact location, though I think I have been in this particular harbor. There are islands lying near to the mainland. In order to reach the mainland it is necessary to have a channel inclosed by dikes. That channel is kept open by the movement of the tide backward and forward. Harbor Island is located but a short distance from the mainland. In order to make the channel which reaches the mainland adequate to keep it open by the ebb and flow of the tide it is necessary to close the opening between the channel and the mainland. It is an essential part of the improvement, and there is no desire to shut off anybody's rights.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it is not necessary to use this language in order to accomplish that purpose. If this was simply a proposition to fill in and take possession for public purposes of a channel or any other adjunct of the waterways of the country, I should, of course, have no objection, and I recognize the right to do it; but to declare or to assert the right by Congress to say that a stream may be declared nonnavigable by a board is not within my view of either its power or right.

Now, let us be candid about this thing. It may seem like a trifling question to those whose interests could not be affected by it, but it is a question that affects in one single instance 60 miles of settlement in one of the great grain-producing sections of the United States and one of the great lumber-producing sections of the United States. They want to build a dam in it and dam it up, so that no person can pass that dam without paying toll. They object to putting a lock in the dam, because it would be too expensive to them. They want to take a public river, and they want it without expense or trouble. That is the question; it is one of home application, and it will come home to a great many others than those who are interested in this question if you once recognize the right of Congress to declare a stream nonnavigable.

Suppose that Congress, in some hour of weakness, should declare the Potomac River nonnavigable because, forsooth, some railroad or some other enterprise wanted to take possession of that river and build a bridge without a draw in it. That is the principle that is involved in this matter.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. In what way does the Senator think the question whether a stream at a certain point is or is not navigable should be decided?

Mr. HEYBURN. It has always been determined by the courts on the facts in each particular case. Now Congress is going to assert the power to say a stream is nonnavigable, and its decision probably can not be reviewed by the courts.

Mr. BACON. But Congress does assert the power so far as to determine whether or not obstructions shall be put in a river or over a river at a certain point.

Mr. HEYBURN. It allows, if it may be so termed, an obstruction which may be relieved against by a lock or by a draw or any other method that will allow the people to go through it. I do not think for a moment that the Senator from Georgia would contend that Congress has the right to declare the Potomac River nonnavigable.

Mr. BACON. It would be very unreasonable for Congress so to do; but that does not settle the question of power.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, I doubt the power. I think the Supreme Court would hold that Congress had no such power. Nature made navigable streams, and men are entitled to use them for navigation purposes; they are entitled to use them to pass up and down in rowboats or on rafts. Why, you could take a million tons of grain down the river to which I refer, in rafts, in competition with the railroads that lie on the banks of the river.

I know who is behind the proposition of establishing a rule by which we will be asked hereafter, having once yielded to it, at every session of Congress to declare some fact that does not exist—that a river is not navigable because some one wants to seize it. I implore Senators to think a little about this matter. You might destroy a very insignificant river, but you might also destroy the rights of a great many citizens who might some day array themselves against your rights.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator in charge of the bill wants to withdraw the amendment—I sought to have it withdrawn at the time when, in my judgment, it should have been done according to parliamentary rules, and that is when we were considering the amendment as in Committee of the Whole—but if he wants to withdraw it now, I shall raise no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I offered to withdraw it about three minutes ago, but the Senator insisted on a vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, I am like the Senator; I change my mind occasionally.

Mr. NELSON. You may have it either way.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator now desires to withdraw it——

Mr. NELSON. The Senator can have it either way; he can have a vote or I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is obvious that we should require some further parliamentary proceedings if we were going to vote. I will not make the suggestion at all as to what those proceedings should be, but if the Senator will withdraw the amendment I shall be content.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator to the fact that disagreeing to the amendment would restore the words already stricken out.

Mr. NELSON. No; those words stricken out should remain out, and the words in italics should also be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the parliamentary procedure would be to concur in the amendment to strike out and to disagree to the part in italics.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; that is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out, after the word "Island," in line 10, down to and including the word "nonnavigable," in line 11.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment inserting the portion in italics in lines 11, 12, and 13, on page 36.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, all the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be regarded as concurred in. The Chair hears no objection, and they are concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE FOR FRIDAY.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] may be the President pro tempore of the Senate to-morrow, Friday, during the absence of the Vice President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] be designated as the President pro tempore for to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. To carry out the effect of that order, I present several resolutions and ask for their consideration.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 307), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Friday, May 10, 1912.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 308), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Friday, May 10, 1912.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 10, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 9, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, our God and our Father, so near to us, and yet so far away, open Thou our spiritual eyes, that we may behold the light of Thy countenance; our spiritual ears, that we may hear the music of Thy voice; our spiritual hearts, that we may feel the pulsations of Thy loving heart; that we may have life, and have it more abundantly in a closer walk with Thee; that Thy will may be done in us as it was done in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIX, Senate bills and a joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6658. An act to provide for emergency crops on overflowed lands in the Mississippi Valley; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. 2356. An act for the relief of John W. Morse; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5211. An act to require the registration of vital statistics in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

S. 5362. An act to reimburse the enlisted men of the U. S. S. Georgia who suffered loss through the defalcation of Paymaster's Clerk Edward V. Lee; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 75. Joint resolution to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural-credit unions in other countries; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. J. Res. 100. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution.

H. J. Res. 312. Joint resolution making appropriations for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys.

WALL CHART ON HOOKWORM AND SOIL POLLUTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House concurrent resolution 46 with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to have a telegram to the New York Times of yesterday read to the House. It will show the reason why certain Members were absent day before yesterday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative appropriation bill, with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the provision on page 32, commencing with line 11, down to and including line 4, on page 33, be considered in connection with the other two provisions that follow, and which were passed over, when we recur to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent in reference to the consideration of this bill. The gentleman from New York will please restate his request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that when we return to the provisions on page 33, line 5 to line 23, which were passed over, we shall also consider the provisions on page 32, commencing on line 11 and running down to and including line 4, on page 33. They are all interrelated.

Mr. MANN. With the right to amend.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; with the right to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that that part of the bill on page 33, lines 5 to 23, be considered in connection with that part of the bill on page 32, from line 11 to and including line 4, on page 33. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. As I understand, the unanimous consent goes to the provisions touching the transfer of the Bureau of Statistics to the Census Office and the Bureau of Manufactures to the State Department, with full privilege to amend and consider all the items together.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is what we hope to do.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman hope to do that during the day?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. During the afternoon.

Mr. CANNON. I am interested in the matter, and have views about it, and I am satisfied also that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] wants to do apt things about it. I feel that really there is no contest when we come down to what is for the best interests of the public service; and, being interested in it, and having to leave the city at 6.45 this evening, to be absent for two or three days, I think the request ought to be granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Those provisions will all be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be concluded, and that the committee amendments be offered as we read. I ask unanimous consent that we now complete the reading of the bill, permitting the committee amendments to be offered as the sections are read, and then return to the sections and take them up for debate and amendment in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURLESON. With the right to have them considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GILLETT. And to be amended?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; to be amended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I did not hear the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The request now is to conclude the reading of the bill and allow the committee amendments to be offered as the bill is read, and then that we have permission to return to each section and debate it——

Mr. BURLESON. And amend it——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In Committee of the Whole the amendments to be offered by the committee will not be debated. They will be merely formal. Then we will go back and debate the sections.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the committee amendments are to be voted upon at the time they are read? We do not want to have an understanding that the committee is to consider amendments and vote on them without debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We do not want to prevent debate.

Mr. MANN. I do not care, so far as I am concerned, as to the order in which they will be taken up, except that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] wants to dispose of those propositions relating to the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Manufactures this afternoon, fairly early.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am making the request in order to expedite the very matter that the gentleman from Illinois is interested in. After we read the bill we will return to some of the sections which will require considerable debate, and while that debate is going on the matter that the gentleman from Illinois is interested in will be adjusted.

Mr. MANN. Let us understand. I may be wrong about it, but, as I understand, the gentlemen desire probably a little time in which to formulate some amendments relating to the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Manufactures?

Mr. BURLESON. And trade relations.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and trade relations. It is a proper request, but I do not desire to have the House get into a discussion of the clerical force here, which would cut off my colleague.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are very anxious that the gentleman's colleague shall be accommodated, and there will be no delay if it can be avoided.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is entirely likely in connection with the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Trade Relations and the Bureau of Manufactures in connection with its transfer to the Census Office that it can be accommodated. Because, I will say again, I am satisfied that the gentleman from South Carolina, the gentleman from Texas, and others on the committee are really desirous of doing that which is for the best interests of the public service, and when the gentlemen complete the amendments touching the three bureaus, there will be opportunities to debate the subject.

Mr. BURLESON. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the request if the gentleman will add to it the right on his part to call up at any time the paragraphs that were passed over on page 33, and those relating thereto.

Mr. BURLESON. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I should like very well to include that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to object?

Mr. MANN. No. I am asking the gentleman to make a modification of his request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to state his request again.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask that the reading of the bill be now concluded, with the privilege to the committee to offer its amendments as the sections are read; that thereafter we return to the sections for debate and amendments from the Committee of the Whole, with the further privilege that if the matter in which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is interested shall be perfected and adjusted we can return to that at any time.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right on your part at any time to call it up.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Reserving the right on my part to call it up at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That during the fiscal year 1913 no vacancy occurring in the classified service of any executive department or other Government establishment within the District of Columbia shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among persons employed within the District of Columbia in such department or establishment: Provided, That if in the judgment of the President the exigencies of the service require, and he shall so order, transfers may be made during the fiscal year 1913 from among persons employed within the District of Columbia in one executive department or other Government establishment to fill vacancies that may occur in the classified service of another executive department or other Government establishment.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not understand whether under the agreement that was made this is the proper time to move to strike out this paragraph. I wish now or at some other time to move to strike it out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We can return to it under that agreement, and the gentleman can then make that motion.

Mr. GILLETT. I have permission to make that motion to strike it out then?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] in charge of the bill to line 6, section 4, and ask him does he not think that after the words "within the District of Columbia" the bill should be amended by the insertion of the words "except the Weather Bureau"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know of any reason why we should make that exception.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert those words.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If my colleague desires to offer an amendment, he will have that privilege when we return to this section, under the agreement.

Mr. FINLEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That on and after July 1, 1913, all appointments to positions in the classified service of the executive departments within the District of Columbia provided for at annual rates of compensation shall be made, after the probationary period of six months shall have expired, for terms of five years each; at the expiration of each such appointment the employment of each person so appointed shall cease and determine; and the employment of all persons in the classified service of the executive departments within the District of Columbia at annual rates of compensation, who were appointed prior to July 1, 1912, shall cease and determine, unless previously separated from the service, on the 30th day of June, 1914: Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall, if not more than 65 years of age, be eligible for and may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed without examination for additional periods of five years if at the time of such reappointment they shall be up to a fair standard of efficiency and capable of rendering a full measure of service in return for the salary of the place to which they may be appointed: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the head of any department from removing any time for good and sufficient cause any employee of his department: And provided further, That no person separated from the classified service under this provision shall directly or indirectly solicit indorsement for reappointment through any member of the legislative department, and any person violating this provision shall be denied reappointment: And provided further, That no head of an executive department shall receive or consider from any member of the legislative department any request for the reappointment of any person seeking employment in the classified service, and it shall be considered a violation of law for any member of the legislative department to submit to any executive officer a request for the reappointment of any person in said classified service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 139, in line 5, strike out the word "fourteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen," and in lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "if not more than 65 years of age."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the order that has just been made, we have a right to return to this section at any time after the reading of the bill has been concluded. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood the gentleman from South Carolina. The Chair is not sure that he understood the agreement correctly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will return to these sections later, in order that any member of the committee may offer amendments.

Mr. FINLEY. I will ask the gentleman if anyone else may offer amendments to the sections when they are recurred to?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly. Anybody can offer amendments when we return to them.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, we have not yet left section 5, I believe. We are to return to section 5, are we?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. If I may be recognized for one moment, the amendment that has just been adopted is the amendment that I gave notice of when the rule was adopted last week, that the committee would offer. We strike out the 65-year limitation, and make all persons in the classified service eligible for reappointment without regard to age. The other provision is that nobody shall come up for reappointment until 1917.

Mr. CANNON. Are we to return to section 5?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. That motion will be made later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That any person violating section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved August 5, 1882 (Stat. L., vol. 22, p. 255), shall be summarily removed from office, and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall want to move to amend this section, or strike it out.

Mr. CANNON. If I can have the attention of the gentleman, I should like to suggest an amendment to be pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In section 6, it seems to me that the word "knowingly" should be inserted, so that it will read that any person knowingly violating section 4 of the act referred to shall be removed from office and subjected to the penalty prescribed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will return to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That no money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used after the 1st day of October, 1912, for services in any executive department or other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., in the work of addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching any publication issued by an executive department or other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., or for the purchase of material or supplies to be used in such work; and on and after October 1, 1912, it shall be the duty of the Public Printer to perform such work at the Government Printing Office. Prior to October 1, 1912, each executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall transfer to the Public Printer such machines, equipment, and material as are used in addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching publications; and each head of such executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall furnish from time to time to the Public Printer mailing lists, in convenient form, and changes therein, for use in the distribution of publications issued by such department or establishment; and the Public Printer shall furnish copies of any publication only in accordance with the provisions of law or the instruction of the head of the department or establishment issuing the publication. The employment of all persons in the several executive departments and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., wholly in connection with the duties herein transferred to the Public Printer, or whose services can be dispensed with or devolved upon another because of such transfer, shall cease and determine on or before the 1st day of October, 1912, and their salaries or compensation shall lapse for the remainder of the fiscal year 1913 and be covered into the Treasury. A detailed statement of all machines, equipment, and material transferred to the Government Printing Office by operation of this provision and of all employments discontinued shall be submitted to Congress at its next session by the head of each executive department and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., in the annual estimates of appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 141, in line 15, after the word "publication," insert the words "except maps."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Does the amendment which the gentleman offered cover everything that is necessary in the Weather Bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We think so.

Mr. FINLEY. What does the Secretary of Agriculture say about it, does the gentleman know?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Secretary of Agriculture wrote me a letter asking me to except the maps, because he gets the telegrams at 8 o'clock and prints the maps and sends them out. I think the word "maps" covers everything that the Geological Survey and the Hydrographic Office and the Weather Bureau use.

Mr. FINLEY. What would remain that is now mailed by the Weather Bureau that would not be included within the exception?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know of anything they make except little charts or maps; they would pass under the title of "maps," I think.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think the cards they issue would come under the definition of maps?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think so. I think everything that they issue would pass under the word "maps"; it is so intended, anyway.

Mr. FINLEY. What would be the objection to excepting the Weather Bureau? We know definitely what they do. It requires two or three clerks to do the work that would be transferred if this provision in relation to Government printing passes. It is 2 or 3 miles from the Weather Bureau to the Government Printing Office, and it would require one or two messengers to carry the work of the Weather Bureau to the Government Printing Office in order to be mailed. Now, what is the objection to excepting the Weather Bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to my friend that we are going to recur to this section later, and in the meantime I will be glad to confer with the gentleman about any amendment he desires to offer if this language is not sufficiently broad.

Mr. FINLEY. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Of course the effect of the section depends upon what the words "publication issued by the executive department of the Government" mean. Would they include an order of the War Department; would they include the circular letter of the Treasury Department that goes out with checks?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir; it means the things that are printed and sent out as publications.

Mr. MANN. Here is a circular letter from the Treasury Department, which they send out with checks in payment of interest coupons; that is a publication issued by the Treasury Department. Is an order issued by the War Department included in this? There ought to be some apt language in here to cover questions of that sort.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the term "publication" is well understood.

Mr. MANN. I think it would cover these cases, because they are publications issued by an executive department. The gentleman might put in "publications issued by an executive department for general distribution," or something of that sort.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the expression is well understood. The word "publication" is so significant that I did not know of any other word to use. These refer to publications issued and distributed from the department. It does not cover the issuance of blanks or general orders or special orders.

Mr. MANN. But they are publications issued by the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not in the sense that we use it here.

Mr. MANN. That is a question. That is what it says. The Treasury Department occasionally sends out publications in connection with refunding bonds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a notice.

Mr. MANN. It is a publication issued by the department, and so described, and is listed in the bulletins or publications issued by the Government; and, then, there are publications issued and used to go with interest checks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think this language could be construed to cover that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let me make this suggestion: This provision was inserted after consultation with the Public Printer and in accordance with the recommendation made by the President to Congress in his message. If there is any doubt about the aptness of the words we have used, a little later in the day the gentleman can offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am calling it to the attention of the gentleman now, so that he may be considering the matter with a view of correcting any improper language in it. Let me ask the gentleman further. In connection with the distribution of the Farmers' Bulletin—which, of course, is a publication more widely issued than any other publication of the Government—as it now is, Members of Congress transmit their frank-addressed slips to the Department of Agriculture, and they are there pasted on the bulletins and mailed. Is it the intention to have that done in the Government Printing Office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is intended that all Government publications, after the 1st of October, 1912, shall be mailed at the Government Printing Office rather than at the department.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think that the result will be, instead of saving money and time, that the Farmers' Bulletins will have to be sent to Members of Congress at their offices, there be addressed and the slips pasted on by them, instead of its being done at the Public Printing Office.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think the only difference is this: That they will be sent out as public documents and not under the Congressman's frank.

Mr. MANN. They have to be sent out under Members' franks.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; not if they can be sent as public documents.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that the same rule applies to this section, that we may return to it hereafter, because we want to return to it in regard to the matter of Farmers' Bulletins.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the Commerce Court is abolished on and after July 1, 1912, and all laws in so far as they provide for the establishment of said Commerce Court are repealed. The jurisdiction now vested in the Commerce Court is hereby transferred to, and vested in, the district courts of the United States. All cases pending in the Commerce Court at the date of the passage of this act shall be transferred forthwith to said district courts. Each of said cases shall be transferred to the district court wherein it might have been filed at the time it was filed in the Commerce Court if this act had then been in effect, and if it might have been filed in any one of two or more district courts it shall be transferred to that one of said district courts which may be designated by the petitioner or petitioners in said case, or, upon failure of said petitioners to act in the premises within 10 days after the passage of this act, to such one of said district courts as may be designated by the judges of the Commerce Court. The judges of the Commerce Court shall have authority, and are hereby directed, to make any and all orders and to take any other action necessary to transfer as aforesaid the cases then pending in the Commerce Court to said district courts.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment here and have it pending, and that is that section 10 be stricken out, and also section 11, which has not yet been read——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman wait one minute until we finish some formal amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding was that the committee first was to have leave to offer amendments.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 122 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina will suspend for a moment. The Chair understood the gentleman to wish to offer an amendment to a section, and the Chair will state to the gentleman that section 11 of the bill has not been finished, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 122, the Bureau of Lighthouses, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 122 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the amendment read first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 122, line 4, strike out "deputy commissioner, $4,000"; in line 10, strike out "one, at $3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "two, at $3,000 each"; and in line 12, strike out the sum "$64,630" and insert in lieu thereof "$63,630"; and after line 12, insert "the office of deputy commissioner of lighthouses is hereby abolished."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to state this is all new matter, and I know of no reason for doing this, and for the present I object. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. BARTLETT. I reserve the right to object, too.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. May I state why the request is made?

Mr. GILLETT. I will be very glad to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. I said this is new to me. I know of no reason, and therefore I wish to reserve the right to object until an explanation can be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the right to object.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I make an inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I caught the proposition, it is to abolish the Deputy Commissioner of Lighthouses.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; and to create the position of assistant engineer.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I wish we could have less of these private conversations, as we would like to hear on this side of the House. We are still Members of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is no private conversation here. I was talking loud enough to be heard if the gentleman was listening. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know what the proposition is—to return to some section for the purpose of offering an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending before the committee is a request for unanimous consent on the part of the gentleman from South Carolina to return to page 122 to offer an amendment to the Bureau of Lighthouses, which has been reported by the Clerk.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the present deputy commissioner on the 1st day of July is to be appointed lighthouse inspector. That leaves a vacancy in this office. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor desires that the office of deputy commissioner be abolished and an additional assistant engineer be provided for. The amendment is made at the request of the Commissioner of Lighthouses at the request of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and after such investigation as the committee has been able to make we believe that the request is a proper one, and for that reason we have asked unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. I supposed I was a member of the committee. The gentleman says after such investigation as the committee has been able to make they approved it. This is the first I have heard of it, but upon the statement of the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Of course there was no formal meeting of the committee.

Mr. GILLETT (continuing). Upon the statement of the gentleman I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request——

Mr. BORLAND. Before the Chair puts the request, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri reserves the right to object.

Mr. BORLAND. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina to say that the present deputy commissioner would become inspector of lighthouses on the 1st of July. By virtue of what provision is that? Is there a provision of law now for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. These positions are now being held by naval officers, I believe, and on the 1st of July they must be filled by civilians. Is that correct?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, there are a number of lighthouse districts, and the third district, which is the New York district, is the general distributing district. The inspector of that district receives a salary of $3,600 a year and the inspectors of most of the districts receive a salary of $2,400 a year, but owing to the fact that that district is the district where the supplies come from and where the central depot is the salary was made $3,600 a year. The man who is now commissioner of lighthouses, by his own consent and in the interest of the service, is to be transferred and made inspector of the third lighthouse district from the 1st of July, at a salary of $3,600, the salary fixed by law. Now, then, when we reorganized the Lighthouse Service a few years ago we provided a commissioner and deputy commissioner of lighthouses, so there would be somebody to sign papers in the absence of the commissioner. We have recently provided in a bill—I do not know whether it has become a law or not, but it will—that the Secretary may designate anyone else to act as acting commissioner in the absence of the commissioner and deputy commissioner.

When we passed the reorganization bill we provided, I believe, for one assistant engineer to take the place of the many engineers then in the Army and Navy. Now they find they have more need of an additional assistant engineer than they have for a deputy commissioner, because in the absence of a commissioner under this new proposition they can designate somebody else to act for him. And as the deputy commissioner receives a salary of $4,000 and the present deputy desires to take the place which pays only $3,000, and as the service needs an assistant engineer in place of the deputy commissioner, the commissioner and Secretary have asked Congress to abolish the place of deputy at $4,000 and allow an assistant engineer at $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no objection to the change of an officer from a deputy commissioner to an inspector if his duties are just as broad as inspector as they would be as deputy commissioner, but if his duties as inspector are confined to a particular department, then the lighthouses will suffer from the loss of one man. It so happens the lighthouse business lately has been confined to putting lights on navigable streams. They have not found that their equipment was any too great to carry on that work.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, that is one of the very reasons why they wish to make this change, because they want an assistant engineer who can act on those matters and have charge of them where the deputy commissioner can not do it.

Mr. BORLAND. Has that provision been made by law so that this change will have that effect?

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's proposition is to strike out the deputy commissioner and insert an additional assistant engineer at $3,000 in place of the deputy commissioner at $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has again expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is due the committee that an additional statement should be made. This suggestion embodied in the pending amendment was not made at the time the bill was being prepared. It came subsequently in a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It is from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. This letter shows that the amendment is in the interest of efficient and economical administration. There can be no question about that, as was so clearly shown by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. With the permission of the committee I will read the letter, which is addressed to the Speaker, as follows:

THE SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEAR SIR: It is recommended that in the appropriations for the Bureau of Lighthouses for the coming fiscal year the item "deputy commissioner, $4,000," be omitted, and that there be inserted in lieu thereof an additional assistant engineer, at $3,000, making the item read "two assistant engineers, $6,000," in place of "assistant engineer, $3,000."

The act of June 17, 1910, reorganizing the Lighthouse Service, provides for a deputy commissioner and a chief constructing engineer, each at a salary of $4,000. The position of deputy commissioner was not included in the bill as originally reported, but was provided for before the final passage of the act. In the extensive work of reorganization the position was necessary and valuable. This reorganization having now been carried through, further experience in operation under this law indicates that in future a more effective organization for the Lighthouse Service will be obtained by substituting a position of assistant engineer for that of deputy commissioner. The organization would then include, under the Commissioner of Lighthouses, a chief constructing engineer, at $4,000, a superintendent of naval construction, at $3,000, two assistant engineers, at $3,000, and a chief clerk, at $2,400.

There is a saving of $1,000 per annum in the change proposed.

Very truly, yours,

——— ———, Secretary.

That explains the whole situation, and tells why it was necessary to offer the amendment at this time, and why it was not carried in the bill when it was originally reported to the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated, he and I are familiar with the organization of the present Lighthouse Board. By the act passed in 1910 the place of Deputy Commissioner of Lighthouses came as a result of compromise in a conference between the two Houses. I was a member of that conference committee, and after a long hearing and discussion of the matter the bill finally came out of conference with an agreement to establish this Deputy Commissioner of Lighthouses, and the Government was exceedingly fortunate in securing the service of the present deputy commissioner.

I have no personal interest in him; he does not come from my State. I never saw him or heard of him until after his appointment as Deputy Commissioner of Lighthouses; but I do know if reforms have been made in this bureau, if savings of the public moneys have been made, as they have been, it is due mainly and chiefly to the efficiency and devotion to duty of the present deputy commissioner, Mr. Conover.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that this proposition is more than agreeable to Mr. Conover?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know whether it is or not. I have no information from him on the subject; but I do not think the Government, for the sake of saving a thousand or even a few hundred dollars, should dispense with the services of as efficient a man as Mr. Conover is and put him back to the position from whence he was taken to become deputy commissioner. He was the inspector of the third lighthouse district, and was selected because of his information, knowledge, and efficiency.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Conover desires to go back as inspector of the new third district. He now receives a salary of $4,000. There he is to receive a salary of $3,600 and a house. And that district is so important——

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the importance of it.

Mr. MANN (continuing). He could save as much to the Government there as anyone else. He will probably go there, anyhow.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not a member of the subcommittee that considered this bill. I was present at some of the hearings. I am a member, however, of the Appropriations Committee, and it has never been suggested to me, although that is immaterial, that this amendment was to be offered. There is no reason why it should be adopted if it is not a good amendment. If it had been offered in committee, I certainly would have insisted that it should not be adopted.

The suggestion made by the Commissioner of Lighthouses was, not that any position be abolished, but that his own salary should be increased $1,000, if I recollect the testimony correctly. I have nothing to offer in the way of criticism of the Commissioner of Lighthouses. I have participated with my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in framing and reporting and passing the bill to reorganize the Lighthouse Board, which met with serious opposition at the other end of the Capitol, and I was placed on the committee of conference, having worked on this reformation in that service. For that reason I have had occasion to inquire into the workings of this bureau and the discharge of the duties of the officers of that bureau, having gone there frequently, and I had occasion in 1910, I believe, or in 1911, to call the attention of the House to the savings that had been, by reason of the reorganization, made by Mr. Conover, originated by him, and carried out by him through his devotion to the duties of that office. I do not think that the public service will be benefited by the abolition of this office and the change of the service of this man to a lighthouse inspector in the third district, a place which he filled for a number of years, after which, because of his efficiency in the discharge of duties there, he was made deputy commissioner.

I would like to have two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am in favor of economy, Mr. Chairman, but I do not believe there is any economy in changing this office and simply making it an assistant engineer. They have already a chief constructing engineer and a superintendent of naval construction in that office, and this simply adds another assistant engineer and abolishes the office of the deputy. I think this Government, instead of abolishing the office and dispensing with the services of the deputy commissioner, could well afford to increase his salary $1,000. It could well afford to do that instead of dispensing with his services and substituting in his place a man at a salary of $3,000. I repeat, Mr. Conover, as I recollect, is a native and resident of New York. I never saw him until after he was appointed, and I have no particular interest in his personal welfare except to indorse, as I said here, the efficiency, the ability, and the honest administration of a service which was demoralized when he took charge of his present office. And if from a disorganized administration that service has become one of better organization and more efficient service and more economical administration, effecting a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government as compared with the old plan of administering the Lighthouse Board, it is due more to the service, to the intelligence, the experience, and the devotion to duty of this man, whom you propose now to get rid of, than to any other man in that service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the amendment which he sends to the Clerk's desk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 122, in line 4, strike out "deputy commissioner, $4,000"; in line 10, strike out "one at $3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "two at $3,000 each"; in line 12 strike out the sum "$64,630" and insert in lieu thereof "$63,630"; and after line 12 insert "the office of Deputy Commissioner of Lighthouses is hereby abolished."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on establishing an assistant engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Georgia is what?

Mr. BARTLETT. On the establishment of a new office, another assistant engineer, an office not now provided for by law. I do not make the point of order on abolishing the deputy commissioner. I understand under the rule we can do that, because that dispenses with an office and reduces expenses. But I do make the point of order on the amendment which establishes a new office and pays a salary of $3,000, and if my point of order is good the entire amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] controvert the fact that this amendment is without warrant of law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This is simply to abolish one office at $4,000 and substitute one at $3,000. I do not care to argue it. If we can not get it through, it is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be the case, but if it establishes a new office it controverts Rule XXI.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does, Mr. Chairman. It creates a new office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to call the attention of the Chair to the statute, because I do not have it here; but my impression is that under the reorganization act the employment of such help as may be necessary is authorized, and the employment of one assistant engineer is not provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that when an amendment is proposed the burden is on the gentleman offering the amendment to show that there is law for the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with that; but the act—which I have not here at this time, I am free to admit—the act which created the reorganization did not provide specifically for one assistant engineer. That being before the House it would certainly be subject to amendment providing for two assistant engineers.

The CHAIRMAN. Without the information showing that there is warrant of law for this amendment, the Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is no law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. That sustains the point as to the salary?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] desire to renew his amendment in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is all one amendment. The point of order, I understand, applies to all.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The bill is finished. What section does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to call up?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has it——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina (continuing). I would suggest that we first consider section 10, dealing with the Commerce Court.

Mr. GILLETT. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Would the gentleman indicate how much time he desires to have?

Mr. MANN. Why do you commence at that section first? Why do you commence at the last? I suggest to the gentleman that probably the liveliest fight will be over the matter of mints and assay offices. Why not take that up?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We wanted to take up some matter that would not require the presence of the committee for a little while.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I want to be present when mints and assay offices are considered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman will understand why we want to take up some other section immediately.

Mr. GILLETT. Gentlemen think about half an hour would be needed on this side.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is perfectly satisfactory—a half hour on each side. We may want an hour on this side, however.

Mr. GILLETT. We want an hour on this side, too.

Mr. MANN. Can we not reach an agreement as to debate, and during that time all pending amendments shall be offered during the pending debate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will make that request. Mr. Chairman, I request unanimous consent that debate upon section 10 be limited to two hours, one hour on each side; that during that time any Member may be permitted to offer amendments, and that those amendments be pending, and at the close of the time fixed for debate a vote shall be taken on all pending amendments.

Mr. CANNON. That is on the Commerce Court?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Carolina who is to control the time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask further, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman frm Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] control the time on that side of the House and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that there may be one hour for general debate on each side on section 10, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and one hour by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS]; that during the two hours' debate amendments may be offered, which shall be pending until the debate closes, and that the vote shall then be taken on all pending amendments and on the section. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question as to when we shall probably vote upon the legislative bill. The reason I ask that is because it is necessary for me to be absent from the city after to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We expect to conclude this bill to-day.

Mr. DYER. I understand, then, that we will finish the consideration of the bill before the end of to-day's session?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We hope to do that.

Mr. DYER. That we will go on with a night session and finish it up?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If necessary.

Mr. DYER. Unless there is some understanding to that extent, I shall feel like objecting to spending so much time on one section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri object?

Mr. DYER. I do not object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not make any definite statement as to when this bill will be voted on, but we desire to finish the bill to-day.

Mr. MANN. That is the desire on both sides.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The disposition on both sides is to finish this bill to-day, and we hope to stay here long enough to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there was no general debate on this section while the bill was being considered in general debate, and inasmuch as every Member of the House who may be present will have to vote on it, I hope I may have your attention while I explain the reasons why I favor the retention of section 10 of this bill.

There has been so much political agitation in the last year or so about the questions of initiative, referendum, and recall of judicial as well as other officers that it is possible there may be some prejudice or some feeling engendered by present political conditions, and so I want to say that there ought to be no such prejudices or feelings in connection with the consideration of this proposition. It ought to be considered on its merits, without any reference whatever to any political or partisan effect it may have one way or the other.

In order to understand this matter clearly, to view it from the standpoint from which I view it, you must remember that this court began its sessions a little over a year ago, in February, 1911. The bill creating the court became a law June 18, 1910. That was commonly called the Townsend bill, because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] introduced the bill out of which the law was constructed.

That bill was, in substance, recommended by the message of the President of the United States. It created a new and special court. The argument in its favor was that there should be a court of experts, specially fitted by reason of expert knowledge, to pass upon questions arising out of suits brought either to enforce, annul, or suspend the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That bill as recommended in the message and as introduced contained a number of provisions outside of those creating the Commerce Court. Among others was what was called the merger provision, by which railroads might make certain agreements along the lines of a merger, by way of consolidation or absorption, which agreements, it was provided in the bill as introduced, might be submitted in the form of a moot case—the word "moot" is my own—to be passed upon by the Commerce Court, which should determine the questions involved before the merger actually took place. Be it sufficient to say that the bill was amended in every section, as I now remember, except the first six, which created the Commerce Court; that is, I mean it was amended substantially. The bill, which became a law, in my opinion, would have been a splendid piece of legislation if the Commerce Court had been left out. No doubt many Members voted for the bill on account of the good legislation it contained who would not have voted for it at all if it had contained no provisions except those for the creation of this Commerce Court.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a political or party question, and ought not to be so considered; but I am simply stating the history of the creation of this court when I say that it was very nearly a party question, because, after the bill was reported to the House, and while it was being considered in Committee of the Whole, a motion was made to strike out the sections creating the Commerce Court, and upon a vote in the committee it took the negative vote of the gentleman from New York, Mr. Bennet, who was presiding as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, in order to defeat the motion by a tie. Of course there is no record to show who voted for or against that motion, but when the bill was finally brought into the House, the present chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. ADAMSON] made a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out the six sections creating the Commerce Court. On that motion there was a yea-and-nay vote. The vote was taken on May 10, 1910, in the second session of the Sixty-first Congress, and there were—yeas 157, nays 176, the motion to strike out being defeated by 19 majority.

Mr. NYE. On what page of the RECORD is that vote found?

Mr. SIMS. On page 6032 of the RECORD. Now, an examination of that vote will show that every Democrat in the House who voted at all voted in favor of the motion to recommit and strike out, and a number of Republicans voted for that motion.

The proposition contained in this appropriation bill is in effect and in fact just what that motion was, no more and no less. It is simply to repeal so much of the act as created the court, but repealing no other part or portion of the act.

I say that was a partisan vote, in this sense, that all the Democrats were opposed to it, although several Republicans, as shown by the RECORD, were also opposed to the creation of the court. I think I state a fact which is known to every Member, that that court never would have been created had it not been for the insistence of the President and the Attorney General. I opposed the creation of the court. I devoted my entire time in general debate in opposition to the creation of a special court.

Why did we need this special court, and why do we need to have it continued now? Before the Hepburn Act passed in 1906 the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission did not go into effect of their own force. If the carriers refused to comply with those orders, it required a suit brought by the commission in a court to have the order enforced.

Therefore, prior to the Hepburn Act it was necessary to have a suit in order to have an order executed. In that way delay was very injurious to the shippers or to the parties, whoever they might be, in the execution of the order. But after the Hepburn Act, and especially since the act of 1910, the order goes into effect as a matter of law unless it is enjoined by a suit brought for that purpose.

Now, who brings these suits? Only parties in opposition to the orders. I call your attention to the fact that this Commerce Court has no jurisdiction whatever of any kind or class of cases except suits brought in opposition to and, so to speak, destructive of the orders of the commission. Why should we create a special antagonistic court to stand in terrorem over a body created by Congress? Why, if we have a special court, should it not be open to all suits growing out of the fourteenth as well as the fifth amendment? The entire jurisdiction is negative, and I do not care how high the character of the judges may be, how unbiased they may be when assigned to this court, is it reasonable to suppose that they can hear day in and day out, year in and year out, a continual onslaught of denunciation of the commission without becoming biased against that commisssion?

We might as well face the situation. This country is going to thoroughly, efficiently, and justly control transportation rates and common carriers or own the railroads. Which do you prefer, my friends? I prefer just, honest, and thorough regulation and control.

Now, as I say, the cry was to expedite the action before the Hepburn Act. Then one of the chief arguments of constituting this court was to expedite cases; the complaints were that the cases in the lower courts, the circuit courts then, were delayed; that they were not tried promptly. Now, the order is not enjoined, the rate goes into effect of its own force. Now, who is interested in enjoining the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to rates? The railroads only. When we are expediting the trial of cases now in antagonism of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is altogether a railroad benefit. It is expediting a trial whereby the order of the commission is intended to be destroyed and annihilated.

Having created a body of great rate experts with a special examination provided for, and after a full hearing as to the rate complained of, or on their own motion, ought the orders of that commission under all these circumstances to be lightly enjoined? Remember that when an order of the commission is made and its effective date fixed that that order begins to run from the date fixed in it; that it can live only two years; that the commission on the next day of its own motion can modify and change it. Now, I appeal to you, what equity and justice is there in permitting the carrier to enjoin by a preliminary injunction that order until a great portion of the two years has expired without the time so enjoined being deducted from the period of the life of the order? That is the law to-day. I introduced a bill which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce favorably reported, limiting the life of a preliminary injunction to 90 days. That will be the greatest expediting act that was ever passed if it becomes a law, but it is not being considered in this bill.

There is no need of a long time in the court to prepare a case for its hearing that has been thoroughly gone over before the commission when the order was being considered.

I know it has been said by some—even by the Attorney General of the United States—in effect that these judges, or some of them, can go out and take testimony and hear witnesses. Who, among the great lawyers of this body, ever heard a plea of that sort put forth to justify new conditions in equity suits? As a rule the evidence in all equity suits is taken before a commissioner or special officer, and rarely, if ever, before the judge who tries the cause.

The Commerce Court is authorized to issue temporary injunctions without any time limit whatever, and after the cause is tried it may be appealed to the Supreme Court if it amounts to anything, either in the amount involved or the questions raised. While we have expediting laws for the Commerce Court, the district court, and the Supreme Court, as to these cases, as to the hearing, there is not and can not be an expediting act that will cause or force the judges of the courts after they have heard the case to determine the case until they see proper.

Now, a case was heard by the Commerce Court affecting the New Orleans and Montgomery rates a year ago last April. The court held it under advisement until the 29th day of February, 1912. I do not question the right they had to do it. It may have been the proper thing to have done. But if you will look at the record of the highest court of the land, under the present law in appeals from orders granting preliminary injunctions by the Commerce Court, you will find that in the early part of January the Supreme Court heard two of these cases involving the issuance of preliminary injunctions and these cases have been undecided to this hour by the highest court of the land.

I am not complaining of the action of the court, but how can we force a judge or a court to render a decision until it has thoroughly considered the case?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not a fact that on motion of the Attorney General of the United States in a case of the character involving the enforcement of the antitrust laws the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are not advanced in the Supreme Court as soon as filed?

Mr. SIMS. I have stated that, as far as we can go, we have passed expediting acts that apply to the hearings of these cases.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not the practice of the court to advance the causes on motion of the Attorney General?

Mr. SIMS. On a certificate of importance that is true, but what I am trying to get gentlemen to see is that the court has a right to take its own time to decide a case, so there is no effective way by which Congress can do more than to expedite a hearing or trial. But, Mr. Chairman, how many cases do you suppose have been brought in all courts affecting the orders of the commission pro and con since the passage of the Hepburn Act? That act was passed June 29, 1906. There are to this day, including the cases before the circuit courts and the Commerce Court, only 85 all told. How many were brought by the commission to enforce its orders? One only. Now, then, a large number of those 85 cases were never tried. Take the position that every one was tried, and it does not amount to exceeding 14 cases a year. With ninety-odd district courts it is foolishness, according to my judgment, for anybody to say that 14 cases a year can not be tried in the district courts when the expediting act applies to those courts. No suit can arise under the order of the commission except upon one of two questions. The first is, Did the commission have the power to make the order? That is a question of law which must be determined by the courts. It is not an unusual question. There is nothing in the nature of expert knowledge required to construe the statutes. What is the next? Is the order confiscatory and violates the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States—which is a question of fact. Why does not the great State of New York, with its ten or eleven thousand miles of railroads, with its hundreds of questions arising by the State laws as to the common carriers, why do not they have an expert court? It, to me, is a most unreasonable contention that we must have an expert trial court when we must have a nonexpert court of last resort. Besides what I have just stated, an extra expense is incurred.

One of the strangest things I have ever known was in the bill as originally introduced. It provided that the circuit judges, having $7,000 salaries, like other circuit judges, should have in addition thereto $3,000 per annum for "living in Washington." The bill as passed reduced it to $1,500. Do we give the judges of the Supreme Court anything above their salaries for living in Washington? Do we give the judges of the courts in the District anything above their salaries for living in Washington? Do we give the Court of Claims judges anything extra to their salaries for living in Washington? Do we give the judges of the Customs Court anything above their salaries for living in Washington? Why is it that this should be made a pet and favored court by Congress?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I have never stood in this House for increasing the salaries of judges, and I do not stand for this, and if I had a chance to vote I would be willing to vote it down to the salaries of the circuit judges throughout the country, but if the salaries are cut down to the same as the circuit judges throughout the country will the gentleman be satisfied with that and not ask to strike down this court?

Mr. SIMS. No; no expense would stand in my way if this court was necessary to have justice done between the shippers and the common carriers. I never had a lawsuit against a railroad or had one for a railroad. I have no feeling or prejudice in this matter whatever.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. You mean as an attorney?

Mr. SIMS. I never had a lawsuit against a railroad and never represented a railroad in my life. Can the gentleman say as much?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I have had a great many against railroads, but never had one for them.

Mr. SIMS. That is not a question, or ought not to be. Now, the amount appropriated for this court the first year was $94,500. They brought in estimates for $74,500 for the next year. Every cent of that amount will be saved by the abolishment of this court, because it does not include the salaries of the judges.

We do not abolish the judges; they will remain circuit judges and can be and will be assigned to duty in the respective circuits. And why does my friend want to have a pet court, with extra allowances for living in the finest city on earth, in order to try 14 cases a year upon the average, and which will grow fewer each year as time goes on? We do not need this court——

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SIMS (continuing). And if there is no other reason why it should be abolished, why, that is a good one. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman propose to put in the number of cases that have been filed in this court since its organization?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not speaking about the district courts, but since 1910——

Mr. SIMS. I have all cases separated.

Mr. BARTLETT. Up to December 11 there were only 57 cases that have been filed.

Mr. SIMS. Including those transferred.

Mr. BARTLETT. All.

Mr. SIMS. All.

Mr. BARTLETT. And of that number only 12 are pending.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. And most of them are dismissed, according to the report of the commissioner, by the petitioners or went out of court upon a preliminary order, and there are only 12 remaining undisposed of.

Mr. SIMS. I wrote to the Interstate Commerce Commission the following letter, which I will here insert:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1912.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you kindly furnish me the following information concerning cases instituted in court since the passage of the Hepburn Act, June 29, 1906, for the purpose of enforcing and annulling orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Total number of cases.
Number instituted in the circuit courts.
Number instituted in the Commerce Court.
Number transferred from circuit courts to Commerce Court.
Preliminary injunctions granted and refused by circuit courts.
Preliminary injunctions granted and refused by the Commerce Court.
Final decrees in favor of and against the commission in the circuit courts.
Final decrees in favor of or against the commission in the Commerce Court.
Number of cases finally disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal.
Number in which the commission was upheld or otherwise.

I also wish to obtain information concerning the present condition of the docket of the Commerce Court; that is, the total number of cases now on that docket and the number of cases dismissed from that docket without hearing either by reason of action taken by the Supreme Court or otherwise.

Number of cases appealed to the Supreme Court from the Commerce Court in which preliminary injunctions were granted.
Number of such cases disposed of by Supreme Court and manner of disposition.

Very truly, yours, T. W. SIMS.

And I have a reply as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 6, 1912.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 3d instant, I report as follows concerning cases instituted in court since the passage of the Hepburn Act, June 29, 1906, for the purpose of enforcing and annulling orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Total number of cases, 85.
Number instituted in the circuit courts, 57.
Number instituted in the Commerce Court, 28.
Number transferred from circuit courts to Commerce Court, 33.
Number in which preliminary injunctions were granted by circuit courts, 11.
Number in which preliminary injunctions were refused by circuit courts, 15.
Number in which preliminary injunctions were granted by Commerce Court, 9.
Number in which preliminary injunctions were refused by Commerce Court, 7.

Number in which permanent injunctions were issued by circuit courts, 8.
Number in which orders of the commission were upheld on final hearing by circuit courts, 8.
Number in which permanent injunctions were issued by Commerce Court, 11.
Number in which orders of the commission were upheld on final hearing by Commerce Court, 8.
Of the 85 cases, 20 have been finally disposed of, upon appeal, by the Supreme Court, as follows:
In 14, the orders of the commission were upheld; in 4, the orders of the commission were held to be invalid; and in 2, known as the Peavey and Diffenbaugh Elevator cases, the orders of the commission were upheld in part and condemned in part.
Of the cases passed upon by the Commerce Court, 16 have been appealed to the Supreme Court, but only 4 of these have been decided by the latter court. In these 4, known as the Water Carrier cases, the Supreme Court upheld the orders of the commission and reversed the decrees of the Commerce Court.
Of the cases docketed in the Commerce Court, 21 were dismissed by the carriers.
Of the 85 cases, only 1 was instituted to enforce an order of the commission, but that was afterwards dismissed because the carrier against whom the order was directed had complied with the terms of the order.
In only 4 cases have appeals been taken to the Supreme Court from decrees of the Commerce Court granting preliminary injunctions, but no decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court in any of these cases.
There are 24 cases now on the Commerce Court docket, 4 of which are also pending in the Supreme Court upon appeals from decrees granting preliminary injunctions as aforesaid.

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. MARBLE, Secretary.

Mr. BARTLETT. Those are all the cases—I mean in reference to the Commerce Court?

Mr. SIMS. It states all of that. Now, as to preliminary injunctions. There were 26 applications to circuit courts under the Hepburn law before this court was created. Of applications for preliminary injunctions, the circuit courts issued 11 and refused 15. There has been in the Commerce Court 16 applications for preliminary injunctions, and the Commerce Court issued 9 and refused 7. So you see that the commission is getting the worst of it compared with the circuit courts. I have other information furnished me in printed form by a gentleman from New York, Mr. Schurz, which I will put in the RECORD.

39 CORTLANDT STREET,
New York, April 30, 1912.

DEAR SIR: The review of court opinions affecting interstate-commerce cases, inclosed herewith, is compiled to show what has been the ultimate result to shippers or the man who pays the freight.
From January 1, 1904, to December 31, 1911, a period of eight years, 59 actions have been before the courts and 8 additional suits have been filed to date, making a total of 67.
Thirty-eight of these have reached final conclusion; of this number only two have been lost:
No. 7, terminal charges of $2 per car on live stock at Chicago.
No. 12, relations of rates between packing-house product and live stock.
Leaving 10 on appeal to the Supreme Court, 14 in the Commerce Court, 2 on rehearing by the commission, and 3 held up awaiting appeal.
On the 17 decisions of the Commerce Court unfavorable to shippears, 15 have been appealed to the Supreme Court; 4 of these have been decided by this court to date, in which the Commerce Court was reversed in the 4 cases and the commission contention upheld. Of the cases appealed by carriers to the courts the Harriman line, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Cos., exceed by far in the number of contested cases.
In the decisions of the commission up to December 31, 1910, it is significant to note that the former chairman upheld the carrier in 34 out of the 42 cases, having a division of the commission in the seven years reviewed. In a great number of these cases the controversy involved far-reaching results and big reductions or reparation claims were involved. In all of these cases that have been reviewed by the Supreme Court the contentions of the complainants have been sustained. The most important were the famous—
Page 13, No. 3. Yellow-pine lumber advances condemned by the commission and reparation of over $4,000,000 involved.
Page 13, Nos. 2–12. Two cattle-rate cases, one involving a reduction of rates of over $1,000,000 per year.
Page 14, Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17. Four western lumber-rate cases involving upward of $1,000,000 per year.
Page 15, No. 20. Consolidated carload cases.
Page 15, No. 22. Lighterage allowances, New York Harbor discrimination as to shippers.
Page 16, No. 34. Reduction in Pullman fares.
Page 16, No. 35. Terminal charges Los Angeles and San Francisco.
Page 16, No. 37. Refusal of claim for greater reduction to southern points from Cincinnati.
Page 17, No. 39. Reduction in rates on hay.
In every one of these cases Chairman Knapp wrote vigorous opinions upholding the carriers. These opinions, coupled with the opinions of the Commerce Court rendered against the shippers, show the strong leaning of the former chairman to the carriers' welfare and go to show the cause for the present agitation for the abolishment of this court. The results show that it has placed itself in a position of a second or higher commission.
The opinions in the California switching, lemon rate reduction, New Orleans class rates, water carriers, and the infamous "back-haul" cases demonstrate the correct opinions of the many Congressmen and Senators against the establishment of this court, and shows the utter uselessness of this court of special jurisdiction supposed to have special training in the technicalities of the interstate-commerce law.
President Taft must have encountered considerable objection from the leading members of the circuit courts, particularly those that have handled commission cases, to accept appointments to this court.

Yours,

JAMES R. SCHURZ.

RESULTS TO SHIPPERS TO DATE FROM COMMERCE COURT.

Twenty-two final decisions—won 7, lost 15.
Nine preliminary decisions—won 3, lost 6.
Of the 65 cases before the Commerce Court, 10 were hours of service cases (all dismissed); 5 were accounting rules; 17 were actions started by shippers and the commission—leaving 32 rate cases contested by carriers—5 by the Harriman lines; 7 by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.; 4 by Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.; the 16 representing one-half of the rate cases.

It costs, or will cost in the future, at least $5,000 a case more to the Government to try it in the Commerce Court than it will cost in the district court or than it did cost in the circuit courts before the Commerce Court was created. Why should we have this extraordinary expense, wholly unnecessary in the administration of justice?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has occupied 30 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman used?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I request to be notified at the end of 15 minutes. I confess that I have some hesitation in addressing the committee on this measure. When the bill was first before the Interstate Commerce Committee a few years ago, I then had some objection to the creation of a Commerce Court. At that time I had some doubt as to whether it was necessary. When the gentleman from Tennessee presented his bill for the abolition of the Commerce Court at this session some testimony was taken and some examination was given to the subject, and I frankly admit that my point of view has somewhat changed; so together with those of the Interstate Commerce Committee who believed there were good reasons for the continuance of a Commerce Court I joined in a minority report as to the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee, which is a part of the files of this House. Now, the reasons why we believe that a Commerce Court or some similar tribunal having such duties should be continued are practically these:

First. Because the class of cases which would come before the court is a peculiar class, affecting the general public in a broad and peculiar way, entering into nearly every detail of the industrial and productive life of our people, much different than do other classes of litigation.

Second. That the establishment of the Commerce Court will greatly expedite a final determination of that important class of cases so vitally affecting such general public interests.

Third. Because it conduces to uniformity of decision, which is necessary for the good administration of the interstate-commerce law, and for a right understanding of the shippers and the carriers in the carrying out in good faith of the provisions of that law.

Fourth. Because it is a matter of economy to the litigants, especially the poorer shippers, who have occasion to contest the orders of the commission with the carrier. It is not only a matter of economy as to actual exepnditures incurred in the course of the case, but also a matter of celerity of determination, which is also an economy with them.

Fifth. That the continuance of the Commerce Court insures the continuance of the extremely serviceable work of Judge Knapp for the mediation and conciliation of industrial labor disputes under the Erdman Act.

This amendment in the bill, section 10, would abolish the use of one of the most important members of that board of conciliation and mediation. The reason why a special court is necessary, is because under the interstate-commerce law the fixing of future rates is a legislative act; and so the commission itself is an arm of Congress for the purpose of administering in a broad and fair way the beneficent provisions of interstate-commerce law; and especially the regulation of the many varieties of conduct of carriers and the fixing of rates for future service. That especially is a legislative act. It very largely affects public interests in nearly every line of production and distribution in this country. It may happen that a single carrier or a single shipper may be the only person who appears before the commission or the court in actual litigation concerning a contested rate. But as a matter of fact, the litigation itself may particularly affect whole sections of the country, and for that reason we ought to have a court which can consider these matters in the broadest sort of a way, a court of experience, a court of learning, a court which is accustomed to that sort of work, instead of having that class of litigation, almost along the line of legislation, mixed up with a lot of private causes affecting only the personal affairs of the litigants. These two classes of litigation are entirely different and, from the reason of things affecting public interests, they should be separated. It seems to me now, for that reason, we ought to have some special tribunal for the same reason, only more important, that we have a special tribunal in the administration of the customs law. With a special tribunal accustomed to this class of cases, with a constant and varied experience along this class of work we ought to have the utmost speed and certainty in the determination of these cases. Under the law before the enactment of a Commerce Court, and after the passage of the Hepburn bill, as shown by the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1909 and 1910, the commission itself was objecting very strongly to the way the courts were then conducting the litigation of the commission. Some of you have doubtless read in the last report of the Interstate Commerce Commission its criticism of the Commerce Court. It is rather amusing in view of that rather unusual procedure in an important official report to read the language of the commission in its previous report of 1910, as found on page 20 of that report, because it shows clearly the difficulties which will in the future arise in the ordinary district courts hereafter and the circuit courts which before conducted the interstate-commerce litigation. The commission, on page 20, stated there were two very important classes of cases, one affecting the cattle raisers in the Southwest; the other affecting the lumber interests of the Northwest.

Here the commission states:

> Both these cases were of very great importance, involving large amounts of money and vast commercial considerations. Both cases received most careful attention at the hands of the commission. In both the decision of the commission was reviewed by a single master in chancery. The court did not hear the testimony and could not have examined the record before rendering its decision.

Now, mark carefully the final paragraph:

> The existence of the new Commerce Court will provide a tribunal for the hearing of these questions which will avoid at least the absurdity involved in the above proceedings.

Now, that was the language of the commission at the time of the establishment of the court, and it discloses the very weakness of having the important orders of this commission properly considered before the ordinary circuit or district court which is bound to arise hereafter if the committee shall be supported. Consider a moment. There are about 30 circuit judges provided for in this bill and about 93 district judges, if I have the number aright. These judges are good men; they are men of broad experience in most lines of law and litigation. But as a rule they are not thoroughly acquainted with this very important class of litigation. The records of the Interstate Commerce Commission of very many of the cases contested in the courts are voluminous. Some of them probably contain 10 or 15 volumes of testimony. These cases are of great importance usually, and such testimony ought to be examined with great care by the court, because the case probably involves the welfare of communities, industries, and possibly thousands of people. It is one of the criticisms as to the commission to-day that this very important testimony is generally taken by the commission, even in very important matters, not by the commissioners themselves but by examiners sent out by the commission, while the commissioners can know nothing about the testimony in these very important matters involving whole sections of the country until the matter is brought before the commission in argument. The commission has made exactly that same complaint about the district judges in the past, and that complaint will be worse as time goes on, because the great volume of interstate-commerce investigations will be necessarily concentrated in comparatively few courts in the country—very few. An examination of the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission for 1908, 1909, and 1910, after the passage of the Hepburn bill, will show that not more than a dozen different circuit courts in the country had the trial and determination of probably 90 per cent of all the cases involving the interstate-commerce law.

Now, those courts were the very ones which also had a very large volume of general civil and criminal business. At San Francisco, at Kansas City, at St. Louis, and especially at Chicago and New York, St. Paul, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, those courts have the great bulk of the litigation concerning interstate commerce of the country. And more than that, under the old method, and the method that would be in existence if this amendment abolishing the court were adopted, the carriers would not be compelled to bring their litigation in any one place which would suit the shippers or the commission, but they could bring it anywhere they chose along the line of their railway. This gives them the choice of a favorable forum, suited either for delay, in case that be desired, or where the judge who would try the case had already indicated his view as to the law. The report of the Attorney General and the previous reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that, as to cases on the Pacific coast, notably the Los Angeles Lemon case and the San Francisco Switching case, were not brought in California, where the litigation arose, but were brought in Kansas, because it was on the same line of railway. Some cases in the South, involving the rate from New Orleans to Mobile, were not brought in Alabama or in Louisiana, but were brought in Kentucky. The Cattle cases in the Southwest were decided in St. Paul and the Lumber cases of the Northwest were also decided in St. Paul. Under the amendment proposed in the bill, if it be adopted, this litigation would then be brought in the forum which would best suit the carrier instead of the forum especially created for that purpose and directly responsible to the country for that particular class of cases.

Now, the testimony in these important cases before the commission would be taken by an examiner. The testimony for the circuit and in the future the district court would be taken by a master. The judges themselves would not be able to take any testimony at all. So now about the only place in which testimony as to important litigation would be taken before the judges who have the actual decision of the question would be in the Commerce Court itself, and that is one reason why such a tribunal ought to be maintained in some sort of a way.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Can the gentleman give me any statements as to how many places other than in the District of Columbia in which these judges have held court since the court was organized, or have they done it at all?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. The judges have taken testimony outside. Of course I have not sought to obtain information as to how long they have been at work in various parts of the United States where they have taken testimony. Of course I have not pretended to find out in detail that information.

Mr. BARTLETT. At last, however, the cases must be tried here?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; exactly. But the point that the gentleman tries to make and the point that ought to be made is that the Commerce Court would try its cases here; but under the old method cases involving litigation in one part of the country, say in California, might be tried in Kansas, and cases involving matters in Louisiana have been brought in Kentucky, and cattle cases in Oklahoma would be tried in St. Paul, and lumber cases involving matters in Seattle would be tried at St. Paul, so that it saves no trouble or expense to the litigant whether the district court or the Commerce Court tries the litigation. But it does make a difference in the matter of taking of testimony, as I have shown, and in the time that is taken to conduct the litigation. The records of the Commerce Court show that only about one-half of the time has been necessary to conduct the litigation that was necessary before to conduct similar litigation in the circuit courts. There is a saving of from six months to a year on the average on the part of the various classes of cases on account of the establishment of the Commerce Court; and that saving of time, very large in the aggregate, does help litigants, and does help to settle the law, and does help to inform the carriers and the shippers what their rights are under the law and what they should do to obey the law.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] very severely criticizes the court for apparently favoring the railroad companies. The records that were sent to us from the court and the office of the Attorney General show this situation as to the orders of the Commerce Court: There had been 13 injunctions applied for up to the time that those records were sent to the committee. Six applications for preliminary injunctions were granted and seven were denied.

Mr. BARTLETT. Up to what time—December 1, 1911?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The information as contained in the reports must have been, I think, up to the time of the annual report of the Attorney General.

Mr. BARTLETT. December 1, 1911?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. If the committee will recall, the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that about 600 orders are made each year; about that. In some years more are made, and in some years less, but on the average 600 orders are made each year. Out of that number the Commerce Court granted 6 orders for preliminary injunctions. As I stated, there were 600 orders made. Out of that 600 the court granted injunctions in 6, or about 1 per cent of all the orders made by the commission have been enjoined by the Commerce Court.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman does not mean 600 applications?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I did not say so. I say that of the 600 orders, 6 have been enjoined, and 7 applications have been denied.

Mr. SIMS. That is only 13 applications.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I stated that. I said that there were 13 applications, 6 of which had been granted and 7 had been denied.

Now, these reports show the following record as to decisions by the circuit courts, by the Supreme Court, and by the Commerce Court sustaining or reversing the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission: The commission was reversed by the old circuit courts under the Hepburn Act in 56 per cent of its cases, by the Commerce Court in 41 per cent of its cases, and the Supreme Court reversed the commission in 45 per cent of its cases, so that the Commerce Court reversed the commission in a smaller proportion of the cases than did either of the other two different classes of courts. The commission was upheld by the circuit courts in 44 per cent, by the Commerce Court in 59 per cent, and by the Supreme Court in 55 per cent of its cases decided by them, so that the Commerce Court had a better record for sustaining the work and the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission than did either of the two other classes of courts which have reviewed the various orders of the commission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the limited time that I have I desire to say one word about uniformity. When the old methods of the courts having jurisdiction under the Hepburn Act were enforced, when the lumber cases were brought before the courts, I think there were three different kinds of orders made; one in Seattle, one in Montana, and the other in St. Paul. They were all different in scope and basis for determination. The railroads, the carriers, and the shippers could not know clearly what to do, and this uncertainty always operated to the disadvantage of the poor litigant and to the advantage of the railroad company.

Under the new method, by which all the litigation goes entirely to one court, this court can inform the public speedily and exactly what is its construction of the law, and what the shippers should be expected to know, and what the railroads should be expected to do. It informs the public at once exactly what their rights are under the law, and enables the Supreme Court to finally determine the matter many months ahead of what could be done in any other way. Under the old method nobody could tell until at the end of two or three years, after a prolonged litigation through the Supreme Court, what the situation was; and I do not believe that such delays and such uncertainties and such confusion and such opportunities for the strong to delay and thwart the course of justice is for the public interest.

Now, again, the gentleman has stated that the members of the Commerce Court do take testimony in the field. They can do it, and they have done it. I do not know to what extent it can be done. But the Commerce Court can do it, and the Commerce Court can send its members anywhere in the United States to take testimony, at the expense of the public and not at the expense of the poor shipper; and those judges can then sit upon such testimony at the final determination of the case. This very important duty could not be done by the old circuit courts, and can not be done by the district courts in case this bill shall pass.

Again, the commission under the law has the right to send their original records from the offices of the commission to the Commerce Court for a hearing on a review of its orders. They could not do it if the court in California or in Washington or in Maine should attempt to review the orders of the commission, because the commission can not afford to let its records go out from Washington. But the very opportunity to transmit the original records to the reviewing court may be the means of greatly expediting the action of the court itself, which may mean very much sometimes; but it may also be the means of saving a large expense, possibly prohibitive, to a poor and worthy litigant. Yet the committee did not seem to consider this important feature to help the poorer shipper who is contesting an important matter with a powerful corporation. Yet that provision for such relief to the shipper would be nugatory in case this amendment to the law be adopted.

Now, one matter more.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman refers to the poor shippers. Does the gentleman have any idea how few suits are brought by shippers in the Commerce Court?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes, I have; and I will state that about one-fifth of the contested orders have been brought by the shippers, as I am informed, and about four-fifths are brought by the carriers. The reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission will show that many applications for relief are made by shippers and that the number of the shippers seeking such relief from the orders of the commission in the Commerce Court has steadily increased, and probably will so increase in the future. The record further shows that in a number of cases the shippers themselves have been denied relief by the commission and have later obtained relief from the Commerce Court, and as they learn the facility and cheapness with which they can have their complaints tested, undoubtedly such number will continue to increase. The same jurisdiction might exist in the district courts, but when shippers know the policy of a court they are able to form some idea of about what redress they will get.

Under an act of March 4, 1911, the President had the authority to appoint one of the judges of the Commerce Court to be a member of the board of mediation and conciliation, under the terms of the Erdman Act, to mediate between the railroads and their employees in cases of controversy concerning labor conditions. The President designated Mr. Justice Knapp, of the Commerce Court, for such position. Judge Knapp has acted for many years as such a mediator between employers and employees in labor disputes in interstate traffic, and Judge Knapp and Commissioner of Labor Neill have been extremely fortunate in their dealings with these most important, delicate, and complicated questions. These two high-minded and patriotic officials deserve great commendation for their extremely capable and patriotic efforts during many past years in averting industrial strikes. During the last few weeks Members of this House, no doubt, and the country as well, have noted with much interest and with much concern the able, disinterested, and successful efforts of these two men in averting the catastrophe of a strike which was threatened as the result of a controversy between the locomotive engineers and their railroad companies in the Eastern States. Now, this bill abolishes the Commerce Court and takes away the power of Judge Knapp to act as one of these mediators.

Mr. SIMS. How will that affect Judge Knapp? He remains a circuit judge, just as he is now.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; but the law provides for the appointment of a justice of the Commerce Court, and this abolishes the Commerce Court, and consequently he would then have no official status under any law to act as such an important mediator. If this measure had been the law, it is possible the awful strike, almost under way, could not have been averted. It seems to me folly for us to take any chance of losing the valuable services of an able official in such an emergency.

Mr. SIMS. We can take care of that by an amendment, and if you want it I will put that in.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. You have not done it; and I am speaking of the law just as it is. That provision ought not to be overlooked, in the interest of industrial peace in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to use any more of his time?

Mr. SIMS. I have used 30 minutes. How much time has the gentleman used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has used 23 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. We want to close on this side, and there are some gentlemen who want to speak. Will the gentleman from Minnesota use some more of his time?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield as much time as he desires to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL].

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am aware that this is a very dry subject and that it is not easy to interest Members in it in a short debate of this kind. I am aware also that there was pretty strong opposition to the law creating this court two years ago, and that there has been much agitation against it ever since, and that the court has never had a fair chance before the bar of public opinion. My hope is that each of you has before this time given the question some consideration and study, because I believe that every fair-minded Member on either side of the middle aisle who has given thorough study to this question and is familiar with its work and its record will agree that it would be a mistake to abolish the Commerce Court at this time, a mistake which would work great injury not only to the interests of the carriers, but to the shippers and to the commerce of the country.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] in his very able and comprehensive speech has touched upon practically every point in favor of the retention of the court. Therefore I must travel over some of the same ground covered by him, and to some extent elaborate the arguments which he made.

As I recollect, when this court was created by the law of June 18, 1910, the promise was made by its advocates that it would accomplish three good results: First, that it would expedite business; second, that it would tend toward uniformity in the law as established by cases decided; and, third, that it would tend toward economy in the saving of time, trouble, and expense to the litigants.

The circuit courts before which actions and proceedings were brought for reviewing the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to the creation of the Commerce Court were congested, especially in those parts of the country and in circuits in which this class of cases arose and in which, naturally, they were brought. On account of other cases and business pending before them, they were not able to give the prompt attention to the interstate-commerce cases which their importance and interest to the whole country demanded; and many cases were pending in those courts for long periods of time before they were tried and determined. It was therefore believed wise and quite necessary to create the Commerce Court, in order that all cases could be promptly disposed of and pushed along to the Supreme Court for final decision in case any of the parties who felt aggrieved concluded to appeal to that court.

We submit that the promise of expedition in the dispatch of business made for that court has been made good; that it has tried and decided all cases before it, during its existence, more promptly than they were ever tried before its creation, and more promptly than they will be tried in the future in the district courts of the country in case the Commerce Court is abolished.

When the Commerce Court was organized there were about 30 cases pending in the various circuit courts of the country which had not been tried, and they were transferred to the Commerce Court and speedily disposed of. No one can question the fact that by this court cases were actually hastened along more rapidly than could be realized under any expediting act. A notable instance in proof of this is the "intermountain cases," which were of very general interest and attracted wide attention. They were begun in October, 1911, heard and decided by the Commerce Court in December, 1911, and finally argued and submitted to the Supreme Court in February, 1912, only about four months after they were commenced.

Again, those who favored the creation of the Commerce Court promised that a fair degree of uniformity of decisions would follow the trial of those cases and the review of all the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission by that court.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] does not seem to want uniformity, because he objects to an expert court. Mr. Chairman, I believe in experts. If I had a difficult case involving large interests, I would prefer to employ a lawyer who made the particular phase or department of the law involved in that litigation a specialty. If I had a patent case, I would want to employ an expert patent lawyer; if I had a complicated lawsuit growing out of commercial transactions, I would prefer to employ an expert commercial lawyer. The Commerce Court is made up of experts on the law which applies to interstate commerce, or they will be experts if they are allowed to continue long enough in this particular kind of work, provided they are men of good ability and hard workers. The Commissioner of Patents is supposed to be an expert. The Commerce Court is supposed to be made up of experts, and the more familiar they are with the questions arising in that court the more efficient judges they are. The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are experts or become so. If men who devote all of their time to one particular class of cases do not become experts then, it seems to me, they are men of inferior ability or they are not employing their time faithfully and usefully.

Mr. JACKSON. Why is it necessary, then, to have another body of experts to pass on the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who are said to be the best experts in the world on the subject?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission were reviewed prior to the creation of the Commerce Court, and will, if this court is abolished, continue to be reviewed by some court. Would you rather have them reviewed by an expert court which has given much time and study and attention to that particular kind of questions and to that field or department of law, or submit them to a district judge, perhaps down in New Orleans, or in Maine, or out in Seattle, or somewhere else, who perhaps has never had a case of that character before, and might spend the whole year on one case and then not know as much about it as the Commerce Court does to start with?

By this amendment you admit that you are to have some sort of a court to review the decisions and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Would you rather have them reviewed by an expert court or a nonexpert court? Would you have them reviewed by men who know much about the law and are especially acquainted with that particular branch of the law, or by a man who knows little or nothing about it to start with?

On the question of uniformity, if the carrier or shipper has the option of bringing his case before one of several district judges he is apt to select the one whose views or opinions he thinks are more favorable to his contention. Hence it is quite certain that there would be conflicting decisions of the many district courts in the United States until settled by a uniform decision in the Supreme Court. That is not so now, when all the cases are concentrated in one court under uniform decisions, which stand as the law of the land, as a guide to all litigants, unless they are reversed or modified by the Supreme Court.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that every case that has been decided by the Interstate Commerce Commission has been appealed to the Supreme Court?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. No; I am not. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] said that only about 13 out of 600——

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I said applications for injunction.

Mr. GOOD. And that all decisions of the Commerce Court have been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, why not provide for a simple and speedy remedy by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Why does not the Sims bill and this amendment provide that? Instead of that they provide that the cases now before the Commerce Court shall be sent to the district courts throughout the United States for trial, and then they provide procedure for appeal from those courts to the Supreme Court of the United States for review.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. With pleasure.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is a distinguished lawyer himself, and justly so, and I ask him if he does not think as a lawyer that the judge of a court of justice ought to be an expert in the law and depend on railroad experts and other experts and witnesses to furnish the facts?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman ask that question seriously or as a joke?

Mr. ADAMSON. Seriously.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I know the gentleman has quite a sense of humor and sometimes jokes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from New York argues that every judge in a court of law must be an expert in every line of business, I think that would be a joke.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not claim that every judge can be an expert in every line of business. He must be familiar with the law, and if he is familiar with the kind of business which is involved in the case before him, he can decide it with more wisdom and be apt to get nearer right in his decision than if he does not know anything about it. Just as a lawyer who goes and sees the place where an accident occurs is for that reason better able to try the action successfully. Just as a lawyer who is personally familiar with some special kind of work or some special line of business can try a case which involves that kind of work or that line of business with more ability and more success than one who is not familiar with it and does not know anything about it. He can not be as readily fooled or deceived by witnesses or counsel. He must know the law and apply it to the facts; but he must also decide the facts, and in doing so the more apt he is to arrive at the truth and at the real merits of the case if he is familiar with the kind of work or business out of which the lawsuit arises.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then the gentleman, I suppose, in order to be consistent, would revolutionize the system of jurisprudence, and instead of having courts of law would have a particular or specific court for every line of business?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Not by any means. But I say I would rather have a man who is familiar with the line of business involved under all the circumstances to try my case, provided I had a good one and felt that I ought to win on the merits. If I had a bad one and my success depended on my being able to fool the judge by skillful witnesses or adroit or able attorneys, I would prefer to try it before a judge who could be the more easily deceived. A judge can not know too much, not only in the law but of business affairs, when called upon to decide a case involving business questions.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman does not contend that the Commerce Court or any other court undertakes to substitute its judgment for that of the Interstate Commerce Commission, does he, on the question of rates?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. On the law it does.

Mr. SIMS. But the question before the court is, Did the commission act within their authority, and, second, was the rate confiscatory? Is not that true?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Those are substantially the rules.

Mr. SIMS. Then, if it requires an expert court in the first instance, why would it not be much more important that we should have a court of last resort of experts?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The court of last resort is made up of the ablest lawyers and jurists that can be found in the country, and the more experienced and expert they are the better qualified they are to do their work. For that very reason I insist that Judge Knapp is better qualified to serve as presiding judge of the Commerce Court by reason of his 20 years' service on the Interstate Commerce Commission than if he had had no former experience, except as a general practicing attorney.

He and I were both raised on farms in the west end of Onondaga County. I have known him intimately for many years, and esteem and respect him very highly. All of his general practice was in Syracuse. He was honored many times by his fellow citizens by being elected and appointed to many offices of responsibility and trust, among them corporation counsel of Syracuse, and in all respects was looked upon as one of our foremost citizens. He was also one of the leaders of the great bar of the State of New York when he was appointed associate member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, about 21 years ago. He served on that commission about 20 years, during 13 of which he was chairman. His whole career has been marked by industry, hard work, and thoroughness. In his practice he mastered every proposition of law which came to him as an attorney before he left it, and the same habits of thoroughness and concentration, as well as uniform courtesy, continued during his whole service as Interstate Commerce Commissioner. By reason of his 20 years' service in that body there is no doubt he is better acquainted with interstate-commerce business, the industrial conditions of the country, so far as they pertain to interstate commerce and trade, and the law which applies to that very important and complicated subject, than any other man in the country.

One more word about Judge Knapp, since I have referred to him. I have been in this House for 13 years, and during that time have observed that gentlemen, especially on the other side of the aisle, whose business it was to criticize and find fault, have been exceedingly industrious in reading reports, examining records, and nosing around Washington in order that they might find fault with somebody in official life, from the President down. They have offered many resolutions on a variety of subjects and in criticism of many men in public life, and have attacked every man, especially in a responsible position, against whom they could find a shadow of complaint or any excuse for criticism.

Judge Knapp, as I observed, was chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission during all that time, discharging the duties of that very arduous and responsible office and deciding cases of unusual interest to shippers and carriers throughout the country, and if any fault were found with him during that period, or if he were open to attack from any quarter, he would not have been spared. Yet from first to last I never heard one of you criticize, or attempt to criticize, him in the slightest degree; nor did any one of you ever offer a resolution to investigate him or the commission, nor did you find one word of fault with the decisions which he rendered or participated in. During those 20 years he was in the spot light, and at the conclusion of his service he stood before the Congress and before the whole country as an able, upright, honest judge and administrator, above reproach and above suspicion. Because of his most excellent record and the valuable service he rendered he was selected by the President as the fittest man in the whole country to serve as presiding judge of the Commerce Court.

We all know that the President was very much interested in the creation, as he is now in the maintenance, of that court; and because he was interested in it and wanted it to render righteous judgments and make a good impression on the country on account of the opposition to it when the law was enacted he picked out the best man he could find, and that man was Judge Knapp.

By your action here to-day you propose to abolish the court which has done good and faithful work and decided all questions which came before it to the best of its judgment; and you further propose, indirectly at least, to censure and humiliate one of the most distinguished, worthy, and honorable jurists in the land. He deserves better treatment at your hands.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman thinks that judges should be experts. I ask him is it not a fact that the subject of the interstate-commerce law is and should be railway transportation, and if it is not simpler and freer from difficulty than any other branch of the law to-day?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then why do you gentlemen who want to abolish the Commerce Court provide that the cases now before the court shall be sent back throughout the country to be tried by district judges of district courts? Why not provide that they shall be appealed directly to the Supreme Court? Instead of that you are sending them back to go through the intermediate courts instead of sending them directly to the Supreme Court.

We submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is better for all parties, the carriers, shippers, and citizens generally, to have one court in which all those cases are tried and decided than to have a case tried in Louisiana and decided one way, and a case involving substantially the same questions of law tried and decided in another way in Minnesota, another way yet in California, and still another way in Massachusetts. Thus you would have four different kinds of law on substantially the same proposition, and they would all continue as precedents until reviewed by the Supreme Court and the law pertaining to them finally determined.

What is the point, and about the only one, which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] makes against the Commerce Court? He says it is an antagonistic court. I do not, on my life, comprehend just what he means by an antagonistic court, or on what facts or information he bases that allegation. In my practice I always understood that a court that decided a case against me was antagonistic to me, and I always understood that I had the inalienable right to go down to the tavern and swear at the judge; and that is what brother SIMS is now doing under rather more dignified circumstances. He is not satisfied with the decision in some particular case which was tried before the Commerce Court, and therefore he says that court is antagonistic. It probably was antagonistic to his view in that particular case, and if it had been decided the other way it would have been antagonistic to the view of the parties interested on the other side. Let him exercise his prerogative and swear at the court until he is black in the face, but let him not undertake to abolish the court because according to his view of the law it is wrong in one, or even in several, cases.

Mr. SIMS. I took the same position that I am now taking when legislation creating the court was pending.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Why, of course the court can not decide cases in favor of both sides. When a man goes into a lawsuit he must expect that either he or the other fellow will lose, and he has to take his chances. Every lawyer realizes that. If he does not when he enters the profession, he will learn it very promptly if he gets into litigated cases.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is half antagonistic.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. My friend from Oklahoma says it is half antagonistic, and according to my experience every court is half antagonistic.

The records and the facts submitted show that the Commerce Court has upheld the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission in a larger proportion of cases than it reversed or overruled them. Right here I will submit and have printed as a part of my remarks a list of 62 different cases, which are all that have been passed upon by the Commerce Court. It should be remembered that although it was created by the law of the 18th of June, 1910, it was not organized and ready for business until the 8th of January, 1911, and has been in existence only a little over one year.

The following is a list of cases showing the number, title, date when filed, by whom—carriers, shippers, or Interstate Commerce Commission—time when submitted to the Commerce Court, and, finally, the disposition of each case:

The friends of the Commerce Court claim that on this record that court merits commendation and approval rather than criticism and abolishment.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] suggests that it is becoming biased, and I assume that he means biased against the shippers. Again, may not the gentleman's judgment be a little askew in this matter? He was against the creation of this court and he has been against it ever since. Is it not possible that he is a little biased and prejudiced?

Mr. SIMS. May I state right there that there have been only four cases appealed from the Commerce Court to the Supreme Court that have been determined by the Supreme Court, and every one has been reversed—all four of them.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not think that is so. However if that statement is correct it means nothing. It does not establish the fact that the court is either biased or antagonistic. An attorney may be beaten four times in succession and then he may win four times in succession before the same court. That does not raise any presumption that the court is biased or partial. Every case must be decided on its merits. I once knew an old county judge of whom it was said that in appeals to him from justices' courts on questions of law he strictly followed the rule of affirming and reversing them in regular order. If he happened to affirm the judgment in the first case, then all the odd numbers down through the calendar were affirmed and all even numbers were reversed. At all events it could not be truthfully said of him that he was biased and that his antagonism was not equally divided.

When the Sims bill for the abolishment of the Commerce Court was under consideration by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Attorney General Wickersham appeared before that committee and made a full and comprehensive statement showing the important work of the court and the real need of its existence and continuance. At the close of his statement Mr. COVINGTON requested him to put in his corrected testimony a statement regarding the cases which the Commerce Court had finally disposed of. The Attorney General promised to do so, and the following is the statement so far as it applies to the charge of bias or antagonism.

SUMMARY OF GENERAL CONCLUSIONS BASED UPON THE DATA SUBMITTED.

1. The Commerce Court has upheld the commission in a larger proportion of cases than either the circuit or Supreme Court.
2. Under the old plan the circuit court was reversed by the Supreme Court in 7 out of 11 cases arising since the Hepburn Act.
3. The Commerce Court has not granted temporary injunctions with any more freedom than the circuit court did.
4. The 17 temporary injunctions which were granted were none of them in cases where the question was a question of fact.
5. The new plan has been very much more expeditious than the old plan.

Comparative statement, circuit court, Commerce Court, and Supreme Court.

[This statement includes all suits instituted since the Hepburn Act of 1906.]

	Circuit court.	Commerce Court.	Supreme Court.
Total number cases (as per attached memoranda)	48	[1]63	11
Number cases withdrawn	[1]31	19	.....
Number cases finally decided by the court	17	11	11
Commission reversed	9½	4½	5
Commission upheld	7½	6½	6
Temporary injunctions granted	11	7	.....
Temporary injunctions denied	12	7	.....

[1] Includes the cases transferred from circuit court to Commerce Court.

The following shows the proportion of instances in which the Interstate Commerce Commission was finally reversed or upheld by the circuit court, the Commerce Court, and the Supreme Court:

	Circuit court.		Commerce Court.		Supreme Court.
	Number of cases.	Per cent.	Number of cases.	Per cent.	Number of cases.	Per cent.
Commission reversed	9½	56	4½	41	5	45
Commission upheld	7½	44	6½	59	6	55

In some quarters it seems to be believed that the Commerce Court possesses or exercises jurisdiction not previously belonging to the Federal courts, but there is not the slightest foundation for such a belief. It is beyond dispute that the Commerce Court has exerted no authority whatever which the circuit courts did not freely assume and exert before the Commerce Court was created.

Nor has its creation operated to invite suits of this character or increase their number. I feel justified in saying that no suit has been brought in the Commerce Court which would not have been brought in the circuit courts under the former law, and the circuit courts would have had precisely the same power that the Commerce Court possesses. Of course what decisions would have been rendered by the various circuit courts in cases heard by the Commerce Court is only a matter of conjecture. The record of results seems to indicate that the Commerce Court has more generally sustained the commission than did the circuit courts, although it is obvious that there is no reliable basis of comparison. The charge or suggestion that the Commerce Court has assumed to review questions of disputed fact and so attempted to make itself a sort of superior commission is entirely unfounded. I believe that a thorough investigation will establish the fact that it decided no case except upon questions of law which were clearly involved. The general question in every case, broadly speaking, is the power of the commission to make the order sought to be set aside. That is the law as settled by the Supreme Court and as the Commerce Court has frequently declared. Indeed, the constant effort of the Commerce Court is to apply to the cases before it the principles which have been announced by the Supreme Court, and it is believed that the two courts are completely in accord in their general views upon the fundamental questions litigated. This will be determined when the Supreme Court decides some of the cases which have been recently argued and submitted.

Those who criticize the Commerce Court have not read its decisions and know little or nothing about the questions involved. The experience of its first year demonstrates to the informed and candid mind that the court has amply justified its creation. The cases within its present jurisdiction are cases of national import, of great importance to the public, and ought to be decided by judges of experience who have acquired special familiarity with litigation of this kind. So far as I have heard on this floor no charge of extravagance has been made against this court. The court and chambers are appropriately but not extravagantly furnished. Not much more than half the appropriation for that purpose was used, and the balance covered back into the Treasury. Only four statutory salaries, amounting in all to $12,000, will be saved by the abolishment of the court. The members of the court will continue as circuit judges even if you succeed in putting the court out of existence; and they will have to be provided with chambers, clerks, supplies, and traveling expenses, which will amount to about the same as required by them at the present time. On all the facts and on the substantial merits there is no good reason why the court should not be permitted to continue.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in his opening remarks suggested that since there is much political agitation relative to the recall of judges and judicial decisions, he hoped no prejudice or feeling of that character would influence the judgment of any Member in the consideration of this question. I earnestly join in that wish and hope, and yet I fear I will be disappointed. The extraordinary way in which this piece of legislation is brought before the House leads me to suspect that the gentlemen back of it are not disposed to be fair. Why should it be tacked on to a large appropriation bill if you are not afraid to consider it and let it take its chances in the regular and orderly way? You made it a part of this bill in order to force its enactment into law or cut off the supplies necessary for the maintenance of the Government. Does not this method of legislation indicate clearly your bias and prejudice and determined antagonism toward this court which you propose to strike down? Are you big enough and broad enough and magnaminous enough to divest yourselves of that prejudice and bias and all influence of political agitation and political agitators and decide this important question fairly and dispassionately on its merits? The vote will determine whether you measure up to that standard. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask how much time has been used?

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I mean by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], all told.

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-one minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Then he has 19 minutes remaining. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to appear in this debate, but in default of the appearance of other gentlemen who were billed for discourses I propose to stand by my friend Judge SIMS, who reported this bill. I had occasion two years ago for three months to study this proposition pretty thoroughly. I then opposed the creation of this court on a great many grounds. I want to say that I have seen no subsequent reason manifested by the organization and conduct of the Commerce Court to withdraw any objection that I have ever made to it or abandon the ground of opposition on which I opposed it through those three months. I think we could have easily defeated the creation of the court then if it had not been for unpaired absentees opposed to the court.

The House then really was opposed to the court and is now. Twice we had a tie vote on it with a number of gentlemen absent unpaired whom I knew to be against the court. I still believe the House is against the court. I believe the country is against the court and that it ought to be abolished. The court is an anomaly, it is an incongruity. A court of commerce in name is an insult to the profession of law and a travesty on our judicial system. Law and courts of law are the only universal solvent of human wrongs and injuries and human differences in this and every other civilized country, the mainstay of civilization. Distinguished gentlemen who talk about it being necessary to have expert courts have wandered far afield from the doctrine of the old masters, the doctrine of law—human law supposed to be modeled after the doctrine of the divine law. A judge ought to be expert in the law. If he is learned otherwise, it will do no harm, but he is not required to be expert in all other lines of business, not in all details, not an expert in all the particular scientific or technical facts that may be used in all lines of business. And I am sorry to say, Mr. Chairman, that when people get to talking about the necessity for expert boards and expert courts and get to talking about commerce or finance they innocently—inadvertently, no doubt—fall into the error, unconsciously, I believe, or at least act on the suggestion——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. If you will let me finish the sentence. I do not like to break a beautiful sentence like that right in the middle. I might spoil it or I might break the other half.

Growing into an assumption that in order to be expert on commerce matters he must be trained as a corporation lawyer; that in order to be expert in financial matters he must be trained as a banker; that all the true expertness relates, and only can relate, to the people who have been trained on one side of a question, and they do not have to be dishonest in heart and intent to be prejudiced in favor of privilege and special interest. Not at all. The most honest man may be the most prejudiced man who, by his training and environment, has gotten his mind warped, just as my brother DRISCOLL may take a twig and tie it down at the top by a piece of twine, holding it there until when it matured it would be a bent tree, and yet the tree would be innocent though crooked.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Suppose the gentleman, who has practiced alone the lines from the justice court up, had a case for a plaintiff against a defendant for trespass by reason of the defendant's breachy cattle breaking into his client's land and destroying the crops or injuring them, would he not rather have a judge who had been raised on a farm as a boy and knew something about cattle and something about line fences, than to have a judge that was never out of the city in his life? That is, if he had a good case. If he had a poor one he would not want such a judge.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is easy. I would like to have a judge who is learned in the law, and if I did not have sense enough to know what the facts were, I would like to have a lawyer who had sense enough to get up the witnesses and find out what they knew, adduce the facts to the court and jury, and present to the judge the law bearing on those questions. That is the way to practice law. These automatic, machine-made, politically created and manufactured, artificial, anomalous, incongruous, outlandish courts do not suit my idea of dispensing human justice.

I believe in the practice of law in order to secure justice. I believe a client has a right to select his lawyer and bring his case and prosecute it to the highest court or defend it to the highest court according to the judgment of his own lawyer and not that of a Federal official placed in charge of all that litigation, with power and authority and disposition, I am sorry to say, to turn down the wishes of the client and the views of his lawyers, and tell the appellate court that the lawyer's judgment is wrong and the action of the lower tribunal erroneous and allow it to be set aside, with the party's lawyer insisting that the judgment ought to be sustained. That is the situation with this court. I do not criticize the particular opinions of the court—that is, I do not base my opposition on them. A good judge may render a very bad decision; a mean judge may render a good decision. I object to the existence of the court itself. It was unnecessary; it was an injury to all litigants interested in interstate-commerce law. It was intended to prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from regulating carriers and is serving that purpose most signally. It was an accommodation to the corporations in order to enable them to concentrate their attention at one place, reduce the number and cost of their lawyers, cheapen their expenses, and lessen their trouble by letting one or two lawyers attend to all the business, just like trying to pour the Atlantic Ocean through one little funnel, which would be congested and clogged. It would not work. I prefer to allow people to have justice at home in their own communities, in the vicinage where the trouble arises. And if, as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] says, it would be possible to take them thousands of miles from home before the district judges, let us amend that. Let us fix it so a man can law at home and obtain justice.

I hope this court will be abolished. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the continuance of the Commerce Court and in favor of retaining section 10 in the pending bill. In the first place, we have drifted too far away from the constitutional landmarks in the creation of special courts in this country. The best jurisprudence of America and the greatest legal history in the country were created at a time when the strong legal characters were judges, who had to have a legal learning and general knowledge broad enough to determine rightly all the varied questions which came before the courts. The era of specialists in the law is being pushed to such an extreme that the judgments obtained from special courts are often warped rather than well rounded. The special interests which have caused the establishment of the special courts are too often the beneficiaries of the judgments. We created a few years ago a Court of Customs Appeals. There has been recently an agitation for a court of patent appeals; and if we push the idea to its conclusion we will soon have no general jurisdiction left for our Federal district courts.

The great argument advanced on the floor of this House in 1910 for the creation of the Commerce Court was that it would facilitate the disposition of the cases in which orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission affecting railroad freight rates are appealed from, and would be in the interest of the shippers of the United States. Now, the passage of the interstate-commerce law and its various amendments has always been supposed to have been primarily for the benefit of the shippers of America and in order to curb the aggression of the railroads in the matter of excessive rates, and yet the result of the creation of the Commerce Court is that the shippers have not been the beneficiaries, but that the railroads have. Every court must be judged, without criticizing the personnel of the court, by the character of its decisions in the interest of justice to the litigants appearing before it. The net result of one year and a half of existence of the Commerce Court is that three-fourths of the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in favor of the shippers and against the railroads have been overruled by the Commerce Court, while up to that time a considerable majority of such orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission which were appealed from were sustained by the courts to which they were carried, including the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has never been unjust to the railroads of America, and when the interstate-commerce act of 1910 was passed it was seriously urged that the final decision of rate cases would be facilitated and shippers would have speedier determination of their rights by the creation of the Commerce Court. The railroads were not considered, for they are well able to take care of themselves.

In point of fact there has been some little expedition of business by the creation of the court, but not much. Having regard for the mental bias which judges must have who believe they have been selected as a curb on the Interstate Commerce Commission, it can not be said that any benefit has come to the people of the United States from the existence of the court. Upon the whole, and with cost of the court's maintenance from $75,000 to $100,000 a year, what reason is there for not abolishing it? The district courts of the United States have in the past exercised the jurisdiction of the Commerce Court, with at least equal benefit to shippers, and the pending section of this bill simply proposes to restore that jurisdiction to those courts. In this connection it is significant that no shippers in the United States, so far as I have heard, are objecting to letting the Commerce Court pass into a mere memory.

I am frank to state that one of the reasons why the Commerce Court has entirely failed of its purpose has been a fundamental misconception of the rights of the United States in suits between the shippers and the railroads as defined in the act creating the court. The Attorney General, when this matter was thoroughly inquired into by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, urged that it is proper to consider the right of the Government and the right of the railroads as coextensive rights, while the right of the particular shipper who is the litigant in any case is subordinate. Prior to the act of 1910 the United States was not a party to suits affecting orders relating to rates issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was a straight contest between carrier and shipper. The act of 1910 proposed that all proceedings with respect to orders of the commission should be brought against the United States, or by the United States if seeking to enforce them, and that the United States should be represented by the Department of Justice precisely as in any other proceeding for or against the United States. The shippers have, of course, the right to intervene, but where they are not the real litigants they are at a decided disadvantage.

The shippers of the country are therefore absolutely left in a position to-day where they must submit to appeals from orders in their favor made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, have those appeals heard in a special court which must necessarily regard itself as a check upon the commission in the interest of the carriers, and if in any given appeal the Department of Justice believes that the railroad company's contention is the correct one the shipper is practically remediless, and the Attorney General or his assistant in charge of the case acting for the Department of Justice can in reality confess judgment for the railroad company and have reversed the order of the commission favoring the shipper. That sort of a situation has been an inseparable incident of the creation of the Commerce Court, and as to the proposed abolition of this court by the section now under discussion I want to say frankly to gentlemen on the other side that I hope it is merely the entering wedge and that we may go further and restore the law to what it was prior to 1910, where in all these questions of railroad rates affecting the right of the public to be protected from exorbitant charges by mail carriers, the people shall stand in the courts of the United States on an absolute equality with the railroads.

So, Mr. Chairman, the Commerce Court, having signally failed of its proper purpose, having produced absolutely no benefit to the shippers of the United States beyond that formerly enjoyed through the regular courts, and costing the Government, as it does, a large sum of money, I say we should have the courage to abolish it and return to the full-rounded and time-honored courts contemplated by the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman propose to use it all in one speech?

Mr. SIMS. Not all. I wish the gentleman would use some of his time now.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to address myself a second time to this committee, and I would not if my colleagues desired to say anything upon this important measure. However, I shall take only seven minutes of the time, and will ask that the Chair inform me at the end of that time.

First, there ought not to be a misapprehension such as seems to exist as to reason for the existence of this court, and as to the reason why the shippers are in apparent subordination to the authority of the Department of Justice, because the reasons for the two are almost identical. As I stated in my remarks before, the enforcement and the administration of the interstate-commerce law is a matter of great public importance, affecting the public interests of large numbers of people and large sections of the country, of many shippers; involving millions of dollars and the welfare of communities, and it is of the utmost importance to the public that the administration of the law upon such important questions be made speedy, be made uniform, and that the interests of the public be protected.

Now, the difficulty with my good friend from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] was that he addressed himself to a matter that is not before this committee at all. It is contained in the bill which was reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce and is now on the calendar of the House, but his remarks did not pertain to anything on which this committee will vote to-day. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created to enforce the interstate-commerce law. The great railroad systems of the United States, since the enactment of the Hepburn bill, have established legal bureaus for the study and protection of their rights under the interstate-commerce law. Nearly all the railroads have such a bureau, and they have engaged the best legal talent in the country to do the work for them.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. COVINGTON. When the Attorney General of the United States was before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as indicating whether or not the shippers of America have been benefited by the creation of the Commerce Court, did he not testify and submit a statement which showed that the result of the creation of that court had been vastly to increase the number of overruled decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, when the orders had been in favor of the shipper, and vastly to decrease the instances where the shippers had in that court obtained affirmation of the decree made in their favor by the commission itself?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, just the contrary. On page 24 of the report of the Interstate Commerce Committee on the Sims bill, there is submitted a statement from the record of the court and from the Department of Justice stating the record of the court, showing that there had been more orders of the commission sustained, a larger percentage sustained, by the Commerce Court than by either the circuit court or by the Supreme Court, and also that there had been a larger proportion of the orders of the commission overruled by the old circuit courts than by the Commerce Court, and a larger proportion overruled by the Supreme Court than by the Commerce Court. Those are the records that were sent to the committee by the courts and Department of Justice and are a part of the records and files of this House.

Mr. COVINGTON. But did not that include the orders on which the Interstate Commerce Commission had ruled against the shippers and in favor of the railroads?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It so happens, Mr. Chairman, that in some of those cases the railroads are nominal parties, and the gentleman no doubt has in mind those cases where the railroads are nominal parties. For example, one of the orders contained a decision as to grain rates between Nashville and Atlanta. Now, nominally the railroads were one of the parties litigant, but actually the railroads did not care about the final result of the case. It was a contest between two important commercial centers. Now, if the commission and the court decided in favor of the railroad, which was a nominal party, the gentleman could and doubtless would contend that on that account the commission and the court would decide in favor of the railroad, and that is the basis of his argument.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have there been more appeals from the orders of the commission since the creation of the Commerce Court than there were prior to that time?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think possibly a few, but not many more. The last docket I have here, the April docket, has 64 cases. That embraces 31 cases that were transferred. I think there is not very much difference; not a great difference.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is another question that I want to ask. The gentleman indicated that he did not think the argument of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] was applicable at this time to the matters that we are to vote on. I may have misunderstood the application of that remark. As I understood the gentleman from Maryland, one of his chief objections was the power that was given to the Attorney General in the creation of the Commerce Court to have control over the litigation in that court rather than the Interstate Commerce Commission and the individual shippers. Now, why is not that question involved when we are here voting as to whether we will continue this court or not?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Because, Mr. Chairman, under the act creating the Commerce Court, which is now in existence and which will not be disturbed by this section 10 from the gentleman's committee, the Department of Justice has control of litigation concerning the review of orders of the commission in the Supreme Court and in all courts; and if section 10 of this appropriation bill be passed in its present form the Department of Justice will continue to have control of the interstate commerce litigation in the district courts and in the Supreme Court of the United States. This provision, as it stands, would not change the jurisdiction and authority of the Department of Justice at all. That is my contention, and that is why there is no change in that respect and why the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland do not affect the proposition upon which we vote. The Department of Justice would conduct litigation in the Supreme Court of the United States just the same after this bill passed, and it would conduct the litigation in the district courts just the same as it now conducts and has charge of the litgation in the Commerce Court.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do I understand that the abolition of the Commerce Court would not give to the shipper or the Interstate Commerce Commission any more initiative as to the suits brought in the district courts than they now have, as to suits brought in the Commerce Court.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. As I read section 10 of this legislative appropriation bill, I do not think it changes at all the powers or the authority of the Department of Justice with reference to interstate-commerce litigation. It only changes the court machinery for review, and does not at all affect the powers or authority of the executive officials who are to have charge of the cases before and in the machinery so changed.

Mr. COVINGTON. Will the gentleman permit me for one moment?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. COVINGTON. The gentleman of course recognizes that there is now upon the calendar of the House of Representatives, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a bill which, if the Commerce Court is abolished, may be more easily passed, and which will very seriously affect the conduct of the Department of Justice in cases appealed from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and will very materially benefit the shipper, does he not?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, that is an entirely different proposition from the one which we are called upon to vote upon to-day, and when the time comes we will address ourselves to that proposition.

Mr. COVINGTON. Regarding the attitude of the Commerce Court toward the Interstate Commerce Commission, will the gentleman permit me to read from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman ought not to take my time for that.

Mr. COVINGTON. Only one paragraph.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Very well, then. I hope the gentleman will not trespass.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will not. On page 60 of the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission I find this language:

> In but three cases of any consequence where the commission and the shippers have been opposed by the railroads have the orders of the commission been sustained, even temporarily, by the refusal to grant a temporary restraining order.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to that I cite the gentleman to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the previous year, which I read to this committee before he came into the Chamber, in which the same Interstate Commerce Commission one year before criticized the circuit courts for not giving competent attention to the orders of the commission and to the litigation from the commission, stating that the commission expected there would be relief from such absurd consequences by the establishment of the Commerce Court. And that is what I desire to call to the attention of this committee. It is one of the unfortunate things in connection with this whole subject. There is apparent friction, unfortunately, between the two tribunals, but that ought not to influence our action to-day in considering whether or not such a forum ought to be continued for the prosecution of this important public business. In 1910 the Commission demanded that there should be a Commerce Court, and stated it was necessary to properly protect its work in the enforcement of the law. In 1911 they criticized the action of the court, in that they were unfairly enforcing the law. Of course, I think the difficulty is largely personal and transient, and will in due time pass away if we can only give it a chance, and then the real merits of this tribunal can be appreciated. The matter for us to consider to-day in voting is whether or not, from a broad public standpoint, there is need for a tribunal like the Commerce Court, having that kind of jurisdiction, to consider the broad public questions involved in litigation concerning interstate commerce. That is the question for us to decide in voting to-day.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask the gentleman whether he approves of that provision in the law creating the Commerce Court which gives to the Attorney General his present power over litigation.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. That question is not involved here, but——

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is very much involved here. That is the reason why I should like the gentleman's opinion about it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There is this to say about it: The interstate-commerce law affects large bodies of people. If the shipper is allowed to decide for himself his policy of conducting the litigation, he may sacrifice in the conduct of his particular matter the interests of large sections of the country a thousand times more important than his own. Since this is a matter of large public interest and importance, Congress deemed that it was a wise thing to give the public interests a right to be heard and a right to be protected in such litigation.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the gentleman——

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Just a moment, and I will try to answer the question. For that reason the Department of Justice was given authority to take part in the litigation concerning the public interest and to represent the broad public interest apart from the individual case of one man who might be willing to sacrifice the public to help himself, just the same as the Department of Justice is given authority in all other matters involving the larger public interests. It is to protect the public interest and to see that the shipper does not sacrifice it, and that the proper construction and policy is adopted for the benefit of all of the people, that the Attorney General is given the right to participate in the litigation. It seemed to be better to trust a public official of high station and experience to care for the public interest and welfare than to take any chances as to how litigation might result when tried as the litigants might desire for their own personal benefit.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there not a distinction between the right to participate for the purpose of protecting the public interest as such and the right to dominate and to prevent the private litigant from continuing the conduct of a controversy if he happens to have an opinion different from that of the Attorney General?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There is always this to say: The Attorney General of the United States represents the people of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. He may or he may not.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. This is my time and it is very limited, and I desire to yield to the gentleman from New York. The Attorney General under his oath is obliged to protect the general interests of the public and of the United States. That is what he is there for, and I assume he does his duty in enforcing this law and all the other laws of the United States, and that he will protect the interests of the shipper the same as he would protect the interests of all the other shippers; but the interests of all the other shippers ought also to be protected, and it is not just to the public to allow one shipper to subvert the interests of the general public in order to protect himself.

Gentlemen have urged that the passage of this provision will expedite causes under the expedition act. In the report of the minority there are given seven different classes of statutes also providing for the expedition of different kinds of public litigation. The antitrust act, the Elkins rebate act, the navigation laws, contempt before referees in bankruptcy, interlocutory injunctions, suspending State statutes, and so forth. I will insert the extract from the report.

BY STATUTORY REQUIREMENT.

The antitrust act. (32 Stat. L., 823.)
The Elkins Act. (32 Stat. L., 849.)
The navigation laws. (R. S., sec. 4300; 30 Stat. L., 1153; 31 Stat. L., 682; 25 Stat. L., 151; 25 Stat. L., 210; 27 Stat. L., 431; 28 Stat. L., 361.)
Contempts before referees in bankruptcy. (30 Stat. L., 556.)
Habeas corpus. (R. S., secs. 751 to 766, inclusive.)
Interference with submarine cables. (25 Stat. L., 42.)
Interlocutory injunction suspending State statutes (three judges to be called together at once, Judicial Code, sec. 266).

UNDER PRACTICE OR COURT RULES.

Criminal cases.
Ordinary interlocutory injunctions.
Cases arising for a second trial.
Cases brought by receivers.
Cases brought by the United States.
Jury cases (generally given precedence over equity cases).

You will note that there are seven acts of Congress all providing for expediting the various cases under each one of these respective acts. The litigation concerning interstate commerce is no more important under the law as it stands, or will stand if this bill passes, than any other class of cases, and the result would be that there would be no expedition at all and litigation would be delayed, public interests would suffer, the litigants would suffer, and the shippers would suffer as before. And in addition to that, if the cases be tried in courts already congested with private business, that will also suffer and in some cases amount to a denial of justice.

Mr. NYE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. NYE. I want to know if the committee has any information from the shippers throughout the country as to their sentiment on this subject, as to whether they want the Commerce Court continued.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There has no sentiment of that kind been received by the committee. I will insert, Mr. Chairman, in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an extract from the Washington Post from a large shipper in the Southwest urging the retention of this court, and other matters affecting the position of shippers to the Commerce Court. The Commerce Court has been criticized for apparently attempting to review the facts contained in the decisions of the commission. That is unfair criticism, whether made here or elsewhere. The court has only performed its function of reviewing questions of law alone. There are cases where the question is of mixed law and fact, and, of course, equally subject to review. If this court be abolished, the district courts will have exactly the same power as now does the Commerce Court and as before did the circuit courts. To show this power, I will insert here a citation from one of the latest cases of the Supreme Court, setting forth and defining the power of the courts to review the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This should set at rest the criticism that the courts have usurped the powers of the commission, as has been so erroneously stated here.

In the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (32 Sup. Ct. Rep. No. 6, p. 110) Mr. Justice Lamar stated:

The appeals raise the single question as to whether, in making the 45-cent rate, the commission acted within or beyond its power. As the statute makes its finding prima facie correct (C., H. & D. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S., 154; L. Ed., 1000; 27 Sup. Ct. Rep., 648), it will be more convenient to consider the case from the standpoint of the carriers, who first insist that the order was void because made without evidence or finding that the 50-cent rate was unreasonable.

There has been no attempt to make an exhaustive statement of the principle involved, but in cases thus far decided it has been settled that the orders of the commission are final unless (1) beyond the power which it could constitutionally exercise; or (2) beyond its statutory power; or (3) based upon a mistake of law. But questions of fact may be involved in the determination of questions of law, so that an order, regular on its face, may be set aside if it appears that (4) the rate is so low as to be confiscatory and in violation of the constitutional prohibition against taking property without due process of the law; or (5) if the commission acted so arbitrarily and unjustly as to fix rates contrary to evidence, or without evidence to support it; or (6) if the authority therein involved has been exercised in such an unreasonable manner as to cause it to be within the elementary rule that the substance and not the shadow determines the validity of the exercise of the power. (Cases cited.)

In determining the mixed questions of law and fact, the court confines itself to the ultimate question as to whether the commission acted within its power. It will not consider the expediency or wisdom of the order, or whether, on like testimony, it would have made a similar ruling. "The findings of the commission are made by law prima facie true, and this court has ascribed to them the strength due to the judgments of a tribunal appointed by law and informed by experience." (I. C. R. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S., 441; 51 L. Ed., 1128; 27 Sup. Ct. Rep., 700.) Its conclusion, of course, is subject to review, but when supported by evidence is accepted as final; not that its decision, involving as it does so many and such vast public interests, can be supported by a mere scintilla of proof, but the courts will not examine the facts further than to determine whether there was substantial evidence to sustain the order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] five minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, at the time of the passage of the act instituting the Commerce Court I was opposed to the measure then, and stated my objections to it. I am now in favor of the provision in this bill repealing or, in other words, suspending the court from existence. It means its abolishment, and very properly so.

The truth is that it was enacted and its purpose was to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has been, since it was instituted, practically an instrument to nullify the orders and decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This seems to have been its particular functions, very much to the injury of the country.

I want to call the attention of the committee to what is said in the report of the commission on that subject. Referring to pages 59 and 60 of the report I find this statement:

That out of 27 cases passed upon by the Commerce Court preliminary restraining orders or final decrees have been issued in favor of the railroads in all but 7 cases, and of these only 3 are of any magnitude.

This is a revelation, doubtless, to those who favored its organization, but the statement is true.

Now, one of the objections to this court is that it is acting in a nisi prius capacity; it is performing the functions for which the Interstate Commerce Commission was constituted to perform. In other words, that after the Interstate Commerce Commission has found the facts in a case and reported them, when application is made to the Commerce Court for an injunction or a review of the case it has again investigated the facts and not passed upon the facts as found and reported by the Interstate Commerce Commission. What it ought to do, if it was attempting to assist the people, if it was undertaking to relieve the people from the exactions of the railroad companies, the court should take the findings of fact made by the Interstate Commerce Commission as final, as any other appellate court is required to do, and render its decision upon those facts. Any other method produces necessarily conflict between these two bodies which results in confusion. But instead of that, after the Interstate Commerce Commission has taken the evidence and has made a finding upon the evidence taken and reported the facts upon which its findings are made it has only served notice under the operation of the Commerce Court for the other side to go out into the broad domain of the country and hunt up new facts in order to nullify the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It simply gives it the power, serves notice, to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission and find out the case that the Government relies upon, then go to this other court and then undertake to find the evidence to meet the case. This practice merits condemnation. It has overruled time and again the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Supreme Court has overruled it in such cases.

Now, can any man give a reason why the circuit courts as now constituted can not perform the work of the Commerce Court? It is said that this is for the relief of the shippers. Upon the contrary, so long as it has existed it has been a machine to prevent the relief to the shippers. And it has been so administered since it was first instituted. Its work has delayed rather than accelerated the relief of the people from the greed of the great transportation companies.

Of course, we are not very much surprised at that, but the very objections that some gentlemen have made to the abolition of this court, in my mind, constitute the best reason that could be given for its abolition. Instead of having two courts—the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Supreme Court of the United States—we have three courts now by which parties can delay the proceedings, and the party who has the advantage can have, as the matter now stands, much longer time to employ his advantage and exploit the people. In my judgment, it should be abolished, and by doing so the best interests of the public will be served. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was opposed to the creation of a Commerce Court, and since it has been created I have seen nothing in that court that would warrant Congress continuing it. Three reasons are advanced to-day for the creation and continuance of that court. First, it is said that the Commerce Court provides an expert court that will decide questions of commerce; second, that the questions coming before that court are such as require experts to rightly decide them, and will provide for uniformity in decisions; and, third, that it will expedite legislation.

Since the creation of the Commerce Court 66 cases have been docketed in it; in 30 cases injunctions have been asked by railroad companies, and in 22 cases injunctions have been granted, and in only 9 cases have injunctions been refused. Orders of dismissals have been entered in 20 cases.

The principal argument is that we should have a court of experts, a court of men trained in railroad law to pass upon questions decided by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Where does a lawyer become versed in railroad law? Where does he become an expert in this class of legislation? He becomes versed in railroad law and in those principles of law relating to commerce by employment as an attorney for a railroad. I know of no other way by which a lawyer, as a general rule, can become such an expert as is contemplated by those who favor the retention of this court. But is it possible that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] or any other gentleman would argue that we should pack this court by selecting only those judges from the Federal courts who have had years of training with and employment by railroad corporations? But why stop here? Why appoint only judges to this court who in practice had been employed by railroad corporations? Why not provide for the appointment of real experts? Presidents of railroad corporations obviously have a more technical knowledge of this subject than their attorneys. If this court is to be what its defenders argue for, a real expert court, then why not have it presided over by real experts or railroad presidents? How the shippers of the country would welcome such a court! It certainly must occur to the defenders of this court that they must find some more substantial reason than this for the continuance of this court. A court so constituted might be satisfactory to those who urged the creation of this court and who now demand that it be retained, but it will not be satisfactory to the shippers and to the consumers of the country.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have only two minutes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did not Judge Knapp get acquainted with railroad law as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and was not that a good education?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but the gentleman knows that the judges of the Commerce Court in the future can not be appointed from the Interstate Commerce Commission. They must be appointed from the Federal courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the question of the uniformity of decisions. Every single decision that has been rendered by the Commerce Court has been appealed from to the Supreme Court of the United States. Neither the railroad company nor the shipper seems to have taken the decisions of the court as final. There is absolutely nothing to this question of uniformity of decisions, if all of the decisions of that court are to be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States. It matters little, therefore, whether this court is a court of experts or how it is constituted or conducted, if every decision it renders is to be reviewed by a higher court. The uniformity of decisions amounts to nothing under such circumstances.

The same argument applies with equal force to the other reason given for the continuation of this court, namely, that it will expedite business. Again, if all the decisions of the Commerce Court are to be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States, instead of expediting business that court, as now constituted, delays business. The final decision of every decision coming before this court is simply delayed during the time that it takes to carry the case through the Commerce Court.

I realize that the Interstate Commerce Commission is primarily a legislative body, but in actual practice its functions are judicial. It not only prescribes rates, but it passes upon the reasonableness of rates. Its judicial functions can be given, and in my opinion ought to be given, all the power and standing of a court, so that appeals could be taken from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Supreme Court of the United States. Especially is this desirable when we consider that the Supreme Court refuses to disturb the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission on a pure question of fact. Not so with the Commerce Court, however. In creating the Commerce Court it was the intention of Congress that the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission should not be circumscribed or curtailed by the creation of the Commerce Court and that the Commerce Court should have no greater power to review questions of fact than had the Supreme Court of the United States. But no sooner had the Commerce Court been created than it assumed powers which Congress never intended to give it, to review questions of fact which had been decided by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Instead of retaining this court simply to expedite business, we could easily amend the law so that cases appealed from the Commerce Court will come within that class of cases provided for in the expedition act, or we could provide for appeals to the Supreme Court directly from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my main objection to the Commerce Court is that it will destroy the usefulness of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself. [Applause.] It is admitted on all sides that jealousies have crept in between these two great bodies. Constituted as these two tribunals are such jealousies can not be prevented, but they will increase. The Commerce Court is admirably created and constituted to involve jealousies between it and the Interstate Commerce Commission. Next to the Supreme Court of the United States, I believe that the people of the United States have faith in the decisions, in the honesty and purpose, and in the intelligence and fairness of the Interstate Commerce Commission. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman, was not that largely due to the fact that Judge Knapp was chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission for 13 years and because of his ability and honesty?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; I would not say that it is because of Judge Knapp alone, but it is because of the ability, the fairness, and honesty of all the commissioners.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. And is not he just as honest now?

Mr. GOOD. Undoubtedly; but I am not willing to vote to continue a court here that will sit and decide only cases that are decided by the Interstate Commerce Commission. These jealousies can not be removed by continuing this court. These jealousies will increase, and in the end will undermine and destroy the great Interstate Commerce Commission, in which the shippers of the United States have implicit confidence and to which they have gone in so many cases and uniformly have had the relief to which they were entitled. For these reasons I am opposed to a further retention of this court and shall vote to abolish it. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, it would be a great mistake to abolish this court, and I challenge the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in his statement, and state that the Interstate Commerce Commission has been very unfair and unjust to the railroads of this country. We need 100,000 miles more of railroads. How do we propose to build them? The Interstate Commerce Commission holds up its decisions from six to nine months. No other courts in the land withhold their decisions for such a length of time. The freight rates are continually reduced by the commission, although our freight rates are 33 per cent lower than foreign rates. If the Commerce Court is abolished, it will take months and months to obtain final judicial decisions. The Interstate Commerce Commission is not alone a detriment to this country as at present constituted, but it also injures labor, retards business, and restricts railroad construction, which we so much need. When the President of the United States suggested to the Interstate Commerce Commission to remain in this country and decide the question of increase and equalization of freight rates, the commission stated that they had already made arrangements to go abroad.

Mr. DICKINSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Would you be in favor of abolishing the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LEVY. No, sir; but I would be in favor of appointing a fair commission, not one that would be unjust and unfair to the railroads, shippers, laboring classes, and business interests of this country.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman please give one specific instance where they have been unfair to the railroads or to the people?

Mr. LEVY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would like to hear the gentleman do it.

Mr. LEVY. I am going to do so. At the time of the conference between the President of the United States, the railroad representatives, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, when the question of withdrawing the injunction against the railroads restraining them from increasing rates was discussed, the President suggested to the Interstate Commerce Commission that they promptly take up the question of freight rates. The commission stated that they had already arranged to go to Europe. A part of the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission started for Europe and left the investigation of freight rates to inspectors, who reported to the commission, thereby holding up the commission's decision for months. In the meantime the railroads increased the wages of their employees 10 per cent, with the expectancy of an early decision from the commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission has the whole country overrun with inspectors interfering with the railroad traffic of the country. The commission is the most extravagant branch of the Government, expending during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, $1,296,670.74, and for the enlightenment of the public I submit the following:

Detailed statement of expenditures of the Interstate Commerce Commission for fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

The Commerce Court is the only restraining influence upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it would be a great mistake to abolish this court. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 143 strike out all of section 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following, to be known as section 10:

"United States Commerce Court: Expense allowance for judges at rate of $1,500 per annum each, $7,500; clerk, $4,000; deputy clerk, $2,500; marshal, $3,000; deputy marshal, $2,500; for rent of necessary quarters in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and furnishing same for the United States Commerce Court; for necessary traveling expenses of the court, its officials and employees; for books, periodicals, stationery, printing, and binding; for pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees at the seat of government and elsewhere, not otherwise specifically provided for, and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $75,000; in all, $94,500.

"A detailed statement of the expenditure of the appropriations for the United States Commerce Court shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to close the debate, and I hope to have the attention of the committee for a few moments. I may not use the six minutes to which I am entitled. I want to call attention to the very frank admission of the distinguished gentleman from New York, who comes here and says that he is in favor of the abolition of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEVY. I did not. I am in favor of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SIMS. Then, to abolish its powers and usefulness.

Mr. LEVY. No, sir; but I am not in favor of the gentlemen who are there.

Mr. SIMS. Then the gentleman wants to remove the present commissioners. Now, the gentleman used this language:

I am in favor of the Commerce Court as a restraining influence over the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEVY. The present commission.

Mr. SIMS. Then the gentleman's fight is on the distinguished gentlemen who at present compose that commission?

Mr. LEVY. Mostly that; yes.

Mr. SIMS. You want the recall.

Mr. LEVY. Well, I want disinterested and capable commissioners. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I asked that we consider this measure without reference to the much-mooted question of the recall, but I could not prevent the gentleman from New York from injecting it. Now, I want to call attention to the official statement—these are not my words—as to what will be the effect on the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission if the construction of the law as held by the Commerce Court is sustained. The commission says in its annual report—the last one:

If the Commerce Court is correct in stating that where the facts are admitted it is for that court to determine whether the rate is unreasonable or the discrimination undue, then ninety-nine one hundredths of the orders of this commission can be reviewed upon the question of fact by the court.

If ninety-nine out of every one hundred orders of the commission can be reviewed upon the facts, it is an absolute substitution of the judgment of the court for that of the commission—the judgment and discretion of a judicial body for that of an expert rate-making body.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Do not you do the same thing when you send a case back to the district judges throughout the country? Do not you review the questions the same way?

Mr. SIMS. If the district judges should make such a decision as that, as a matter of course it would be the same in effect; but I am telling you, whenever you claim that this court is acting more favorably on the commission's orders than the circuit courts did before it was established, in refutation of that statement I am giving you the language of the commission itself, which is better qualified to judge of the effect of the court's decisions on its orders than anybody else. Now, what has this court done? I did not discuss this phase when I had the floor before, because I am opposed to creating a special expert court, all special courts, especially a special expert court of first instance, when in the very nature of things there can not be a special expert court of last resort. Here is what the commission says as to the decisions of the Commerce Court since its existence, or up to the date the report was filed:

As shown by the last annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, out of 27 cases passed on by the Commerce Court since its creation, February 15, 1911, to December 4, the date of said report, preliminary restraining orders or final decrees have been issued in favor of the railroads in all but 7 cases, and only 3 of the 7 were of any magnitude; and in but 3 cases of any consequence where the commission and the shippers have been opposed to the railroads have the orders of the commission been sustained, even temporarily, by the refusal to grant a temporary restraining order.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] talks about this being a good thing for the poor shippers, and then admits that not more than five cases out of every hundred are brought by shippers, rich or poor. I want to know where the poor shippers can get less comfort than out of the record of the decisions by this court in the first year of its existence?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If the Commerce Court had sustained nearly all of the orders of the commission, would the gentleman be here to-day trying to abolish that court?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; because it is a one-sided court, and can only be invoked by those who are in antagonism to the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some certain views.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Without objection, leave is granted to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], and the other gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee promised me five minutes of time, which I did not get. I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did promise him five minutes, and I forgot it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] moved to strike out a section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not here at the desk. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL].

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that section 10 be stricken out of the bill.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is not present, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to offer an amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, could we not have an agreement upon this amendment relating to the mints and assay offices, the same as upon the matter which has just been disposed of?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know what is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment before we can make any agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is correct. The gentleman from California will send his amendment to the desk and have it read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will it not be necessary, by unanimous consent, to pass over matters that are undisposed of on pages 32 and 33?

Mr. BARTLETT. What is the suggestion made by the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that these sections of the bill were passed. The gentleman in charge of the bill did not see proper to take up one of the sections passed, and therefore the Chair recognized the gentleman who had an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Naturally, I take it we went back in the beginning and took up those that were passed in order. However, I made the inquiry in order to hold the committee for a moment until the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] came in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it was in order to take up any of these sections that were passed, and as no other motion was made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to offer an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I suggest we go back to the beginning and take the paragraphs up in the regular order.

Mr. RAKER. This matter is up now, and I ask that we go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 62 of the bill, all of lines 13 to 21, inclusive.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to have the amendment stated again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, before we have the debate on that amendment, I would like to know if we can agree upon some time.

Mr. RAKER. I was going to make this suggestion: Could we not agree upon some time and discuss the entire matter, commencing at page 62, down to and including the bottom of page 64, and permit amendments to be made by the Members as they are recognized, and then at the end of that time vote upon all the amendments that have been submitted? I have a general amendment covering the whole subject, but prefer to give these other gentlemen a chance to offer amendments relating to their States. This has been understood among us who are interested.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no. I think we had better dispose of this paragraph, because this is an important paragraph in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I think there are five or six gentlemen who would like to be heard. They want to make amendments or a substitute, and we could then dispose of it all at once. I think we ought to have an hour. Could not we agree to an hour on each side, or to give us an hour and you take 30 minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The time has to be equally divided.

Mr. RAKER. Do you not think we could get through with this proposition in an hour and a half?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I think so.

Mr. RAKER. That would run us until 4 o'clock, and there are other items in the bill which must be discussed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think we could agree to an hour and a half.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to know what right the two gentlemen have to decide.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are not deciding anything. We are trying to find something on which we can agree.

Mr. GILLETT. I understood that the various persons interested in this had agreed upon a person who should represent them, and that person was not the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. You are entirely mistaken in that. My district, my people, and my State are vitally interested, and no man in this House is more interested than I. The gentlemen have agreed that I should make this motion for all the Members interested in this matter. The Chairman has recognized me to make the first motion, and that right will be used by me. I permit no man to do my duty. This is more than a local matter. The great mining interests and the miner are interested, and I shall stand for them. I am a Representative from California, and her interests I will protect.

Mr. GILLETT. I was told differently.

Mr. RAKER. You are laboring under a misunderstanding. Your informant is not talking within the facts. I have been giving this my personal attention and know. Who told you?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to voting to close debate on all amendments at a certain time, but I shall object to a division of time in reference to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. This debate will proceed by unanimous consent, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will be recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is a motion to have an hour and a half of debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. After there has been debate on the paragraph it will be in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. It has been somewhat discussed already, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman does not recognize this as a discussion on the paragraph.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], if he wants to make a motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask whether that covers amendments or not?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire that his request shall cover amendments to the paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto shall close in one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies his request. It is that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of gentlemen here who will want to offer amendments to this paragraph, and some of them have indicated that they want to have something to say in regard to their amendments. It may be that we can not all have a fair chance to be heard in one hour. I have no objection if I can offer my amendment and speak five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman's amendment to this paragraph?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It relates to coinage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not this paragraph at all.

Mr. GARNER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized and will proceed with the debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who objected?

The CHAIRMAN. A gentleman demanded the regular order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who was he? I do not think anybody demanded the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] demanded the regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to know if the amendment now pending relates to the mints and assay offices only?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my demand for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] withdraws his demand for the regular order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I make an inquiry touching the unanimous consent, whether the amendments which the gentlemen desire to offer—in the main, at least—are to this paragraph, or whether they depend upon this paragraph going out and the amendments being offered subsequently in the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My amendment applies when we reach page 64.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement before the motion is made. This paragraph on page 62, extending from line 13 to line 21, both inclusive, amends by repealing the law relating to mints and assay offices. There are eight assay offices and three mints affected. Could we not have an hour or two hours in which the proposed abolition of these mints and assay offices may be discussed in its main features? Can we not limit debate to two hours, say, and then let amendments come up upon the other matter?

Mr. GARNER. One hour is enough.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to make it 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. An hour and a half. I will consent to that. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be discussed for an hour and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean on this paragraph, or the subject matter relating to mints and assay offices?

Mr. RAKER. On the subject matter of the amendment made by me, and which is now pending, to strike out lines 13 to 21, both inclusive, page 62 of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, we can not consent to an hour on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. RAKER. Make it 1 hour and 15 minutes on this subject matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All right. Let it be 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we could proceed under the rules of the House touching five-minute debate and close the debate in less time than would be taken by an hour and a half of debate on this single paragraph.

Mr. GARNER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have not heretofore taken up any of your time upon this mint question, nor upon any other matters in this bill, so that I think I might at least have the opportunity to put the matter fairly before you. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may proceed for 15 minutes.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will be compelled to object to anybody taking more than five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the proposed amendment strikes out of the bill, page 62, lines 13 to 21, both inclusive, which read as follows:

All laws or parts of laws authorizing the establishment of coinage mints at San Francisco, Cal.; New Orleans, La.; and Carson, Nev.; and assay offices at Boise, Idaho; Charlotte, N. C.; Deadwood, S. Dak.; Helena, Mont.; Seattle, Wash.; and Salt Lake, Utah, are repealed, to take effect July 1, 1912; but nothing herein shall be construed as abolishing or prohibiting the maintenance of an assay office at San Francisco, Cal.

My first intention was to make the amendment by striking out lines 13 to 21, page 62, and inserting the provisions of the bill introduced by me on April 25, 1912, but this amendment now made will dispose of the entire question and likewise permit of amendment by including the appropriations. That bill is as follows:

Strike out all of lines 13 to 21, both inclusive, on page 62, and substitute the following:

"Mint at San Francisco, Cal.: Superintendent, $4,500; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk and cashier, at $2,500 each; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant assayer, $2,200; assistant smelter and refiner and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each; assistant cashier, $1,800; assistant bookkeeper, $1,800; assayer's assistant, $2,000; deposit weigh clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk, $1,800; 6 clerks, at $1,600 each; private secretary, $1,400; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; in all, $54,300.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $155,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs, exclusive of that required by the refinery, melter and refiner's wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps arising from the manufacture of ingots for coinage, and for wastage and loss on sale of coiners' sweeps, $40,000; in all, $249,300."

The mint at San Francisco, Cal., which this bill is seeking to abolish, was established by act of July 3, 1852. This provision in the bill amounts to a repeal of the law relating to these mints and assay offices, and in particular the San Francisco Mint.

I simply call your attention to one fact: That the mint at San Francisco cost the Government in the neighborhood of $3,130,512.15, a statement found in the Overland Monthly, bound volume 36, pages 559–578. You will find the history of it there. The corner stone was laid May 25, 1870. The building was completed in 1874. It has been running from that time to the present time, and in the last 10 years this mint has been a source of profit to the Government to the extent of $5,000,000, or in that neighborhood, according to the abstract which I present, clean-cut, above all expenses. This table I wish to insert in the RECORD.

As to the condition of the mint and the condition of its machinery at the present time, I have a telegram from Mr. Edward Sweeney, the superintendent of the mint, stating that the machinery is in splendid up-to-date condition and of the very best. I desire to insert that telegram in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 4, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Statement that San Francisco Mint is out of date and has not up-to-date machinery and facilities is absolutely untrue. Machinery for coinage, including rolls, presses, cutting machines, automatic weighing machines, reducing machine, annealing furnaces, brightening apparatus, and balances same as in other mints. Automatic weighing machines, reducing machine, brightening apparatus, and additional presses were recently installed. We have during past year made improvements on the rolls, bringing them to a standard of efficiency which it is doubtful any other rolls in the service equal. Report of the work in the coinage department last month on run of gold shows better record than made by this or any other mint of which I have knowledge. This report was forwarded to Mint Bureau May 1. New machinery has been installed as required. We have received this year brightening apparatus of latest design. Equipment here is complete; each machine electrically driven and capable of doing efficient work. As to necessity for maintaining mint, refer you to letter of Director Roberts to Assistant Secretary Andrew, dated February 21, replying to Mr. BURLESON'S inquiry at hearing upon estimates. This states necessity clearly and forcibly.

EDWARD SWEENEY,
Superintendent United States Mint.

The Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, makes in substance to me the same statement. This certainly should settle the question as to the conditions of the machinery, and so forth, and the present condition of this mint.

I also have the statement of the Director of the Mint of date February 21, 1911, which shows the necessity for the mint and shows its earnings in the preceding years to have been in the neighborhood of $360,000. I call your attention to the fact that this mint is located in the center of a great mining district—Alaska on the north and the great mining States along the coast—as well as in the direct line of importations from foreign countries. The Director of the Mint in his report says it is important that this mint should be maintained there on account of the importance of imports and exports, so as to equalize money values, and that it would be a detriment to the Government to do away with this mint. While my time is short, I desire to insert this letter in the RECORD, so that it may be read.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 21, 1911.

DEAR MR. ANDREW: Replying to Mr. BURLESON'S inquiry at your hearings upon the estimates for information as to what changes would have to be made in the estimates to provide for a discontinuance of coinage operations at the San Francisco Mint and for supplying the territory heretofore tributary to that mint from the Denver Mint, I beg to say:

I assume that the inquiry relates only to the possible discontinuance of coinage operations and that Congress will favor keeping the mint open to receive, assay, buy, and refine gold bullion, and to convert the same into bars suitable for the issue of gold certificates under the terms of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1911. The San Francisco Mint is one of the most important gold-receiving offices of the mint service, ranking second last year, with deposits of $60,596,665, while the New York assay office was first with deposits of $73,960,079.81. Both of these offices receive considerable amounts of foreign bullion and coin and are intimately related with our foreign trade. Among the receipts at San Francisco last year was over $5,000,000 in Japanese gold coin, which signifies a movement in settlement of trade balances. The cost at which gold can be moved from foreign countries to an office of the Treasury and converted into money of the United States sets a limit upon the price of exchange, and thus affects indirectly a much larger volume of trade than is affected directly. When the future possibilities of trade upon the Pacific coast is considered, it seems evident that there should always be an office of the Treasury on the Pacific coast where foreign gold can be received at its assay value.

In this connection it should be remembered that all of the cost of refining or in any way preparing gold bullion for coinage or bars is deducted from the value of the bullion when it is purchased, and that the estimates for the support of the mints for the next fiscal year take no account of the mint charges for refining bullion, which will be turned into the general fund of the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The income from bullion deposited at the San Francisco Mint in 1911 was $65,003.30.

The estimates for the San Francisco Mint for the fiscal year 1913 provide for the maintenance of all departments, but with gold coinage on a reduced scale, as contemplated by the act of March 2, 1911. The total amount estimated for the coining department in "Wages of workmen" is $26,000, all of which may be eliminated if no coinage is to be done. An amount estimated by the bureau at $7,000 may also be taken from "Wages of workmen" on account of other departments, making a total reduction of $33,000 in this fund. In the salary list the superintendent of the coining department, at $2,500, and one clerk, at $1,600, may be dropped. The appropriation for contingent expenses may be reduced by $5,000. In all, the estimates for the San Francisco Mint may be reduced $42,000 by suspending coinage operations at that institution.

If, however, the Denver Mint is to supply the silver, nickel, and bronze coinage which in the estimates were allotted to the San Francisco Mint it will be necessary to considerably increase the estimates for the former institution. It is now working with a well-balanced force up to the limit of its capacity for the number of employees, and can not handle more coinage than has already been allotted to it without increasing its force and its expenditures for supplies. It will be observed that of the reductions which may be made at San Francisco only the superintendent of the coining department, a clerk, and possibly one or two foremen belong to the overhead expenditures. All of the rest is for wages of workmen and supplies and can not be reduced without reducing the total coinage of all the mints in a corresponding degree. In other words, there is little to be saved in merely shifting the coinage from San Francisco to Denver, so long as the main organization at San Francisco must be maintained. We must keep the superintendent and the entire force for receiving, melting, assaying, refining, and safeguarding the bullion, including the bookkeeping and clerical force and the care of the building.

The amount of silver, nickel, and bronze coinage contemplated for the San Francisco Mint would not, however, fully occupy the coining department, and possibly would not take more than half its time. It was planned to reduce the force in this department to the lowest effective basis and have it do as much gold coinage as possible, in addition to the small coins. In this connection I think the committee's attention should be directed to the fact that the act of March 2, 1911, does not contemplate a complete suspension of gold coinage. It merely authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to issue gold certificates against deposits of gold bullion and foreign gold coin, expressly providing that the amount of gold bullion and foreign gold coin so held "shall not at any time exceed one-third of the total amount of gold certificates at such time outstanding."

On the first day of the current month the total amount of gold certificates outstanding was $1,035,612,369, of which, under the terms of the act, $345,204,123 might be in bullion and foreign gold coin, while all of the rest must be in United States gold coin. The reserve at that date consisted of $935,173,533 in United States coin and $100,438,836 in bullion. It is therefore possible and also desirable to increase the stock of bullion, but as the deposits of gold bullion at all offices of the service during the last fiscal year amounted to $175,383,090.44, it evidently will not be possible to completely suspend the coinage of gold for many years unless a further change in the statutes is made. This is the vital fact to be considered in connection with the proposal to close the coining department of the San Francisco Mint. If the coinage of gold is to be resumed within a comparatively short time, there is no advantage in temporarily closing the coining department of that institution. It may as well continue to do a moderate amount of gold coinage from year to year.

If, however, Congress should decide upon this policy, it is estimated that $18,000 should be added to the "wages of workmen" fund of the Denver Mint, one clerk, at $1,600 a year, to the salary list, and that $2,500 be added to the contingent fund. The difference between these additions to the Denver estimates and the subtraction from the San Francisco estimates would represent the expenditures upon gold coinage if operations were continued at San Francisco.

There are still other features of the case to be considered, to wit:

First. The San Francisco Mint does a considerable amount of coinage for the Philippine Islands. It is now a diminishing quantity, but for the last fiscal year the charges collected amounted to $20,962.40. At the existing express rate on coin from Denver to San Francisco the charges on these coins, if shipped by express from Denver to San Francisco, would have been $7,977.25. While this additional expense would not come out of the United States Treasury, it is entitled to consideration. The Philippine Government would probably find it advantageous to have its coinage done at a foreign mint rather than pay the high inland transportation charges.

The San Francisco Mint was also in receipt last year of $5,111.08 for coinage done for Salvador, which might not have been done in this country if inland transportation charges were added to the cost. The total earnings of the San Francisco Mint last year for coinage done for other countries were $26,073.48.

Second. The average annual coinage of the San Francisco Mint in subsidiary silver coin for the last 10 years has been a little above $1,000,000, all of which has gone into circulation upon the Pacific coast and indicates about the absorption of that region. The cost of transporting $1,000,000 in subsidiary silver coin from the Denver Mint to the San Francisco Subtreasury at the existing express rate would be $9,000. These charges are paid from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Independent Treasury, and as the estimates for that appropriation were made without contemplating this item, they should be correspondingly increased if the expenditure is to be incurred.

The amount of nickels and bronze cents used on the Pacific coast has in former years been small, but is rapidly increasing. For the last fiscal year the amount of these coins which was delivered at the San Francisco Subtreasury for distribution on the coast if shipped from Denver would have involved express charges aggregating $5,583.50. Altogether the express charges from Denver to San Francisco on last year's coinage for the Philippines and for small coins for the Pacific coast would have amounted to $22,560.75. These computations are made at existing rates. It is probable that some reduction could be obtained upon them if the Treasury was ready to enter into a contract for the carriage of considerable sums over a period of time. It is also to be considered, on the other hand, that the absorption of the small coins on the Pacific coast is likely within a few years to largely exceed the average for the last 10 years.

Finally, it is to be considered that if the coining department is shut down the machinery is likely to deteriorate, and of course the organization of skilled workmen must go. With a full desire to cooperate with the committee in all efforts to eliminate unnecessary expenditures, I am moved to urge that no action be taken in haste that will impose great hardship upon a force of trustworthy and deserving employees. Most of these men have spent years in acquiring skill which makes them valuable to the Government, but the trade is not one in which they can find employment elsewhere, and even if no consideration be given to employees who have handled billions of dollars' worth of treasure with scrupulous fidelity, it will not pay as a matter of common business policy to close the coining department temporarily and scatter a force of men whose integrity and skill have been tested only to reopen it in a short time. Men are not trained for this work anywhere but in the mint service.

The policy of the service has been planned with a view to economy on a permanent basis. The discontinuance of assay offices has been recommended on the ground that there is no longer the occasion for them that originally existed. Changes have been recommended in the mint organizations simplifying them and effecting greater flexibility in the working force. The number of mints has been reduced to three—two of which are conveniently located to receive bullion direct from producers. The Philadelphia Mint, although not directly related to any bullion-producing district, is well located for the manufacture and distribution of the subsidiary and minor coins. The New York Assay Office will receive the gold bullion coming into the country on the Atlantic coast and convert it into bars. It is the policy of the Treasury to fill orders for coin from whichever mint they can be shipped at the lowest transportation charge, whether the charge is paid by the Treasury or consignee. This gives the bulk of the small coinage to the Philadelphia Mint, but an important share goes to the Denver Mint. The San Francisco Mint has a much smaller tributary population, but it is so important an institution in gold receipts and in probable relation to foreign trade with that coast that the bureau has never contemplated closing it and can see no economy in closing one department. With continually increasing demands tributary to it we might expect that there would be constant agitation to resume coinage operations, and that this would eventually be done. In that case nothing would have been gained by the suspension and grave and unnecessary injury would have been done to the employees.

This letter has gone into details in order that the committee may be fully informed as to all the facts which have influenced the policy of the department in making up the estimates.

Respectfully, GEORGE E. ROBERTS,
Director of the Mint.

I want to call your attention to page 15 of the report of the Director of the Mint, showing that there was coined in San Francisco in 1911 $59,797,120. The entire coinage in the San Francisco Mint since it was established in 1854 has been $1,834,172,558.65. From 1793 down to the present time the mint at Philadelphia has only coined $1,893,825,275.64, an excess of only $59,652,716.99 over the San Francisco Mint, although it has been in existence 61 years longer. The mint at New Orleans from 1838 to 1909 has coined $298,660,707.60. The mint at Denver since its organization in February, 1906, to December 31, 1910, has coined $151,408,500.

Now, with a coinage of over $1,800,000,000 since it was started, with a profit of nearly $5,000,000 to this country in 10 years—1902–1911—with the magnificent building in proper condition, with the machinery latest improved and up to date, I say this mint should be retained. This is the largest mint in the world, as well as being ideally located on the Bay of San Francisco, accessible to all the great mining country. This building stood the earthquake and fire at San Francisco when all the other buildings within the fire limits were either injured or destroyed. This House should not do what the great earthquake and fire of 1906 could and did not do. It would be a legislative crime. This building alone stood the ravages of the fire and the earthquake.

In view of all these facts I ask you, Is it not right and proper that this mint should be retained at this place?

In regard to the necessity for the mint, I desire to call attention to a few statements. First, it is in the center of the great mining district of the Pacific coast; second, it is available to the Alaskan gold fields; third, it is in direct communication with the Orient; fourth, for many other reasons it should not be abolished; fifth, the employees who are faithful and true should not be thrown out after many years of service. It is an historic building. Massive and grand. Built of granite and sandstone. The native sons and daughters implore you not to destroy it. The entire mining population of the Pacific slope join in this request by letters, telegrams, resolutions, as well as personally. In fact there is a universal demand for the retention of this "landmark." The largest mint in the world. Up to date in all respects, and absolutely necessary from every point of view. It is not in the line of economy, but would be extravagance and destruction of property and a material loss to this Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman that we have been notified that the House will stay in session until this bill is passed to-day, and there are a lot of other controverted items in the bill which I think ought to have some hearing. For that reason, I give notice now that I shall object to extensions of time, and I do object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the pending motion the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from California the following, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, commencing at line 13, insert:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,250; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,000; in all, $6,350.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $6,200.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $3,000.

"Mint at New Orleans, La.: Assayer, who shall have general charge of the institution as under section 3560, Revised Statutes, and who shall be a practical assayer, $2,500; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, who shall perform the duties of cashier, $1,500; 3 clerks, $1,200 each; assayer's assistant, $1,200; in all, $10,300.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $7,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $3,500.

"Mint at San Francisco, Cal.: Superintendent, $4,500; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, and cashier, at $2,500 each; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant assayer, $2,200; assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each; assistant cashier, $1,800; assistant bookkeeper, $1,800; assayer's assistant, $2,000; deposit weigh clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk, $1,800; 6 clerks, at $1,600 each; private secretary, $1,400; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; in all, $54,300.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $155,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs, exclusive of that required for the refinery, melter and refiners' wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps, arising from the manufacture of ingots for coinage, and for wastage and loss on sale of coiners' sweeps, $40,000.

"Assay office at Boise, Idaho: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,250; assistant assayer, $1,600; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,500; assayer's assistant, $1,500; 1 clerk, $1,200; in all, $8,050.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $3,540.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,500.

"Assay office at Charlotte, N. C.: Assayer and melter, $1,400.

"For wages of workmen and other clerks and employees, $750.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $400.

"Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; clerk, $1,200; assistant assayer, $1,600; assayer's assistant, $1,400; in all, $6,200.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,300.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, new machinery, etc., $1,500.

"Assay office at Helena, Mont.: Assayer in charge, $2,500; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,400; assistant assayer, $1,700; assayer's assistant, $1,400; in all, $10,400.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $6,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $3,250.

"Assay office at Seattle, Wash.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,750; assistant assayer, $2,000; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $2,000; 1 clerk, $1,700; 2 clerks, at $1,600 each; clerk, $1,400; in all, $13,050.

"For wages for workmen and other employees, $22,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, including rent of building, $6,500.

"Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,500; assistant assayer, $1,600; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,600: Provided, That the chief clerk shall perform the duties of assayer in charge in his absence; clerk, $1,400; in all, $7,100.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $4,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $3,500."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of offering this amendment is so that the whole matter may be brought before the House at one time. It includes the existing law in reference to these assay offices and mints that have not been appropriated for in the pending bill. The adoption of this amendment will restore all these and give each the appropriation it has in the present law.

I understand that the committee in refusing to make appropriations for these offices have done so upon the ground of economy. I want to call the attention of the committee first to this fact, that these seven assay offices that it is proposed to abolish cost about $100,000 a year, while it costs over $610,000 a year to maintain the mints that are left in the bill. The mint at Philadelphia alone last year cost over $400,000 more than it repaid to the Government. If the committee wants economy, there is the place to go, and not to these assay offices. Under the law passed at the last session of Congress we no longer have to coin all our gold, and the necessity for the mints has largely disappeared, for now gold certificates are issued upon gold bullion. Why not abolish the costly, unnecessary mint and keep the cheap and necessary assay office?

I will speak of the assay office at Seattle and leave other gentleman to speak of other offices. It cost the Government $19,000 last year over and above expenses to conduct the assay of about $12,000,000 worth of gold. It costs $1.25 per thousand to refine this gold at Seattle. It is proposed to take this gold to San Francisco and refine it for nothing, thereby bringing about a great saving to the Government. Just how the committee and the Director of the Mint can figure out how they can save money by doing for nothing at San Francisco what they charge for doing at Seattle is beyond the comprehension of the ordinary mind. There may be reasons for making this change, but economy is not one of them. The office at Seattle was established for the people of Alaska. It was found that this was a more convenient location for the gold of Alaska than if the office was placed in that Territory. If you abolish that office all the gold that comes out of Alaska is compelled to go a thousand miles farther to San Francisco. It must be remembered that all Alaskan gold passes through Seattle. There are no regular lines of steamships running to Alaska from this country except from Puget Sound. Why, then, should not this gold be refined in Seattle, where all of it must come before it can go elsewhere? A new assay office has been established at Vancouver, British Columbia, and if the office at Seattle is abolished it will send much of the gold of Alaska into that country. Since the office at Seattle was established it has received over $200,000,000 in gold. If you abolish that office, within the next 10 years we will probably turn $200,000,000 of Alaskan gold into British Columbia. Can we for the paltry sum of $19,000 per year afford to do this? The Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, meets that statement, as I understand, with the assertion that it does not matter, that the money will get to New York anyway.

In this statement he reveals the real reason for wanting to abolish these western offices. He wants to concentrate the gold of this country in New York. If this is a good thing for the country, why does not the director say so, and not pretend that it is economy that influences him in asking the destruction of these offices? Who is benefited by sending Alaska gold to the assay office at San Francisco? The Wells, Fargo Co. carries the gold from Alaska to San Francisco, and the Selby Smelting Co. refines the most of it after it gets there. Then the Wells, Fargo Co. carries it back to Seattle or to Denver. The express company and the refining company are all one and the same company. They are all included in what is known as the Guggenheim interests, and I do not say that in a prejudiced or antagonistic spirit. I simply state the fact. And these interests are the only ones on the Pacific coast that will benefit by the abolition of the assay office at Seattle.

Its destruction will not decrease the expenditures of the Government. It will injure the gold producer of Alaska. It will tend to send the money to Vancouver. It will injure the business interests of the great Northwest. This Nation ought not to throw its influence against the Northwest States in this manner and in favor of British Columbia, and I do not believe that Congress will do it.

I trust that the motion I have submitted as a substitute will prevail, because it will be a futile thing for the House to refuse to appropriate for these offices. We may strike it out here. It will go to the other end of the Capitol and there be reinserted. Some Members here may be able to make a little political capital for themselves, but it will be at the expense of some of the other Members of the House. I do not think that anyone doubts that as the bill is finally passed these offices will be restored. Then why not do it here instead of in the Senate?

All this supposed showing that abolishing these offices is in the interest of economy is simply one of bookkeeping and not of fact. This Government can not save money by doing at the mints for nothing what it compels the gold producer to pay for having done at the assay offices. The object in abolishing the assay offices is not one of economy, but to concentrate the gold of this country at certain points in favor of certain interests. This may be a good thing, but if so, the department has not shown it. Let the Director of the Mint give to us his real reason instead of coming here with his pretense of economy.

As it is impossible in five minutes to go thoroughly into the discussion of this matter, I will insert some editorials, resolutions, and other communications I have received that will show the attitude of the commercial bodies, the press, and the people upon the subject.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of Apr. 25 last.]

SAVE THE ASSAY OFFICE.

Seattle should awake to the importance of holding the assay office here. It is of importance not alone to Seattle, but to the Pacific coast and the intermountain section. A majority of the House Appropriations Committee favors the abolition of the office, and if money for its support be not forthcoming it will cease to exist at the close of the fiscal year, June 30.

Canada supports an assay office at Vancouver, and the twenty-odd millions of gold now coming here for refining purposes would be diverted to that port and into private channels.

A pending proposition to abolish the San Francisco Mint indicates a disposition at Washington to remove every agency on this coast for the deposit of bullion.

Seattle was chosen as the site of an assay office in 1898 because of its situation as the supply point of the Alaskan gold fields, and the logic prevailing then is all the stronger now. But a Democratic Congress, practicing much short-sighted economy as the campaign approaches, is not likely to see the folly of the action affecting this territory unless Seattle and the entire coast enter a prompt and emphatic protest, based upon the facts and demands of the situation.

The chamber of commerce presents the case convincingly in a statement printed to-day, and the advice of President Lowman should be acted upon promptly and vigorously.

[Editorial from the Seattle Daily Times, May 3, 1912.]

"PENNY WISDOM" AND THE ASSAY OFFICE.

Congress, in its wave of economy, has shown itself to be decidedly penny-wise. The Committee on Appropriations seeks at one fell swoop to abolish the mints at San Francisco, Carson, and New Orleans, likewise to destroy the assay offices at Seattle, Boise, Helena, Deadwood, Salt Lake, and Charlotte, N. C.; to disable permanently the newly created Commerce Court; to reduce the salary of the Secretary of the President from $7,500 to $6,000 a year; and to discontinue the Bureau of Manufactures in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

If there could be the slightest excuse for killing the Seattle assay office, the committee has failed to give it. Instead it has admitted the need for retaining this most useful and valuable adjunct of the Government service.

The admission comes about in a peculiar way. It will be noted that the committee has leveled one of its deadly shafts at the San Francisco mint, and it would seem that by way of reimbursement to the Golden Gate for that injury the committee would have an assay office established there.

So! Then there is necessity for an assay office on the Pacific coast. Every coast man familiar in the least degree with the never-ceasing influx of gold from the mines of the North recognizes that need, and, further, everybody knows that Seattle, the point of arrival and departure of ships in the Alaska trade, is the place where the gold comes.

Hence it is incontestable that Seattle is the logical location for the assay office. Why destroy the institution here in order to establish another in San Francisco? The entire suggestion smacks of a rank political deal in which Seattle is to be plundered in order partially to appease San Francisco for the loss of the mint.

The warfare on the Seattle assay office has continued for months. At first it took the form of prohibitive charges, and now the mask has been torn aside and the true character of the assault disclosed. Seattle is to be robbed in order that San Francisco may be pacified—that is, if Seattle will sit idly by and permit it.

But Seattle will do nothing of the kind. Congress has admitted that an assay office is a necessity. Then why plunder this city? Why rob Peter to pay Paul?

In rebuking the stupid "economy" that would do this thing, and also let the Commerce Court die from lack of funds, Seattle ought also to take notice of the clear intent to embarrass and cripple the Department of Commerce and Labor by withholding the appropriation for the Bureau of Manufactures.

This is the bureau under which Mr. Lovett M. Wood, of Seattle, has done remarkably good work in his tour of the Orient. Other commissioners have been laboring in other parts of the world, all of them intent on an intelligent expansion of American trade. To destroy this branch of the service is worse than idiotic, it is a form of commercial suicide.

There are strange things in Washington, D. C. Two instances are those just cited—the bare-faced attempt to remove the Seattle assay office to San Francisco and the indifference to the needs of a growing commerce. In each case the follies of Congress are striking a hard blow at Seattle.

Prompt work is necessary. Congress ought to be brought to its senses at once.

[From the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, May 3, 1912.]

KILLING THE ASSAY OFFICE.

The people of this State of Washington, and more particularly the people of Seattle, can arrive at a fair understanding of what Democratic success in the national election next fall would mean to them by considering the action of the Democratic House in seeking to deprive Seattle of its assay office through the expedient of omitting all appropriations for that office from the bill as it passed the House. There is a bare chance that the provision may be restored in the Senate. But it must be remembered that in the Senate there are a considerable number of the so-called progressives who act usually with the Democrats. If the Senate were safely Republican, the provision might be restored. There is only a chance for it now. That chance, of course, can be improved if every friend of Seattle exerts all of the influence which he can command to secure a retention of the provision.

The Democrats are playing politics. They are trying to make a record for economy. They will not follow the pathway pointed out by President Taft through which there could be a permanent reduction of some $12,000,000 a year in the expenditures of the departments at Washington. They prefer such economies as cutting off the appropriation for the support of the efficiency commission which has shown the way through which millions could be saved.

They prefer also such "economies" as cutting off the appropriations for the Seattle assay office through which some thousands of dollars can be saved to the Federal Treasury to the damage of Seattle in hundreds of thousands of dollars and to the laying of heavy additional costs upon the miners of Alaska in selling their gold.

And if the Democrats should control both Houses of Congress and the Presidency more "economies" may be expected such as this one and the further economy of cutting down the appropriations for the protection of the Government forests in this State from fire which has been put into effect.

MINING MEN'S CLUB,
Spokane, Wash., May 4, 1912.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Herewith please find certified copy of resolution which was unanimously adopted at meeting of the Mining Men's Club, protesting against the closing of western mints and assay offices. Your assistance in defeating such a measure will be highly appreciated by the Spokane Mining Men's Club and all western mining sections.

Yours, very truly,

W. W. GIFFORD, Secretary.

Attention of the Spokane Mining Men's Club being called to the recommendation of the Congressional House Committee on Appropriations as reported by the Associated Press May 1-2, 1912, in which it was recommended to abolish the mints at San Francisco, New Orleans, and Carson City, and the assay offices at Boise, Charlotte, Deadwood, Helena, Seattle, and Salt Lake City, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas the closing of the mints and assay offices as recommended by the Congressional House Committee on Appropriations of the present Congress will drive the products of the mines to the East for refining and manufacture, will reduce the margin of profit to the producer, discourage manufacture in the West, curtail the use of silver as money, prevent the operation of mines where the margin of profit is already small, discourage the prospector and miner, reduce the mineral production thereby and prevent the extraction of much of the low-grade ore which will become a total loss to the Nation, demoralize western industry and activity, and unfairly discriminate against the West:

Resolved, That the members of this club are opposed to the suggested legislation as to mints and assay offices, and hereby urge the Members of both Houses of Congress to carefully analyze the proposed measure and oppose it in fairness to those sections of the country to be affected and upon the broader principle that it will prove harmful to the Nation.

Adopted by the Mining Men's Club at Spokane, Wash., May 2, 1912.

L. K. ARMSTRONG, President.

JUNE 27, 1911.

Hon. FRANKLIN MACVEAGH,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have been informed that you have directed that the charges at the assay office over and above the mint charges be increased from one-eighth to one-fourth of 1 per cent. It is my understanding that this is done under the authority conferred by section 3524 of the act of June 22, 1874. It appears that this doubling of the charges was made so as to compel Seattle to comply with the provisions of the statute as you interpret it. But it is significant that no attempt is made to compel the other offices to comply with your interpretation of the law. In other words, you propose to compel the Seattle office to bear the expense made necessary by such office, but you intend that the Government shall bear a portion of the expenses made by the other offices in the country.

It seems to me that you penalize the Seattle office because it has done well. You reverse the rule of Holy Writ, and say substantially to the good and faithful servant that "I will take from you the 10 talents and give them to the wicked and slothful servant that has the 1 talent." Seattle is the only office that has ever paid its own expenses, at least of recent years, and now, because it has fallen below this amount, you propose to increase the cost; but why did you not apply this rule to other offices heretofore? A glance at your report will show that it costs less now, and has always cost less, at the assay office in Seattle than at any other in the United States. You either have or have not some discretion in the fixing of these charges. If you have any discretion, why should you place an additional burden upon the Seattle office, when it has always come nearer paying its expenses than any other?

This additional burden means in reality an additional hardship upon the Alaska miner, who will now be compelled after reaching the United States to travel a thousand miles, pay this additional penalty, or sell his gold in a foreign country.

Your attitude, I suggest in all courtesy, is not just, nor do I believe that it is legal. If you feel that the statute must be complied with, then I insist that it shall be enforced against each of the offices and not against Seattle alone. The wording of the statute is "The actual average cost of each mint and assay office" shall be charged against such office and not the average cost of all the offices combined. For illustration, why should the Government pay nine-tenths of the cost of maintaining the office at Charlotte, N. C., and then insist that it would pay no part of the cost of conducting the office at Seattle? I again insist that such discrimination is entirely unwarranted either by the facts or by the law. It does seem to me that it is especially inopportune that this action should be taken just at this time when the people of Alaska, by the stupidity of Congress, the neglect and failure of the departments, and the attitude of the Executive, have already sufficient reason to feel that they have been most grievously treated and neglected.

This order should be vacated; but if you insist on enforcing the law, then I insist that it be enforced without favor and that each office be compelled to bear its own expenses. The ruling that you have made is so unfair to the Seattle office and, in my judgment, so unwarranted under the law that if it is adhered to, much as I should regret it, especially in this time of general distrust and hysteria, I shall feel compelled to introduce in Congress a resolution of inquiry asking as to the reasons for such ruling.

Sincerely, yours,

W. E. HUMPHREY,
Member of Congress.

SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Seattle, Wash., July 7, 1911.

Hon. WILL E. HUMPHREY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HUMPHREY: Referring to telegraphic correspondence regarding the increased charges at the Seattle assay office, I am attaching herewith for your information memorandum that was presented by the officers of the chamber before the conference committee of various organizations called to consider the situation. This probably will contain some exact data and details which you may not have already in your posesssion.

Yours, very truly,

C. B. YANDELL, Secretary.

The increase of the minor assay charge from one-eighth to one-fourth of 1 per cent will put the Seattle assay office out of existence. Seattle has found it hard to compete with San Francisco at the differential charge of one-eighth of 1 per cent, which, with changing conditions, such as shipments of bullion by registered mail from Alaska at same rate to either Seattle or San Francisco has gradually diverted more and more of Alaska gold from Seattle to San Francisco. The express rate from Fairbanks to Seattle is $5 per thousand and $5.50 to San Francisco, 50 cents difference, which leaves $2 in favor of San Francisco on express shipments from Fairbanks. The local express rate, Seattle to San Francisco, is $1.50 per thousand; even the local bullion can be sent to San Francisco at a profit to the owner.

It is the desire of the Director of the Mint that all minor assay offices be made self-sustaining, if possible, and for that reason the assay office charge is increased to one-fourth of 1 per cent. If the office could retain its present share of the Alaska output of gold it would be just about self-supporting, and would return to the Government Treasury in charges collected an amount about the same as appropriated yearly by Congress for its maintenance; but as shown above, the increase in charges will not increase the earnings, but will decrease the receipts; in fact, the increased differential charge will prove so great a handicap that there will remain no occasion for the maintenance of an office in Seattle.

The effect on Seattle, if the assay office closed and the Alaska gold goes to San Francisco, will be that the northern trade and banking business will go with it, or the Alaska miner pays an added tax to get the proceeds of his gold from San Francisco to Seattle, a charge on San Francisco exchange.

The position of the Seattle office is different from the other assay offices; they afford the miner the means of disposing of his gold only; while it also performs the same duty, it also gives him credit where he needs it, where he purchases his supplies.

San Francisco can fulfill the same duties for the Alaska miner, but it is burdening him with an additional 800 miles of transportation on supplies.

If it is the intention to view the operations of minor assay offices not from the standpoint of convenience or stimulus to an industry such as postal service which treats all sections of the country alike regardless of differences in cost of operations in the various localities, nor in the nature of a tariff imposed on the people at large to protect and foster some particular industry, but from a strictly business standpoint of self-support, then it should be extended throughout the whole mint service.

Reviewing the report for the fiscal year, 1910, issued by the Director of the Mint, I notice that neither the New York assay office nor any of the mints are self-supporting, and all operated at a loss, and find that during the year the New York office received fifty-eight and a half millions in bullion its expenditures were $139,000, earnings $49,000, net cost to Government to operate $90,000; the Philadelphia Mint received twenty-four millions in bullion, including twenty millions from Government assay offices; its expenditures were $594,000, earnings $3,756,000; included in these earnings are $3,575,000 seigniorage on subsidiary and minor coins, leaving an actual operating earning of $281,000; a loss to the Government of $313,000 exclusive of profits by seigniorage.

The San Francisco Mint received forty-two and one-half millions in bullion, seven and one-half millions of same coming from Government assay offices; its expenditures were $364,000, and earnings, including $781,000 seigniorage on subsidiary and minor coins, was $917,000; exclusive of the seigniorage the actual operating earnings were $136,000, showing a loss to the Government in operations of $228,000, exclusive of gains on seigniorage.

The Denver Mint received twenty-two million in bullion during the year, including seven and one-half million from Government assay offices; the expenditures were $181,000; the earnings, including $25,000 seigniorage on subsidiary coins, was $99,000; exclusive of seigniorage the actual operating earnings were $74,000, showing a loss to the Government in operations of $107,000 exclusive of gains by seigniorage.

The Seattle office during the year received $12,000,000 in bullion; expended $42,000 and earned $19,000, showing a loss in operations of $23,000. The assay office charge of one-eighth of 1 per cent imposed at Seattle, in addition to the regular mint charges, has always been regarded as a transportation charge to offset the cost of subsequent transportation of bullion from the assay office to the mint for coinage.

At the last session of Congress an act was passed removing the necessity to coin all bullion and foreign gold coin purchased at the various mints and assay offices. The removal of the necessity to coin bullion consequently removes the necessity of sending bullion from the assay office at Seattle to the mint at Denver or San Francisco for coinage, at least for a long time to come, as per the director's report it is shown that there are one and one-half billions of gold coin in the country now—nine hundred and forty millions in the United States Treasury, two hundred and twenty-two millions in national banks, and balance in other banks and in circulation. The gold might just as well be stored in Seattle as San Francisco, Seattle being nearer to its source, and the present differential charge removed.

The retention of the bullion at Seattle and New York assay offices, instead of shipping to the mints as heretofore, as was necessary to be coined in accordance with coinage laws, would effect both a saving in transportation charges to the Government and also reduce the expenses of operations at mints to which same has heretofore been sent. You will notice that, included in receipts of mints mentioned in the foregoing, thirty-five millions was bullion sent to them after being operated on by an assay office; the bulk of this amount came from New York and Seattle—about twenty-eight millions of it.

In event of future transfers of gold by the Government from one institution to another, it can be done as cheaply from Seattle as from San Francisco. In view of the recent act of Congress referred to above, which permits of curtailment in gold coinage, and for the reasons already stated, the Seattle office should be raised to the same classification as that at New York by removing the minor assay-office charge of one-eighth of 1 per cent or one-fourth of 1 per cent, and, if the Government desires the bullion stored at Seattle to be in the shape of fine bars as a medium of exchange rather than in unparted bars, as at present, this can be accomplished by adding a refinery to the present plant.

Charges imposed at mints and assay offices are fixed from time to time by the Director of the Mint, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided by section 3524 of the Revised Statutes.

This agitation for a mint should be stopped at once, as it only weakens our position and jeopardizes our chances of getting anything at all. If anything is to be asked for in addition to present plant, ask for a refinery; that would give Seattle an institution similar to New York. An additional mint is unnecessary, for the following reasons: The country already has enough mints to coin all the bullion that will be presented for purchase; the recent act of Congress, already referred to, permits of coinage only when necessary. As above stated, there is one and one-half billions of gold coin in the country; above one billion of this is in Government Treasury, a quarter billion in national banks, and the balance in other banks and in circulation. Comparing the amount in circulation with that in national banks and United States Treasury, it will be seen that further coinage of gold coin will not be necessary for a long time. Then the demand for paper money is increasing, which means less coin for circulation. It would seem that eventually the Government will become the depository of the Nation's metallic wealth, using gold certificates against it instead of gold coin. All this tends to curtail operations at Government institutions as to gold coin; subsidiary and minor coin, medals, etc., will continue to be made, but fine gold bars will take the place of gold coin as a medium of exchange. Fine gold bars are manufactured in a refinery, as at New York, and it is not necessary to have the full mint equipment to make same.

Assay office at Carson	$15,550
Assay office at Salt Lake	15,100
Assay office at Boise	14,090
Assay office at Deadwood	10,000
Assay office at Charlotte, N. C	2,900
Total for mints and assay offices	1,093,840
Bureau of the Mint	34,280
Transportation charges on bullion and coin between mints and assay offices	50,000
Total for mint service	1,178,120

It does not cost the Government the full amount appropriated to maintain the mint service, as there is a material refund to the Treasury by the earnings of the various institutions.

Reference to the following table will show that the institution maintained at the greatest net cost to the Government is the mint at Philadelphia.

Operations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910 (last report received).

PHILADELPHIA MINT.

Received twenty-four millions of gold bullion; twenty millions of this amount came from United States assay offices.

Expenditures		$594,000
Earnings	$3,756,000
Seignorage, included in above	3,575,000
Actual earnings		181,000
Net cost to Government		$413,000

SAN FRANCISCO MINT.

Received forty-two and one-half millions in bullion, seven and one-half millions of this coming from United States assay offices.

Expenditures		$364,000
Earnings	$917,000
Seignorage, included in above	781,000
Actual earnings		136,000
Net cost to Government		228,000

DENVER MINT.

Received twenty-two millions in bullion, seven and one-half millions of this coming from United States assay offices.

Expenditures		$181,000
Earnings	$99,000
Seignorage, included in above	25,000
Net earnings		74,000
Net cost to Government		107,000

NEW YORK ASSAY OFFICE.

Received fifty-eight and one-half millions of bullion.

Expenditures		$139,000
Earnings	49,000
Net cost to Government		90,000

SEATTLE ASSAY OFFICE.

Received twelve millions in bullion.

Expenditures		$42,000
Earnings	19,000
Net cost to Government		23,000
Actual cost for maintenance		861,000

The mint at San Francisco is located in a mining district, and during the fiscal year 1910 received $35,000,000 in gold bullion from producers, as already shown. The mint at Denver is also located in a mining district, and during the year 1910 received $14,500,000 in gold bullion from producers. The mint at Philadelphia is not located in a mining district, and during the same period received only $4,000,000 in gold bullion in original deposits. The mints at San Francisco and Denver afford producers a means of disposing of their product and receiving quick returns, a very necessary thing when proceeds are required for pay rolls, etc.

The Philadelphia Mint does not help the mining industry, is only eighty-odd miles from New York Assay Office, which meets the eastern needs, and the cost for its maintenance, $400,000 annually, equals the combined cost of maintaining the mints at San Francisco and Denver and the assay office at New York. The eight assay offices that it is proposed to discontinue afford the same privileges and meet the needs of the mining industry in their respective zones, as do the mints at San Francisco and Denver. The net cost to the Government to maintain these eight assay offices, which it is desired to discontinue, is slightly in excess of $100,000 per annum, one-fourth the cost to maintain the Philadelphia Mint.

The principal gold-producing districts in this country are California, Colorado, Alaska, and Nevada. The first three produce about $20,000,000 each annually in gold and Nevada about $15,000,000. The other gold-producing sections of importance are South Dakota, Utah, Montana, Arizona, and Idaho, in the order named, varying from one and a half to six million dollars in gold annually. These, at present, are all provided with Government institutions for the purchase of their gold output except Arizona. The product of Arizona is of a character such as requires custom smelter and refinery treatment for extraction before it is suitable for purchase by the Government, so that an assay office is not necessary.

California has a purchasing institution in the mint at San Francisco; Colorado a mint at Denver; Nevada an assay office at Carson; South Dakota, assay office at Deadwood; Utah, assay office at Salt Lake City; Montana, assay office at Helena; Idaho, assay office at Boise; and Alaska, assay office at Seattle. Owing to the widely separated mining districts in Alaska it was impossible to locate a Government assay office for the purchase of gold in Alaska, and as Seattle is the natural supply point for Alaska and therefore the place where the credits for proceeds of bullion shipments are required for payment for its supplies, that point was naturally selected for an assay office site as the most advantageous for Alaska needs. Even with the assay office at Seattle, the Alaska gold has not been marketed as cheaply as elsewhere, for ever since the installation of the Seattle office the Government has imposed there an extra charge of $1.25 per thousand dollars on bullion purchases, which is not imposed at any United States mint, nor at the New York Assay Office. This, with large express charges on bullion from Alaska, varying from $4 to $10 per thousand dollars, entails a heavy burden on Alaska mining operations. It would seem in view of the high express rates from Alaska the Government should remove the extra charge of $1.25 per thousand dollars now imposed at the Seattle office, and thus, as much as possible, relieve the Alaska miner of part of the expense of disposing of his product; this would be granting only the same privilege to the Alaska producer as is now afforded the producers in California and Colorado, where the extra charge is not imposed. It is true this extra charge is imposed at all the other assay offices except New York, but they are all located near their respective mining districts and the cost of transportation to the producer is small as compared to that on the Alaska gold. From the viewpoint of economy in the mint service, solely, it would appear more reasonable to discontinue or curtail the coining operations at the various mints in the service, for which there is little need, rather than discontinue the various assay offices for which there is a decided use.

As already shown, it costs the Government $400,000 annually—about one-half the total expenditure for mints and assay offices—to maintain the Philadelphia institution, whose sole use is for coinage; about the same amount to maintain the New York Assay Office and the mints at San Francisco and Denver, and about one-fourth the amount to maintain all the assay offices it is now desired to discontinue and which serve the various mining districts not taken care of by the San Francisco and Denver institutions.

There is at present $1,500,000,000 gold coin in this country, of which $1,000,000,000 is in the United States Treasury, $250,000,000 in national banks, and $250,000,000 in other banks and in circulation. This vast amount will meet all demands for a long time to come. Further, an act passed by Congress last March removed the necessity for coining all bullion and foreign gold coin purchased at Government institutions, permitting the issuance of gold certificates instead of gold coin for the payments of such purchases. This greatly decreased the need of mints for coinage purposes solely. Prior to the amendment to the coinage law it was necessary to coin all gold bullion and gold coin purchased at Government institutions, whether coin was needed or not, which created work for coinage mints that was not only an unnecessary expense, but at times undesirable, as bars and not coin were wanted for business transactions. This amendment really limits the present necessary coining operations in the Government institutions to silver and minor coins; and as there are three fully equipped coinage mints in this country—San Francisco, Denver, and Philadelphia—there are more than enough. As already stated, the San Francisco and Denver institutions are located in mining districts and are useful for purposes other than coinage.

It is stated that the Secretary of the Treasury contemplates discontinuing refining operations in the mint service. If this is for the sake of curtailing Government expenditures, it is a mistaken idea of economy, and the Government is unwittingly playing into the hands of custom smelters and refineries. By conducting refinery plants in connection with the various gold-purchasing institutions, the Government has afforded the producer opportunity to dispose of his product at reasonable refining rates. The discontinuance of refinery operations at Government institutions would limit the purchases at these institutions to refined bullion only, which would mean that every ounce of gold mined in this country would have to go first to a private refinery for treatment before it was suitable for purchase by the Government, and the producer would have to pay the private refinery whatever charge it might see fit to impose.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, operations of the mint at New Orleans were suspended from June 1, 1910, two years ago; but it was definitely provided that it should be continued as an assay office in the following language:

The New Orleans Mint will henceforth be conducted as an assay office, with an estimated expenditure for the next fiscal year of $18,300, which is a reduction of $120,000 from the appropriation for the fiscal year 1910.

The proposition to close this office at this time is an injustice to the city of New Orleans and will be a handicap to the business interests in their efforts to secure their share of the trade with Latin-American countries.

As is well known, efforts are being made to reorganize the finances of various South American Republics on a gold basis, and New Orleans business men are making efforts to attract even a larger share of gold shipments to that port than they are now receiving; and this consequently should appeal to Congress to not disturb conditions that look favorable by closing the assay office now.

The maintenance of this office will not benefit New Orleans only, but the whole South. The bullion received at the New Orleans Mint comes principally from South and Central America; is melted, assayed, and paid for there, saving the depositors much time and the cost of transportation to either Philadelphia, Denver, or New York, and it would be economical to install a plant for the purpose of refining gold bullion there and storing the fine bars, thus saving the expense of transportation to the eastern mints.

The receipts of gold and silver bullion at the New Orleans assay office during the last 12 months amounted to $1,600,000, or about $500,000 in excess of the preceding 12 months, and there is every reason to expect that a proportionate increase at least will be kept up.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the House does not wish to follow the views of the committee, its obvious duty is to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] and not the amendment of the gentleman from California, because the amendment of the gentleman from California simply strikes out the provision of the committee and leaves nothing in its place, while the amendment of the gentleman from Washington substitutes the existing law.

This question of the mint and assay offices is not a new question. The Treasury Department for many years has urged upon Congress that they were unnecessary and extravagant. It has been brought into this House several times. The committee may remember that last year the House struck out one assay office, reduced it by one. All we ventured to do was to attack the problem of the superfluous offices one by one and reduce them in that way. I admire the courage of the present majority of the Appropriations Committee in daring to strike at the whole problem at once and follow the recommendations of the Treasury Department, striking out all of these superfluous offices.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In speaking of the recommendation of the Treasury Department the gentleman does not refer to any recommendation to abolish the San Francisco Mint?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury recommended that this ought to go out.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The San Francisco Mint?

Mr. GILLETT. I think so; I think he did. If I personally had to arrange this provision I should have arranged it a little different as to the mints and left San Francisco and dropped Denver. At the same time, I think this step is so desirable, I think the courage of the committee is so commendable, and the economy which is produced is so advantageous to the Government, that I shall vote for this proposition, even if it is not exactly as I would have framed it.

There is no time in five minutes, of course, to discuss the details in it, but the Treasury Department is on record as in favor of this provision by the committee. They say that these offices are superfluous, and it seems to me that if this House really desires economy, if it does not wish to keep them for the sake of local advantage of Members here and there, who of course all dislike to see any Government place taken away from their district—but if this House proposes to do what good administration desires, it will vote for this proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman speaks of the courage of the committee in striking out the various assay offices. Is there any reason in particular why, if it is good policy to strike them out, it should not be extended to the New York assay office?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; and the Treasury Department tells why.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like some reason given more than that "the schoolmarm says so."

Mr. GILLETT. They tell us that the New York office is a great receiver of gold from abroad, which comes directly there.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Can not that be received at the Philadelphia Mint?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; but New York is the great port, the gold is landed there, and I see no reason why it should not be assayed there.

But when you speak of a mint, the most of us think of it as meaning the minting of gold. The minting of gold is a very small proportion of the work of a mint at present. The coinage of the copper cent is the greatest part of the work that a mint has to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is obviously impossible to do justice to an important proposition like this, which proposes in one brief paragraph to repeal numerous laws, in the limited debate which is in order upon this appropriation bill; but I say with entire confidence, if the individual membership of this House would understand thoroughly the proposition involved, in my judgment it would be impossible to adopt this section. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is the one that should be adopted, and I judge the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], of course, would think the same.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. The motion made by myself struck out the lines repealing the law, and the motion of the gentleman from Washington was to strike out the same and place back the assay office as it is to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes; the purpose is practically the same. The motion of the gentleman from California would be simply preliminary to the other. I would like for the committee to bear with me for a few moments, because I live in the gold country, and I think I know something about this question. The fact is, 20 years ago the gold production of the United States was $33,000,000. To-day it has increased three times that, and it is practically $100,000,000 a year. The Peerless Leader, in 1896, made the best run he has ever made for the Presidency, and, I think, a better one than he will make next time, upon the free-silver coinage proposition or the gold and silver double standard as a basis for the American monetary system. At that time there was some reason for his argument, but the increased production of gold in the United States has made a firm foundation for the monetary system of the United States, and all the Government has had to do with that proposition has been to place half a dozen assay offices right out in the States where this gold is produced to furnish immediate market for the sale of the product—for the bullion—in the very locality where it is produced. All it has cost the Government per year is one hundred and three thousand and some odd dollars to maintain and operate these assay offices out in the gold States.

We are expending upward of $15,000,000 per year to encourage the development of agriculture, and the only encouragement the Government has given the gold-mining industry at all has been in placing these assay offices at home where this gold is produced, thus providing a ready market and quick returns for the gold product to the prospector and miner. These gentlemen are spasmodic in their determination to strike down these assay offices and center the entire gold purchasing of this country in the city of New York. I am aware that the Treasury Department has favored this scheme, but I do not agree with their position. I can not understand upon what theory it could be based unless it be a part of a great financial scheme in this country that seems to demand in some quarters a centralization not only of all the money we have, but of all the bullion and other things of value into one locality on the Atlantic seaboard in the city of New York, and that centralization means in Wall Street in the city of New York. [Applause.]

The law, section 3528, provides exactly the same charges shall be made for assaying and running gold into bars in the assay offices as in the mints, and yet it has been for years the practice of the Treasury Department to make charges for the assaying and making of these bars at the assay offices, but make no charge for the same service at the mints. The only exception is in the assay office in New York. You take a bar or piece of gold and sell it to the United States at the assay office in my town of Deadwood, S. Dak., and they charge $1.25 a thousand for assaying and making into bars.

Mr. HAYES. If the gentleman will allow me, I have an interest in gold mines myself, and I know we are charged just the same in San Francisco as you are.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman is incorrect, and if he will consult Mr. Roberts, Director of the Mint, he will find I am absolutely right. Now, I want to state to the committee that this system of charging for the assaying and melting into bars at the assay offices and not at the mints is not the only instance of discrimination between those places.

As I have said, they make no charge for assaying and making bars at the New York office, but do this service free, as they do at the mints. This operates against the local assay offices in the mining regions, the evident purpose being to draw the bullion to the New York assay office and to the mints. There is no justification for this practice in the law. Under the law all of these offices and the mints should be treated alike.

If the department would make the same assaying and stamping charges for bullion taken to the New York assay office and the mints that they make for the same service at the other assay offices there would be a large saving to the Government. For the fiscal year 1911 these savings would be as follows: New York office $97,907, and at the three mints $162,986, or a total saving of $260,893 for the year.

The Appropriations Committee propose to abolish these local assay offices upon the plea that they are not run at a profit. Neither are the mints run at a profit. The agricultural experiment stations are not run at a profit, but that argument is never advanced as a reason for closing them up. The Government assay offices in gold regions encourage prospecting and encourage new mining enterprises. The Government owes the same fostering care to the mining industry that it owes to agriculture, and in both instances the Government realizes great indirect returns in the stimulation and development of these primary and necessary industries upon which the prosperity of the country depends.

The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has furnished the Appropriations Committee with a table purporting to set forth the earnings and expenditures of the mints and assay offices. The table is misleading, unless the items entering into it are examined and understood. The table would indicate that the earnings at the mints are much larger than the expenses.

But the seigniorage on the coinage of metal into money is included in the so-called "earnings." This is in no sense an earning of the mints, but is simply a prerogative of sovereignty in the issuance of money. As well might we credit the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with the face value of the paper money printed at the bureau. Eliminating the seigniorage, and the mints are operated at a loss. The loss for the fiscal year 1911 at Philadelphia was $244,310; at San Francisco, $190,480; and at Denver, $73,681.

The assay office at Deadwood is the only institution in the entire system that is operated at a profit. During the calendar year 1911 the Deadwood assay office purchased bullion to the amount of $7,297,107.08. The earnings of the office were $9,961.71 and the expenditures $9,131.60, leaving a net profit of $830.11. The department would charge against the office, also, some $3,000 for express on bullion from Deadwood to the Denver Mint. This should not properly be done, for if the bullion had been sent by the producers to the mint instead of selling it to the Deadwood office the mint would have made no charge for assaying and stamping, for which the Deadwood office collected more than $9,000.

It is worthy of notice that while the Committee on Appropriations would strike down five Western assay offices, they have in this bill increased the appropriations for the New York assay office in the amount of $94,600. This is practically as much as it is proposed to save by abolishing the other offices.

Mr. Chairman, this is a narrow and indefensible policy. These assay offices should be retained in the mining States where the gold is produced. It is a very small expenditure for the Government to make to encourage the prospector and miner and to stimulate the production of gold. This gold should be purchased where it is produced, and should be coined and stored in the mints nearest to the base of supply. There are already too many forces conspiring to centralize the wealth of the country into Wall Street to form the basis of abnormal and extravagant speculation. It is difficult enough to check this tendency at best. It would be folly to increase it artificially by congressional legislation.

May I ask for five minutes' more time?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time an attempt has been made to abolish the assay office at Charlotte, N. C. I realize that the recommendation of the Appropriation Committee, supplemented by the recommendation of the Director of the Mint, that this office be abolished, will have weighty influence with Members; but, sir, I have been directed by the legislature of my sovereign State to defend the existence of this assay office, and that direction from the lawmaking body of North Carolina, supplemented by the wishes of the people whom I have the honor to represent, make me bold to call upon my friends in this House to hearken to the wishes of my people and help me preserve this historic office.

By a unanimous vote on the 14th of February, 1911, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Legislature of North Carolina:

Whereas a movement is on foot before the National Congress to abolish the United States assay office at Charlotte; and
Whereas this assay office is a great convenience to the mining in the two Carolinas and Georgia: Therefore be it
Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives be requested to use their influence and best efforts to prevent such actions and to secure the continuance and maintenance of this office as heretofore.
Resolved further, That this resolution shall be forwarded at once to both Senators and the 10 Representatives in Congress from the State.

The amendment which is offered carries an appropriation of only $2,550, and under present arrangements, with the assay office earning more than $1,200 a year, it will only cost the Government $700 to keep open this office for the convenience of nearly 300 depositors and patrons. You will therefore see that it will cost less to maintain this office than it does to maintain one rural route, and it looks to me like cheeseparing to deprive the people of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia of the benefits and conveniences of this office just to save $700.

Charlotte now is the only assay office between Philadelphia and New Orleans. If you adopt the recommendation of the committee and abolish all the assay offices except San Francisco and New York, then our people will be compelled to pay the express companies high transportation on their metals sent to Philadelphia. Of course, it would be a good thing for the express companies if you would abolish the assay offices. The Director of the Mint says in his report that this office accommodates in a small way a limited number of patrons, but in his opinion the service is not important enough to justify the cost of maintenance. If you would adopt such theory in your legislation you would abolish every branch of this Government except the Patent Office, for every one of them except the Patent Office is run at a dead loss to the Government; but we are giving the people a public service to which they are entitled, just as the maintenance of this assay office does. For the sake of saving $700 you are called upon to abolish the oldest and most historic institution in our State. I say such an act would be false economy. This institution was established by the Government about 1830, and the people of Charlotte love and revere the old Mint Building. If you abolish the office, you close the institution and leave it for the bats to infest, and deprive many citizens of four States of its great benefits.

You say that I am asking the retention of this assay office on account of sentiment. No; I am not; but the sentiment which clusters around this historic institution should not be disregarded. Sentiment moves the world, and he who does not regard it reminds me of the lines of Holmes:

You think they are crusaders, sent
From some infernal clime
To pluck the eyes of sentiment
And dock the tail of rhyme,
To crack the voice of melody
And break the legs of time.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that there has been recent developments in the eastern Appalachians showing that there is more gold in that region than had been supposed, and that the gold field there is really a rich and extensive one?

Mr. WEBB. That is very true. Several new companies have been formed recently, and new machinery has been bought in that region for the purpose of mining gold. The gold production is increasing every year, and North Carolina is the largest gold-producing State east of the Rockies; and yet you ask us to put this little office, which costs the Government but a mite, out of business. I say again it is poor economy and false economy to attempt such a thing, and I call upon this House to protect North Carolina from this act.

A year ago the same effort was made to abolish this office, but the House came to its rescue and saved it by a very large majority. I now call upon my friends to repeat that act and save this office again, and I believe you will do it.

Do not destroy all the little assay offices for the sake of two big ones. Do not pinch off the little rosebuds in order to make two gorgeous roses. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman in the House whom I esteem more than I do the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB]. There is no gentleman who more ably, zealously, and efficiently represents his constituency on the floor of this House or whom personally I would rather favor. But I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not a matter that merely involves $700, as the gentleman seems to think, down in Charlotte, N. C., but the recommendation of the committee involves, and if adopted will result in saving, over $175,000 to the people of this country. In other words, if the assay offices are abolished, as the committee recommends, the people of this country will be saved about $175,000 every year. The assay offices cost, as the report shows, $185,105.38 each year and they earn only $45,127.08, and to that expense must be added the cost of transporting the bullion from the various assay offices to the mints where it is to be minted, involving more than $34,000. In addition to that must be added the cost of transporting the gold from the mint to the assay offices for the purpose of purchasing the bullion.

Mr. WEBB. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee how much the Government would save if we would abolish all the rural routes in the country?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is quite a different proposition, I will say to the gentleman, because in this case the money is spent not in the interest of the people, but it is spent in the interest of the great gold-mining corporations of this country. Mr. Chairman, when these assay offices were first established there were few railroad facilities; there were but little, if any, express facilities. Gold was mined by individual miners largely, by the hand process, and it was necessary to establish these assay offices in order to afford to these individual miners an opportunity to sell their gold to the Government without being forced to sell it to a local assayer. Now the proposition is a different one. We have railroads going into every mining region in this country. As I stated a moment ago, gold is mined now not by individuals, but by great mining corporations, and it simply results under the present law in this Government going to these assay offices and undertaking to buy their bullion there and then transporting it to the mint at the expense of the people. Now, if this provision of the bill is adopted and these assay offices are abolished, these corporations will have to take their bullion to the mint, pay the expense necessary to carry the bullion there, and there sell it to the Government, and the people will be saved the amount I have stated.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I wanted to ask the gentleman if under the law that was passed at the last session of Congress, wherever you issue gold certificates upon the bullion what is the necessity of taking the gold to the mint? Why not leave that gold at Seattle as well as to take it down to San Francisco or anywhere else.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows it is the policy of the Government, and always has been, to carry this bullion to the mints, and there it is stored. I am talking about the laws as they now exist.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am talking about it as it now exists.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My time is limited, and I want to read the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. I am sorry I can not further yield to the gentleman.

This has been recommended before. The Secretary of the Treasury has for years recommended this very proposition. In November, 1910, in the hearings had before the Committee on Appropriations on the legislative bill for 1912, Mr. Andrew, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, speaking for the Treasury Department, said:

> The assay offices, in the first place, were established at a time when there were not railroads or express facilities and when gold mining was largely carried on by hand processes, and when the gold miner who had accumulated a certain amount of gold had no way of disposing of it except to a local assayer, who would assay it for what he would, and the miner suffered. Nowadays the railroads go into every mining region, and mining is mostly conducted by large corporations. If we had our way in the Treasury, we would do away with all of the assay offices, as it only means that the Government buys the gold on the spot from the large mining corporations and then transports it at its own expense to the nearest mint. We have to send gold coin at our expense to Seattle to buy gold there, and then we send the gold at our expense to Denver or San Francisco.

I want to say in conclusion that if the House wants to adopt a measure of true economy then it should adopt the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury and do away with all these assay offices. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the pending item in the bill proposes to abolish the mint at San Francisco. That mint up to the time of the completion of the present one at Philadelphia was the largest mint in the world, and during the last 60 years it has probably turned out more gold coin than any other similar institution in the world.

The money, the circulating medium, of the Pacific coast is coin. We do not use paper money to any great extent on the Pacific coast. Gold and silver are the mediums of exchange there. During the days of the Civil War, when greenbacks were being used in all the rest of this country, the people of California were always on a gold basis.

Now, for years that mint at San Francisco has furnished practically all of the coin used by the people of the Pacific coast. The profit that has been made in the coinage of gold and silver coins in the nature of seigniorage has averaged over $450,000 a year for the last 10 years. That institution has been paying for itself right straight along. There has been no loss to the Government of any kind in maintaining it. It has been self-supporting. It has not alone been turning out coin for the use of the people of the Pacific coast, but it has also been coining money for the Philippine Islands, and has been making a profit for our Government on that. It has also coined money for foreign Governments. Last year it coined money for the Republic of Salvador, and it earned a profit for the people of the United States on that.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has made the statement that the Treasury Department recommends the abolishment of this mint. I do not agree with the gentleman. I hold in my hand a copy of a letter from Mr. Roberts, the Director of the Mint, dated February 21, 1912, in which he strongly urges the continuation of the mint at San Francisco. He points out the fact that every year considerable amounts of foreign bullion and coin come to this country from the Orient. This foreign gold is ultimately converted into United States gold coin; and the reception of this foreign gold at San Francisco is intimately related to the trade between foreign countries and our country. Five million dollars in Japanese gold coin was received at that port last year, which indicates a movement in settlement of trade balances.

With the completion of the Panama Canal the amounts of foreign bullion and coin arriving at San Francisco will increase considerably. If this bullion and coin should have to be sent to the Denver Mint to be converted into American money, the express charges for transporting it about 1,500 miles across the continent and then returning it to the Pacific coast as American coin would help to wipe out almost entirely the expected savings indicated by the Committee on Appropriations if the San Francisco Mint were to be discontinued. There is work for the mint at Denver, and there is also work for the mint at San Francisco, and under the proposed legislation the express companies would prove the principal beneficiaries—not the Government of the United States nor its taxpayers.

In his letter to Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrew the Director of the Mint also refers to the fact that if this mint be closed at this time the organization of skilled workmen must go, and if an attempt is ever made to resume operations there it will be practically impossible to get them together again.

And I want to say one word in regard to these employees. When San Francisco was burning six years ago many of the employees of the San Francisco mint went to that institution and remained within its walls continuously for 36 hours. They constantly put out the fire as it caught the roof of the building. Many of them lost their own household effects. They were burned out of their own homes, but they remained at their post in the mint in order to protect the property of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter from Hon. George E. Roberts to Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Andrew.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. Roberts's letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 21, 1912.

DEAR MR. ANDREW: Replying to Mr. BURLESON'S inquiry at your hearings upon the estimates for information as to what changes would have to be made in the estimates to provide for a discontinuance of coinage operations at the San Francisco Mint and for supplying the territory heretofore tributary to that mint from the Denver Mint, I beg to say:

I assume that the inquiry relates only to the possible discontinuance of coinage operations and that Congress will favor keeping the mint open to receive, assay, buy, and refine gold bullion, and to convert the same into bars suitable for the issue of gold certificates under the terms of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1911. The San Francisco Mint is one of the most important gold-receiving offices of the mint service, ranking second last year, with deposits of $60,596,665, while the New York assay office was first, with deposits of $73,960,079.81. Both of these offices receive considerable amounts of foreign bullion and coin, and are intimately related with our foreign trade. Among the receipts at San Francisco last year was over $5,000,000 in Japanese gold coin, which signifies a movement in settlement of trade balances. The cost at which gold can be moved from foreign countries to an office of the Treasury and converted into money of the United States sets a limit upon the price of exchange and thus affects indirectly a much larger volume of trade than is affected directly. When the future possibility of trade upon the Pacific Ocean is considered it seems evident that there should always be an office of the Treasury on the Pacific coast, where foreign gold can be received at its assay value.

In this connection it should be remembered that all of the cost of refining or in any way preparing gold bullion for coinage or bars is deducted from the value of the bullion when it is purchased, and that the estimates for the support of the mints for the next fiscal year takes no account of the mint charges for refining bullion, which will be turned into the general fund of the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The income from bullion deposited at the San Francisco Mint in 1911 was $65,003.30.

The estimates for the San Francisco Mint for the fiscal year 1913 provide for the maintenance of all departments, but with gold coinage on a reduced scale, as contemplated by the act of March 2, 1911. The total amount estimated for the coinage department in "Wages of workmen" is $26,000, all of which may be eliminated if no coinage is to be done. An amount estimated by the bureau at $7,000 may also be taken from "Wages of workmen" on account of other departments, making a total reduction of $33,000 in this fund. In the salary list the superintendent of the coinage department, at $2,500, and one clerk, at $1,600, may be dropped. The appropriation for contingent expenses may be reduced by $5,000. In all, the estimates for the San Francisco Mint may be reduced $42,000 by suspending coinage operations at that institution.

If, however, the Denver Mint is to supply the silver, nickel, and bronze coinage which in the estimates were allotted to the San Francisco Mint it will be necessary to considerably increase the estimates for the former institution. It is now working with a well-balanced force up to the limit of its capacity for the number of employees, and can not handle more coinage than has already been allotted to it without increasing its force and its expenditures for supplies. It will be observed that of the reductions which may be made at San Francisco only the superintendent of the coining department, a clerk, and possibly one or two foremen belong to the overhead expenditures. All of the rest is for wages of workmen and supplies, and can not be reduced without reducing the total coinage of all the mints in a corresponding degree. In other words, there is little to be saved in merely shifting the coinage from San Francisco to Denver so long as the main organization at San Francisco must be maintained. We must keep the superintendent and the entire force for receiving, melting, assaying, refining, and safeguarding the bullion, including the bookkeeping and clerical force and the care of the building.

The amount of silver, nickel, and bronze coinage contemplated for the San Francisco Mint would not, however, fully occupy the coining department, and possibly would not take more than half its time. It was planned to reduce the force in this department to the lowest effective basis and have it do as much gold coinage as possible in addition to the small coins. In this connection I think the committee's attention should be directed to the fact that the act of March 2, 1911, does not contemplate a complete suspension of gold coinage. It merely authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to issue gold certificates against deposits of gold bullion and foreign coin, expressly providing that the amount of gold bullion and foreign gold coin so held "shall not at any time exceed one-third of the total amount of gold certificates at such time outstanding." On the first day of the current month the total amount of gold certificates outstanding was $1,035,613,369, of which, under the terms of the act, $345,204,123 might be in bullion and foreign gold coin, while all of the rest must be in United States gold coin. The reserve at that date consisted of $935,173,533 in United States coin and $100,438,836 in bullion. It is therefore possible and also desirable to increase the stock of bullion, but as the deposit of gold bullion at all offices of the service during the last fiscal year amounted to $175,383,090.44 it evidently will not be possible to completely suspend the coinage of gold for many years unless a further change in the statute is made. This is the vital fact to be considered in connection with the proposal to close the coining department of the San Francisco Mint. If the coinage of gold is to be resumed within a comparatively short time there is no advantage in temporarily closing the coining department of that institution. It may as well continue to do a moderate amount of gold coinage from year to year.

If, however, Congress should decide upon this policy, it is estimated that $18,000 should be added to the "wages of workman" fund of the Denver Mint, one clerk at $1,600 a year to the salary list, and that $2,500 be added to the contingent fund. The difference between these additions to the Denver estimates and the subtraction from the San Francisco estimates would represent the expenditures upon gold coinage if operations were continued at San Francisco.

There are still other features of the case to be considered, to wit:

First. The San Francisco Mint does a considerable amount of coinage for the Philippine Islands. It is now a diminishing quantity, but for the last fiscal year the charges collected amounted to $20,962.40. At the existing express rates on coin from Denver to San Francisco the charges on these coins, if shipped from Denver to San Francisco by express would have been $7,977.25. While this additional expense would not come out of the United States Treasury, it is entitled to consideration. The Philippine Government would probably find it advantageous to have its coinage done at a foreign mint rather than pay the high inland charges.

The San Francisco Mint was also in receipt last year of $5,111.06 for coinage done for Salvador, which might not have been done in this country if inland transportation were added to the cost. The total earnings of the San Francisco Mint last year for coinage done for other countries were $26,073.48.

Second. The average annual coinage of the San Francisco Mint in subsidiary silver coin for the last 10 years has been a little over $1,000,000, all of which has gone into circulation upon the Pacific coast and indicates about the absorption of that region. The cost of transporting $1,000,000 in subsidiary silver coin from the Denver Mint to the San Francisco Subtreasury at the existing express rate would be $9,000. These charges are paid from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Independent Treasury, and as the estimates for that appropriation were made without contemplating this item they should be correspondingly increased if the expenditure is to be incurred.

The amount of nickels and bronze cents used on the Pacific coast has in former years been small, but is rapidly increasing. For the last fiscal year the amount of these coins which was delivered at the San Francisco Subtreasury for distribution on the coast, if shipped from Denver, would have involved express charges aggregating $5,583.50. Altogether the express charges from Denver to San Francisco on last year's coinage for the Philippines and for small coins for the Pacific coast would have amounted to $22,560.75. These computations are made at existing rates. It is probable that some reduction could be obtained upon them if the Treasury was ready to enter into a contract for the carriage of considerable sums over a period of time. It is also to be considered, on the other hand, that the absorption of the small coins on the Pacific coast is likely within a few years to largely exceed the average for the last 10 years.

Finally, it is to be considered that if the coining department is shut down the machinery is likely to deteriorate, and, of course, the organization of skilled workmen must go. With a full desire to cooperate with the committee in all respects to eliminate unnecessary expenditures, I am moved to urge that no action be taken in haste that will impose great hardship upon a force of worthy and deserving employees. Most of these men have spent years in acquiring skill which makes them valuable to the Government, but the trade is not one in which they can find employment elsewhere, and even if no consideration be given to employees who have handled billions of dollars' worth of treasure with scrupulous fidelity it will not pay as a matter of common business policy to close the coining department temporarily and scatter a force of men whose integrity and skill have been tested only to reopen it in a short time. Men are not trained for this work anywhere but in the mint service.

The policy of the service has been planned with a view to economy on a permanent basis. The discontinuance of assay offices has been recommended on the ground that there is no longer the occasion for them that originally existed. Changes have been recommended in the mint organizations, simplifying them and effecting greater flexibility in the working forces. The number of mints has been reduced to three, two of which are conveniently located to receive bullion direct from producers. The Philadelphia Mint, although not directly related to any bullion-producing district, is well located for the manufacture and distribution of the subsidiary and minor coins. The New York assay office will receive the gold bullion coming into the country on the Atlantic coast and convert it into bars. It is the policy of the Treasury to fill orders for coin from whichever mint they can be shipped at the lowest transportation charges, whether the charge is paid by the Treasury or the consignee. This gives the bulk of the small coinage to the Philadelphia Mint, but an important share goes to the Denver Mint. The San Francisco Mint has a much smaller tributary population, but it is so important an institution in gold receipts and in probable relations to foreign trade with that coast that the bureau has never contemplated closing it and can see no economy in closing one department. With continually increasing demands tributary to it, we might expect that there would be constant agitation to resume coinage operations, and that this would eventually be done. In that case nothing would have been gained by the suspension, and grave and unnecessary injury would have been done to the employees.

This letter has gone into details in order that the committee may be fully informed as to all the facts which have influenced the policy of the department in making up the estimates.

Respectfully,

GEO. E. ROBERTS,
Director of the Mint.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, the bill as reported from the committee proposes a change in the San Francisco Mint so as to make it an assay office. I want to say, from experience, that that is the beginning of the end. We used to have a mint at New Orleans, and by the action of the Director of the Mint it was degraded into an assay office, and the present bill proposes to abolish that assay office. So San Francisco and California may well profit by our example.

I have here in my hand a protest from the Clearing House Association of New Orleans, composed of 13 leading banks of that city, which I shall ask leave to insert in the RECORD. That protest shows that in 1910 the gold assayed at New Orleans was $950,000, while in 1911 the gold assayed was $1,600,000, showing the increased usefulness of that assay office, as a result of the enlarging gold importation that is coming in from Central American ports.

As my colleague has said, there is no better way of cementing trade relations between the United States and the Central American Republics than by maintaining on the Gulf coast an assay office where gold from these countries may be refined.

I want to call attention further to this fact, that as shown in the hearing, at page 180, the New Orleans Mint is now used to store $22,000,000 in silver, which can not be deposited in the Subtreasury at New Orleans, because there are no vaults in it that are fit for that purpose.

This is the protest from the Clearing House Association of New Orleans:

NEW ORLEANS, March 2, 1912.

To the Hon. FRANKLIN MACVEAGH,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The banks of this association have had under consideration at several of their recent meetings the suggestions emanating with your department and reflected in your annual report, recommending the abolition of various assay offices in the United States, including the assay office operating in this city.

The records of the assay office in New Orleans show gold assayed in 1910, $950,000. The amount for 1911 is $1,650,000, and is steadily increasing on account of the large shipments now being directed to this port from Central America.

The appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, for this assay office, and for the storage and care of standard silver dollars aggregating $23,000,000, is only $21,300. It is advised that less than $18,000 of this amount will be expended during the present fiscal year; the cost of operating the assay office would be decreased year by year, owing to the proportionate large imports of gold from Central America.

The growing importance of certain Central American Republics where gold is produced, the efforts being made to reorganize the finances of these countries and place them on a gold basis, through the instrumentality of financial institutions and merchants in New Orleans, would indicate the importance of maintaining the assay office in New Orleans instead of compelling shippers of gold to transmit it to Philadelphia or New York, thus incurring heavier expenses and loss of interest, etc. These remarks also apply to countries south of the Equator, who can be expected after the opening of the Panama Canal to make a free use of this port for their importations of gold.

If the department in Washington would permit the operation of the refinery in the New Orleans Mint, which could be done at a very small cost, the expense of transporting the bullion to the New York Assay Office would be saved. It would provide fine bars to be stamped and stored here as well as in New York.

As the policy of the Government seems to have been to foster and aid these Central American Republics, the closing of the assay office in the city of New Orleans would almost act as a discrimination against these Republics, our local financial institutions, and commercial bodies, etc.

The banks of this association have been stimulating the import of gold to this port, and they feel that the cutting off of the very small appropriation by the Treasury Department, necessary to continue the operation of the assay office in this city, would be reckoned as false economy, and would interfere with international relations which have been successfully established after considerable effort and a large expenditure of money.

All the banks of this association who are voicing their views through the medium of this letter to your department desire to enter their protest to the closing of the assay office, and they ask your considerate attention to their suggestions.

Respectfully submitted.

Bank of Orleans, Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. of Louisiana, Commercial National Bank, Commercial-Germania Trust & Savings Bank, Cosmopolitan Bank & Trust Co., German-American National Bank, Hibernia Bank & Trust Co., Interstate Trust & Banking Co., Metropolitan Bank, New Orleans National Bank, Whitney-Central National Bank.

You gentlemen, in abolishing the assay office, will do what? You will find it necessary to make provision for the care and custody of this $22,000,000 in silver, which will cost an amount almost equal to that which it now takes to run the New Orleans assay office, some $18,000. I hope the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] will prevail.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, at this time we have authorized by law 5 mints and 10 assay offices. The Treasury Department tell us that we need only 2 mints and 2 assay offices, and that all other mints and all other assay offices are absolutely superfluous, unneeded, and an extravagance. The only question that presents itself to the committee at this time is whether you will do with the money of the Government as you would do with your own money. I submit now to each individual Member this issue: If you had a confidential agent in whom you placed confidence and he told you that certain expenditures you were making were wholly unnecessary and brought you no benefit, what would you do? There can be but one answer; you would cut off that expenditure. There is not a man here who is honest and intelligent but knows that he would cut off that expenditure. Here we have trusted agents of the Government, officials of the Treasury Department, telling us year after year that these offices we seek to eliminate are absolutely unnecessary. Now, will you cut them off?

Gentlemen say that there is a question whether the recommendation has been made. Year after year it has been made. Just two years ago the assay office at St. Louis was stricken down against the earnest protest of as popular a man as there is in this House. [Applause.] There was just as many reasons for the continuance of the St. Louis assay office as there is for the continuance of the office at Charlotte, or the office at Seattle, or the office at any other place save New York and San Francisco. Here is what the Secretary of the Treasury says:

We ought to have a mint in the east and a mint in the west, and we ought to have an assay office at the refineries in New York and San Francisco, the great entrepôts for gold.

That and nothing else. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no sectionalism in this proposition, no partisanship in it. The Secretary of the Treasury says that we need a mint at Philadelphia, an assay office at New York; that we need a mint either at San Francisco or Denver, as you will read in the hearings, and an assay office at San Francisco. We leave the two assay offices, and we strike down, or attempt to strike down, the mint at San Francisco because it is old, antiquated, obsolete. We continue the mint at Denver because it is new, modern, up to date. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] speaks of political influence or advantage. Mr. Chairman, during the preparation of this bill and since I have received scores of telegrams with reference to this matter, some from my own State, many from California. I hold in my hand a letter and a telegram from two of the most prominent Democrats in California. I will read from each just one line. I am not going to call their names, but the letter and telegram are here for anybody to see. I read from the telegram:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 27, 1912.

Public sentiment is flowing strongly toward Democracy on the Pacific coast. No appropriation [meaning for the mint] means a powerful club placed in the hands of our opponents.

I now read from the letter:

Adverse action means certain loss of the Pacific States in November.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, this is not a question of partisan politics, and, speaking for myself, I will not be controlled by such considerations. It is a question whether you propose to economize in the expenditure of public money when the opportunity is fairly and squarely presented. The gentleman from Massachusetts adverts to the fact that we attempt to cut off all these at one time. We attempt it because we know it is right. We attempt it because we confidently believed that there was a sense of public duty high enough on this side of the House, with the assistance of those on the other side of this Chamber who desire to do the right thing, to conserve the public funds.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. What sort of a question?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman made the statement that the machinery in the San Francisco Mint is not up to date.

Mr. BURLESON. When was it constructed? More than 60 years ago——

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. BURLESON. I have no time to yield further. The gentleman himself stated that it was constructed in 1852. Every Member here knows that the Denver Mint is comparatively new. Treasury officials say we need one mint on the western coast, and the Secretary of the Treasury declined to state whether it should be the one at Denver or the one at San Francisco. We sought to ascertain the real facts, the whole truth, and we learned that the mint at San Francisco was old and obsolete. I do not care whether it is in the printed hearing or not. That is the statement that was made, and everybody knows that it is true. These offices should be abolished; it is a solemn duty we owe ourselves and our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the proposition made by the gentleman from Texas is that these mints are proposed to be abolished in the interest of economy. By what mathematical process he arrives at that conclusion I am entirely unable to understand. But I do understand that the committee has recommended the retention of a mint which has been a large expense to the people of the United States, and if there is any economy in that I am unable to see it. From the hearings before the committee it appears that the earnings of the Philadelphia Mint last year were $4,510,884 and the expenditures $553,100. That mint is a profit earner. The earnings of the mint at San Francisco were $610,003 and the expenditures $288,944, which shows that the San Francisco Mint is a money-maker to the United States to the amount of nearly $400,000 a year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I have not time now. Wait until I get through. The committee have recommended leaving the New York office in a territory where no gold is mined and where it is operated at a great loss every year. Last year that mint earned $95,940 and cost the Government $159,000. What kind of a process of economy is that? [Applause.] It does not come up to the standard which accumulates wealth.

I now read from page 179 of the hearings. Mr. Andrew, who appeared before the committee, testified that they ought to have two mints, one in San Francisco and one in New York. This was wisdom on his part and comported with good business methods. In the name of common sense, why should he advise shipping the bullion across the entire country to be minted? [Applause.] Did anyone expect him, as a practical business man, to advise the abolition of the mint at San Francisco?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to what Mr. Andrew stated on that proposition.

Mr. CULLOP. I will read it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Andrew stated that if it was an original proposition that ought to be done.

Mr. CULLOP. I will read what he said, and you may make your defense in your own time. I read from page 161 of the hearings. Speaking of assay offices, Mr. Andrew said:

> The department would be very much pleased, Mr. BURLESON. We should like to see them all abolished except the one in New York. The assay office in New York is very important, as that is the natural entry port for gold.
>
> Mr. BURLESON. I agree with you thoroughly about that.
> Mr. ANDREW. And probably if we were starting over again we would have our mint in New York. We really ought to have two mints, one on the eastern seaboard and one on the western seaboard, and if we had a mint and assay office in New York and one in San Francisco we would be ideally situated. As it is, however, the mint is established in Philadelphia and ought to be continued.

What good business man acting on a safe business plan would advise the abolishment of the mint nearest the raw material and then advise the transportation of the raw material a long distance for manufacture? If any such there be, I hope they are few and far between, and there ought to be none. If any exist now, I hope they will soon fade away.

Why, there is no reason for it except it is farther away from the production, and the express companies in carrying the articles to the mint would be a litte better able to collect money from the pockets of the people and swell their already overflowing coffers. Of such legislation they would be the chief beneficiaries.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. No; I have not the time. Why should not the gold be minted where it is produced and then send it across the country already manufactured? It will find its way East soon enough. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Texas that the present mint in California was not built in 1852. That old mint was long ago abandoned, and the present mint is a comparatively modern institution; not only that, but the machinery of the mint within the last three or four years has been practically all rebuilt. Last year Congress appropriated $40,000 for the purpose. Whatever the motives for the abandonment of the mint at San Francisco may be, it can not be economy, as I can demonstrate in a very few moments. If the mint in San Francisco is abandoned, we must abandon the coining of money for the Philippine Islands. If not, we must pay the express charges from the coast to Denver and back again, and these express charges would be exorbitant, amounting to practically $8,000 on the basis of last year's coinage; but if we lost the coinage the loss would amount to more. Last year this coinage brought to the mint at San Francisco $20,000. We coined $5,000,000 for the Republic of San Salvador, for which we received something like $7,000. Besides all this, we have to coin for use on the Pacific coast, which, as has already been stated, uses only gold and silver coin, more than a million dollars in silver every year. That is to supply the normal yearly demand. The express on that silver to Denver and back again would be $9,000. The express on the nickel and copper coins which last year were coined at the San Francisco mint to Denver and return would amount to $5,500. These figures are given us by the Director of the Mint. The total actual expenditure would be $22,500, and the loss of the foreign coinage would be $26,000 more, or $48,500 in all, and all the net saving the committee has pretended they would make by the abandonment of the San Francisco Mint is $30,000. So that we should be actually out on the proposition proposed by the committee somewhere from $10,000 to $20,000.

Now, in this statement I have not taken into consideration the increase of $94,000 for the assay office in New York City, which is made necessary by this absolute change in regard to the policy of the Government as to the mints and assay offices.

So there can be no argument that has any foundation that this is a matter of economy. As has been said, the San Francisco Mint is not only a self-supporting proposition but it has brought millions of dollars into the Treasury of the United States. For the last 10 years the San Francisco Mint has earned $8,500,000, and the total expense has been only $3,900,000, leaving $4,500,000 as the profit that has come into the Treasury of the United States from the operation of the San Francisco Mint.

Now, gentlemen, it seems to me that if we are to have any change of policy at least that policy which has been advocated by every Secretary of the Treasury since it has been agitated should be followed—that there should be a mint on the Pacific coast and one on the Atlantic coast. The mint at San Francisco is the natural place for a mint on the Pacific coast; it is the place to which the gold of Alaska comes and to which the gold from across the Pacific comes. Five million dollars was received last year from Japan alone to be melted into bars or recoined. The foreign coinage would naturally come to San Francisco and would not go to a mint in the interior.

I have no fight to make against the mint in Denver. I am only saying that I believe it is not economy to abolish the mint at San Francisco, and the facts demonstrate beyond all peradventure that it would be a positive loss to the Government and a great inconvenience to the people who are producing the great bulk of the gold produced in this country.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the special attention of gentlemen on this side of the House. I had the honor to serve five or six years on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. A thorough study of this whole question at that time convinced me that many of these institutions now in the United States were not only absolutely worthless, not only great sources of expenditure to the Government, but they were hurtful to a free and easy flow of the coinage of the United States.

There are two questions to be taken into consideration. I know that it is almost impossible for the gentleman who is sitting near me now and other gentlemen into whose faces I am looking to oppose this measure because it will take away from their locality institutions which they have obtained by much trouble and anxious thought. But it would be better for the United States of America, which we are representing on this floor, that this project which the committee has brought forward, and which I will gladly vote for, should be carried in its entirety and in its simplicity and that every amendment should be voted down, and I will tell you why.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I can not; I have only five minutes. The first thing in reference to the coinage in this country is the perfection of the work and the consequent prevention of easy counterfeiting, and that can be better done with only one mint—as it is in every other country in the world—rather than in half a dozen different ones. The second proposition is ease and economy of distribution of the money after it is coined.

There is no trouble about the bullion getting to the mint. The question is, what is most convenient for the distribution of the money in small sums to the people, to the banks, to the stores, and the mercantile institutions that want it. That is the other question which should control the location of the mint in Denver or some other central point in the country.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I have but five minutes. Now, with the mint on the seacoast to take care of the Eastern States, with the mint at Denver providing for the great central west and the Pacific coast, you have got a model plan for distribution as good as you can get it in this great country of ours. With an assay office in New York and one at the seaport on the Pacific coast you have got your receiving points, and you can not get, in my judgment—I may be mistaken—a better system than that which this committee has recommended, and I congratulate them on the courage which they have shown in bringing it in here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman propose to apply that request to amendments? I have an amendment I desire to offer, and would like to have five minutes' time to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Texas, I hold in my hand a letter from the Treasury Department in regard to the condition of the machinery in the San Francisco Mint. It says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 3, 1912.

Hon. J. R. KNOWLAND,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your inquiry of the 3d instant, I beg to say that the machinery in the San Francisco Mint is in good condition and ample for present requirements and that no important expenditures for equipment are likely to be needed for some years to come.

Respectfully,
J. F. CURTIS,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is but fair to the members of the subcommittee who framed this bill to credit them with a desire to do justice to every locality and to act in the best interests of the Government. In considering the innumerable items which the bill contains it was but natural that some mistakes should be made, for the committee is but human.

All efforts toward economy are commendable, but in attempting to legislate the San Francisco Mint out of existence the committee has overshot the mark, for instead of effecting a saving the legislation, if passed, will result in a loss to the Government. The figures which I give are furnished by the Director of the Mint, an official who has never hesitated to make recommendations that would result in any real saving to the Government.

Let us analyze the San Francisco situation. This mint is advantageously located at the gateway of the Pacific, which will always be a trade center and entrepôt for gold. Owing to its location on the coast this institution secured coinage last year from other countries—the Philippines and Salvador—which resulted in earnings of $26,073.48, which coinage, according to the director, would probably have been done outside of the United States had it been necessary to pay express charges to an interior mint. Here is over $26,000 of revenue lost as a first item with coinage discontinued at San Francisco, a bad beginning for economy.

The total annual coinage of subsidary silver coin at this mint has been over $1,000,000, all of which has gone into circulation on the coast, and if shipped from Denver would have called for an expenditure of $9,000 for express charges. The nickels and bronze cent pieces, for which there is an increasing demand on the coast, if shipped from Denver would have entailed an expense of $5,583.50 for express charges, a total of $14,583.50. What the Government loses by this deal the express companies gain. So far the total reaches over $40,000 on the wrong side of the economy ledger.

In case all the coinage of San Francisco went to Denver—and I want to say that I have nothing against the Denver Mint, for we in the far West are compelled to fight for whatever we get, and I would not in any way injure that institution—an additional appropriation of $22,100 would be required for that mint, making a grand total additional expense of over $62,000, which no reduction of force at San Francisco could offset. Let us recapitulate, showing by figures furnished by the Director of the Mint that to discontinue coinage at San Francisco is not in the interest of economy.

Revenue from foreign coinage that would in all probability be lost if express charges were necessary to be paid	$26,073.48
Express charges on silver	9,000.00
Express charges on nickels and cent pieces	5,583.50
Additional appropriation for Denver	22,100.00
Grand total	62,756.98

There is another matter that should be taken into consideration in discussing this question. There appears to be an erroneous impression in some quarters that gold coinage has ceased as a result of the act of March 2, 1911. This act, which I have before me, does not contemplate a complete suspension of gold coinage, for it expressly provides that the amount of gold bullion and foreign gold coin held shall not at any time exceed one-third of the total amount of gold certificates at such time outstanding. This means that in a short time bullion held in San Francisco, where one-third of the gold is received annually, last year's total receipts amounting to $60,596,665.11, will have to be shipped to Denver to be coined, with express rates at $1.50 per thousand. This will mean the payment in express charges, according to the department, of an amount that will of itself exceed any possible saving, even if all the other items already enumerated were eliminated.

We have not spoken of the deterioration of machinery; we have not given consideration to those faithful employees who have devoted the best part of their lives to the service, handling millions of dollars without loss to the Government, and who will be compelled to seek employment elsewhere, breaking up their homes, and all without reason.

This mint, established in 1854, is in the center of the greatest gold-producing region in the world, extending from Alaska to Mexico and from the Rocky Mountains to the Orient. Gold and silver is our circulating medium on the Coast, and nowhere is a mint more necessary. It has been self-supporting.

The legislation is unnecessary, uncalled for, and inexcusable, and I hope the House will vote against the unwarranted action contemplated by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order for me to offer my amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair thinks the gentleman's amendment will be an amendment in the third degree, and after the amendments are disposed of it will still be in order for the gentleman to offer his amendment, although there will be no debate on it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. By that time the time for debate would probably have expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It will have expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask to offer my amendment now and have it pending——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks to have his amendment read in his own time. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, strike out all after and including the word "mint," in line 1, down to and including the figures "$73,200," on line 13, and insert the following:

"At Philadelphia: Superintendent, $4,500; engraver, $4,000; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant assayer, $2,200; assistant coiner, $2,000, and $500 additional during present incumbency; assistant melter and refiner, $2,000; cashier and bookkeeper, at $2,500 each; clerk and deposit weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; assayer's assistant, $2,000; assistant cashier, $1,800; curator, $1,800; two clerks, at $1,700 each; eight clerks, at $1,600 each; one clerk, $1,500; six clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,300 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; seven clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, $900; in all $80,300."

Mr. KENT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understood that 15 minutes were allowed for this Pacific coast matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is having this amendment read in his own time.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I make a point of order that the gentleman's amendment does not pertain to the paragraph under consideration, and the limitation of time was for debate on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is offering an amendment, to be read in his own time for the information of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry. Does that come out of the time limited for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It comes out of the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to restore the amount appropriated by existing law; that is to say, $80,300 in lieu of $73,200 provided for in this bill. It is intended to preserve the office of coiner, which is created by statute, and one or two other places which have been eliminated by the committee's process of economy. Mr. Chairman, it is so unusual——

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that the Treasury officials have recommended that that be eliminated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that the department recommended the change, but I desire to make an effort in this House to restore the places made by statute, as well as other places, in the Philadelphia Mint. It is so unusual, I was about to say, to hear in this House that Philadelphia had gotten anything ahead of any other section of this country that I feel note should be made of the incident.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] a moment ago laid particular stress upon this fact, but it seems he took into account not at all the fact that the appropriation made for the operation of the mint in Philadelphia is almost entirely an appropriation to pay for labor that toils at that mint. One of the objections I have to the policy of economy inaugurated by the committee is that it strikes out the employees of these establishments, and the reason I offer this amendment is to meet the condition which the committee presents of striking down those whose wages are involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has expired. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] is recognized.

Mr. KENT. Gentlemen, I have been in favor of the program of economy. I voted for it, and I have consistently voted to leave money in a man's pocket rather than to place a residue of it in another's pocket; and in the interest of economy I have advocated up to the present time an amendment that would nullify the paragraph that would do away with the San Francisco Mint. Figures have been shown which to my mind are conclusive to the effect that the San Francisco Mint pays the Government at least $10,000 more per annum in actual cash than would the proposed arrangement.

We in California use coin almost exclusively, and we wear it out by abrasion and it needs to be recoined there, because it is in circulation there. Otherwise long shipments would be required. It is the normal, natural place in which to have a mint, because it is situated where coin is more used than in any other part of the country.

I hope the Democratic Party will succeed in practicing the economy which it preaches, although I have serious doubts.

I was surprised with the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut when he paralleled the United States with the European countries that get along with one mint. Our distances are vastly greater, our situation different. There should be a mint on each seaboard of the United States, and San Francisco stands as a natural receiving point for precious metals from Alaska, Mexico, California, Nevada, and in many cases from Utah. On the other hand, there is a continued call for metallic money in oriental commerce. At the convergence of supply of precious metals and demand for precious metals there should be a Federal mint. The mint is established where it should be established, and that is at our greatest Pacific seaport. It is not the part of economy to destroy it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations appeals to both sides of the House to vote for the bill. The President of the United States, in a message to Congress, calls attention to the fact that money can be saved by abolishing useless mints and assay offices. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report, on page 44, states that these offices are absolutely worthless. We have brought in a bill that abolishes them without regard to locality and without regard to politics. We abolish the office in Charlotte, N. C., we abolish the office in New Orleans, La., and we abolish the offices wherever they are located if not needed. The annual expense of running these assay offices is $118,000. The cost of shipping gold from the assay offices to the mint is $44,500. In addition to that, we must spend $45,000 or $50,000 more in sending money from the Treasury to the assay offices to pay for the bullion. The only difference between the abolition of the offices and the condition now will be that the owners of gold bullion must ship it to the mints instead of to the assay offices. We now pay the express not only upon the bullion of the gold miner from the assay office to the mint, but we pay the express on the gold to pay for the bullion from the Treasury of the United States to these assay offices. Talk about a profit? Why, if you are going to make that sort of imaginary profits—bookkeeping profits—we could go into the coinage of copper and silver and make millions of dollars. That is what the profit at the San Francisco Mint comes from. It is the profit upon the coinage, and whether you coin the copper and the subsidiary silver in the mint at Philadelphia or in the mint at San Francisco, the seigniorage is the same.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am sorry I can not. I have not the time.

If we coin the coppers at San Francisco we must pay the express on those coppers to the parts of the country where they are used; and whether you coin the coppers or the subsidiary silver in one mint or another, the Treasury bears the expense of transporting those coppers and that subsidiary coin out into the channels of commerce.

Are you willing to maintain a mint that earns, for instance, $2,400 a year? Outside of the express upon the bullion and the coin, it costs $13,500 to maintain it. Are my friends from North Carolina going to vote against saving $250,000 because the pitiful sum of $2,400 of that money is spent within their borders? Will our friends from Louisiana vote against saving $175,000 or $200,000 simply because $8,000 of the money is expended in their State? Will you men on this side of the House refuse to stand by the committee that has brought in a bill carrying out the recommendations of your President and of your Secretary of the Treasury for the abolition of useless and worthless Government institutions? Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to the paragraph in the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 65.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina and Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 61.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Treasury Department, I am convinced that the discontinuance of the United States mints and assay offices at this time is a very great mistake, and it is to be regretted that the Committee on Appropriations has deemed it advisable to make the sweeping changes indicated in the bill now being considered by the committee. While I am chiefly interested in the assay office in Montana, located at the city of Helena, in the center of a great mining district, I am also decidedly opposed to the entire scheme contemplated in this paragraph of the bill. I have received hundreds of protests against the discontinuance of the Helena office. A great deal of interest has been manifested in this subject by persons engaged in mining in my State since it became known that a movement had been started to do away with this office, and from statements made to me by men on the ground, who are familiar with present conditions, there can be no doubt as to the necessity of maintaining this office. I am informed that there is at present a marked revival of gold mining in this section of the country. A great many small operators are in the field and many new properties will be developed during the season. The Helena office was established in 1874. The bullion produced annually amounts to over $2,000,000 and the depositors number from 500 to 1,000. This assay office has a large number of small customers, many of whom operate mines remote from railroads. It is often necessary to receive returns from the clean-up before these small companies or the individual miners can pay their operating expenses.

The product of the mines can now be deposited at the assay office and the miners can get their cash within two days. If you discontinue this office, their bullion will have to be disposed of at a discount to a dealer or else sent to the mints. If the latter course were adopted, an indefinite delay would ensue before the returns were received, operations would be retarded, and the expense of mining greatly increased. I am advised that if the Helena office is discontinued a great many small producers will be forced out of business. Whether the injury will go to that extent, of course, I am unable to state from my own personal knowledge, but I am satisfied that the closing of this assay office will result in great detriment to the mining industry. It is to be hoped that the recommendations of the Treasury Department and the Committee on Appropriations will not prevail.

I desire to submit for the consideration of the House samples of a great number of resolutions that have been adopted by various mining associations, commercial bodies, and individuals throughout Montana and the Western States in opposition to the changes here proposed by the Appropriations Committee relative to mints and assay offices; and I desire especially to call attention to the letter of the president of the Commercial Club relative to the Helena office, substantiating my statement and showing the necessity for the retention of this office:

Resolution adopted at a meeting of the Montana Mining Association, Helena, Mont., Tuesday, March 12, 1912.

Whereas it has come to our notice that there is a movement on foot to discontinue the refineries connected with the United States mints and to abolish all United States assay offices; and

Whereas for five years the United States assay office at Helena has treated an average of $1,986,887.20 of bullion, and it is thereby shown that the United States assay office at Helena is being used by a great many operators in this State and its abolishment would be an injury to these people and to the mining interests of Montana; and

Whereas we feel that the United States assay office located at Helena is of great importance to the gold miners and prospectors, and if the office were removed bullion would have to be shipped to eastern points or disposed of to the pawnbrokers or custom smelters where charges would be exorbitant; and

Whereas it is well known that the small operator depends upon immediate returns from each clean-up to meet pay rolls and purchase supplies and if the United States assay office at Helena is discontinued small properties, now running on a close margin of profit, might be compelled to shut down; and

Whereas it is the aim of this organization to protect the mining interests of Montana and those engaged in its various branches: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Montana Mining Association, respectfully protest against the abolishment of the United States assay office at Helena and urge upon you the claims hereinabove set forth as our reasons for taking this position.

Resolutions of Miles City Chamber of Commerce.

Whereas it has come to our notice that there is a movement on foot to curtail or discontinue entirely the refineries connected with United States mints and to abolish all United States assay offices; and

Whereas the United States assay office at Helena, Mont., is of vital importance to the gold miners and prospectors of this State, in that here they may dispose of their product and receive prompt payment for its value; and

Whereas it is particularly the individual miner or small operator who is thus benefited, since many of these depend upon immediate returns from each clean-up to meet their pay rolls and purchase needed supplies; and

Whereas to discontinue the assay offices and refineries would be to place these miners and prospectors at the mercy of pawnbrokers and custom smelters and refineries where the charges are so exorbitant that many small properties now running at a decent profit would be compelled to shut down; and

Whereas the Helena assay office especially is the center of a mining district so located that a large number of miners, prospectors, and other persons are directly and indirectly benefited thereby: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Miles City Chamber of Commerce protests most earnestly against any curtailment of the operations of this office or with the refineries connected with the United States mints; and be it further

Resolved, That our delegation in Congress be urged to use their influence in carrying out our wishes as expressed above.

HELENA, MONT., January 6, 1912.

HON. CHAS. N. PRAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It has been brought to the attention of the Helena Commercial Club that the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report recommended the discontinuance of several of the western assay offices, including the office at Helena. As, after most careful investigation, we are convinced that the assay office at Helena is of vital importance to the mining industry in this section of the country, we wish to protest against its abandonment, and we ask your assistance to this end.

At the present time there is a marked revival of gold mining in this territory, and a great many small properties are preparing to start operations within the next year. The Helena assay office now serves a large number of small customers, and in this respect differs from nearly all other assay offices in the West. Many of the mines are remote from the railroads, and the small operators would be most hurt by the abolition of the Helena office. The small concerns often can not meet their pay rolls or the individual miners their living expenses until they receive returns on their clean-up. At present they can deposit their product at Helena and receive cash within two days. Without this office they would be compelled to dispose of their bullion at heavy discount to some dealer or else ship it to the mints and wait an indefinite time for returns.

The Helena assay office was established in 1874, and the number of depositors has ranged from 500 to 1,000, and the bullion produced annually amounts to over $2,000,000. To produce this amount of gold requires a vast amount of labor, and a large number of persons in all parts of the State are accommodated and their operations made possible by procuring prompt returns for their product. We are confident that if this office is closed a great many small producers will be forced out of business, and especially those operating cyanide process, where the bullion is frequently impure and has to be refined before reaching the standard required by the mint. Under the present arrangement the assay office refines the bullion, making only a small charge therefor, and then assays and immediately pays for the refined bar.

We believe the public benefits derived from the maintenance of this office are so great in comparison with the small cost to the Government of maintaining the same that we strongly recommend that it be maintained, and we earnestly request and urge that you do everything possible to secure the necessary appropriations to this end.

Very respectfully,

HELENA COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By H. G. PICKETT, President.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The position of coiner, which has heretofore existed in each of the coinage mints, and the position of melter and refiner, which has heretofore existed in each of the coinage mints and in the United States assay office at New York, are hereby abolished, to take effect on and after July 1, 1912, and on and after that date the duties and responsibilities heretofore imposed by law on the officers holding said positions in each of said mints and the assay office shall devolve upon the superintendents of said institutions; and all assistants and employees of the mints and assay offices of the United States shall, from and after July 1, 1912, be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 21 to 25, page 62, and lines 1 to 9, on page 63. The amendment is already adopted to do away with this and change this condition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It does not do anything of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] moves to strike out lines 21 to 25, page 62, and lines 1 to 9, on page 63. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire recognition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, Mr. Chairman. This legislation is asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury, who has attempted to readjust the force in these mints and subtreasuries, and he is asking for this legislation in order that the titles may conform to the duties.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What effect will that have on the amendment which has been adopted as a substitute?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. None at all. This is separate legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks for a division.

Mr. RAKER. No, Mr. Chairman; I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California withdraws his motion. The amendment is rejected. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, that entire section has been read and stricken out, and the substitute offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is mistaken. That portion of the bill was not considered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I beg the Chair's pardon. The Chair is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Denver, Colo.: Superintendent, $4,500; assayer, $3,000; superintendent melting and refining department, $3,000; superintendent coining department, $2,500; chief clerk, and cashier, at $2,500 each; deposit weigh clerk, and bookkeeper, at $2,000 each; assistant assayer, $2,200; 2 clerks, at $2,000 each; assayer's assistant, $2,000; assistant cashier, $1,800; 2 clerks, at $1,800 each; 4 clerks, at $1,600 each; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 1 clerk, $1,200; private secretary, $1,200; in all, $47,200.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, to ask the gentleman a question. Is this an increase of salary in this section just read?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. CULLOP. Will you restore them to the old salaries, inasmuch as the new provision has been stricken out now? They ought to be restored as they were before.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.

Mr. CULLOP. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is an increase of salary without warrant of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please designate the point wherein the salary is increased.

Mr. CULLOP. In order to do that I will have to ask the gentleman what the old salaries were.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. CULLOP. That these are increases of salary from line 10 to line 19. I have just asked the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], in charge of the bill, and he says there is an increase.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no increase of salary.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman from New York says it is not an increase of salary, while the gentleman from South Carolina informed the committee that it was.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. "The gentleman from South Carolina" never said that. There was an increase in the total amount, which goes to the workingmen for wages.

Mr. CULLOP. If that is the only increase, then I will not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Philadelphia: Superintendent, $4,500; engraver, $4,000; assayer, $3,000; superintendent melting and refining department, $3,000; superintendent coining department, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant assayer, $2,200; assistant superintendent of melting and refining department, $2,000; cashier, and bookkeeper, at $2,500 each; 1 clerk, and deposit weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; assistant cashier, and curator, at $1,800 each; 2 clerks, at $1,700 each; 8 clerks, at $1,600 each; 1 clerk, $1,500; 6 clerks, at $1,400 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 3 clerks, at $1,200 each (including one formerly paid from "parting and refining"); 5 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $900; in all, $73,200.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph, and desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the assayer's salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I suggest that the gentleman make his point of order, if he has any.

Mr. FOWLER. There is no provision for an engraver at the Denver mint, but there is one at the Philadelphia mint, at $4,000. I will be glad to have information from the chairman of the committee as to whether this engraver is a new office or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is not a new position. It is the current law.

Mr. FOWLER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, strike out all after and including the figures $73,200, on line 13, and insert the following:

"At Philadelphia: Superintendent, $4,500; engraver, $4,000; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant assayer, $2,200; assistant coiner, $2,000, and $500 additional during present incumbency; assistant melter and refiner, $2,000; cashier, and bookkeeper, at $2,500 each; clerk, and deposit weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; assayer's assistant, $2,000; assistant cashier, $1,800; curator, $1,800; 2 clerks, at $1,700 each; 8 clerks, at $1,600 each; 1 clerk, $1,500; 6 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,300 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; 7 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $900; in all, $80,300."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is this amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a little while ago I endeavored to explain the purpose of this amendment. It was to restore a statutory office that was cut out of the bill by the committee——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that by reason of the completion of the smelting plant and the enlargement of the assay office in New York the Secretary of the Treasury contemplates that there will be less assaying to do at the Philadelphia Mint. The force as provided in this bill and the salaries as provided in this bill are as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is true, notwithstanding all that has been said about the apparent preference for the Philadelphia Mint, that the refining department is to be taken away and to be included in the New York plant?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Largely so. Most of the bullion is brought into the port of New York. It is brought in large quantities for commercial purposes, and if you send it to Philadelphia there must be express paid on it. So the Secretary of the Treasury thinks it is unnecessary to go to the expense of sending it over to Philadelphia and back to New York, and I think he is right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am aware that the committee is supported in the bill it has presented by the recommendations of the Treasury Department. I desire to have that fact clearly understood. Still it is my duty to present this amendment, with a view of enforcing the law as it was enacted in 1873. The committee abolishes the office of coiner, which was created by statute in that year, and in the process of consolidating branches of the work has appointed a superintendent at a different salary. I want to lay this matter before the House in justice to the Philadelphia Mint and to the necessities that there exist. In response to my friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], to whom I made reference a little while ago, I should like to read just what it means to economize at the Philadelphia Mint, or at any other mint in this country.

The report of the Director of the Mint for 1911 contains this statement with regard to the work done at the mint at Philadelphia:

The fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was remarkable in that there were made at this mint 176,076,529 pieces of 1 and 5 cent coins, amounting in value to $3,866,288.09, the largest amount of minor coin ever made in any fiscal year at the mint in Philadelphia. This coinage has increased in the number of pieces from 101,301,753, made in 1900, to 176,076,529, made in 1911.

That pertains only to minor coins. We produced at the Philadelphia Mint upward of $37,000,000 in gold, silver, and minor coins, and these coins have been made, as well as safeguarded, by labor that is there employed.

I do not like to see labor thrown out of employment, and that is the reason why I answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], who spoke a little while ago of the preference given to the Philadelphia Mint. I would rather keep labor employed than to stand here enacting legislation to throw labor out of employment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is no labor thrown out of employment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 30, noes 53.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at San Fransciso, Cal.: Superintendent, $4,500; assayer, $3,000; superintendent melting and refining department, $3,000; chief clerk and cashier, at $2,500 each; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant assayer, $2,200; 2 clerks, at $2,000 each; assistant cashier and assistant bookkeeper, at $1,800 each; assayer's assistant and deposit weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; 2 clerks, at $1,800 each (including 1 formerly paid from "parting and refining"); 4 clerks, at $1,600 each; private secretary, $1,400; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 1 clerk, $1,200; in all, $46,700.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to return to page 31 of the bill, which we passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman can not object, because I have unanimous consent to go back at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina, his request is in order, but there are three other paragraphs on that page which have not been disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They may take considerable time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we already have unanimous consent. We obtained that this morning—to return to this section at my pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. If we return to the other page now will we not lose the oportunity to move to strike out this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from California that the three remaining paragraphs on page 65 have not been read, and therefore have not yet been passed upon. They will have to be read and passed upon before the bill is disposed of.

Mr. RAKER. Before we return to the other page, I move to strike out lines 20 to 25, on page 64, and lines 1 to 5, both inclusive, on page 65, the paragraph just read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from South Carolina has authority at any time to recur to these other paragraphs, and, having made the request, the gentleman from California can not take him off the floor for this purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry, so there can be no misunderstanding. Will my motion be pending to strike this out when we return to this part of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to make that motion when we recur to this part of the bill. Of course, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has the right, under the order made this morning, to return to the other part of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment to be read. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement before it is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to make a statement before the amendment is read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk covers the Bureau of Trade Relations, the Bureau of Manufactures, and the Bureau of Statistics. It is not perhaps one amendment, but I desire to have it read as a whole in order that Members may be in possession of what it is intended to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina state if this is offered as one amendment or as separate amendments?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will offer it as one amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I prefer to have it considered separately. I am willing it should be read as a whole. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, if an amendment can be offered as one amendment that covers different pages of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be read, and then, if a point of order is made, the Chair will determine the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, in lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500."

Page 32, strike out lines 11 to 25, inclusive, and on page 33, lines 1 to 23, inclusive.

Page 125, strike out all of lines 3 to 20, inclusive, and insert on page 125, after line 2, the following:

"That hereafter the Bureau of Manufactures of the Department of Commerce and Labor shall be known as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

"The Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby consolidated with the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, to take effect July 1, 1912, and the duties required by law to be performed by the Bureau of Statistics are transferred to and shall after that date be performed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

"Those certain duties of the Department of Labor, or Bureau of Labor, contained in section 7 of the act approved June 13, 1888, that established the same, which especially charged it 'to ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production and under a classification showing the different elements of cost, or approximate cost, of such articles of production, including the wages paid in such industries per day, week, month, or year, or by the piece, and hours employed per day, and the profits of manufacturers and producers of such articles, and the comparative cost of living and the kind of living, what articles are controlled by trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor, and what effect said trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor have on production and prices,' are hereby transferred to and shall hereafter be discharged by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and it shall be also the duty of said Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to make such special investigation and report on particular subjects when required to do so by the President or either House of Congress.

"Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Chief of bureau, $4,000; assistant chiefs of bureau, 1 at $3,000, 1 at $2,750; chief of division of consular reports, $2,500; stenographer to chief of the bureau, $1,600; clerks—7 of class 4, 5 of class 3, 1 at $1,500, 11 of class 2, 14 of class 1, 17 at $1,000 each, 11 at $900 each; messenger; 5 assistant messengers; 4 laborers; laborer, $480; in all, $102,610.

"To enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collate and publish the tariffs of foreign countries in the English language, with the equivalents in currency, weights, and measures of the United States of all such foreign terms used in said tariffs, and to furnish information to Congress and the Executive relative to customs laws and regulations of foreign countries, and the purchase of books and periodicals, $10,000."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is new legislation and does not come within the terms of the special rule adopted for the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the proposition contained in this amendment, which I first saw only about an hour ago, it wipes out of existence the present organization in two of the departments and consolidates them in one new bureau, and gives to this bureau exactly the powers that are now being employed by what is known as the Tariff Board.

The proposition as I understand it, although my information comes only from the public prints, is that the Committee on Appropriations proposes in the sundry civil bill to kill the present executive Tariff Board by refusing to make an appropriation for its continuance. That proposition I agree with. But this is simply an effort by amendment to this bill to establish a new executive tariff board to take the place of that which they propose to abolish, by refusing the appropriation in the sundry civil bill.

The amendment offered, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, not only makes new appropriations for the several positions named, some of which are not now named in the law, but it fixes the duties of the new bureau under a new name, to be known as the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. It provides that hereafter the Bureau of Manufactures in the Department of Commerce and Labor shall be known as the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. It consolidates the Bureau of Statistics in the Department of Commerce and Labor with this newly created bureau, to take effect on July 1, 1912, and transfers the duties which are now required of that bureau to this new bureau.

But more than that, Mr. Chairman, while very cleverly repeating certain language contained in the law now on the statute books creating the Department of Labor, which gave to one bureau in that department certain powers, it adds to that language the following:

And it shall be also the duty of said bureau of foreign and domestic commerce to make such special investigation and report on particular subjects when required to do so by the President, or either House of Congress.

That, Mr. Chairman, is not in the act of 1888, but is a virtual transcript of the Tariff Board law which was turned down in this House in the recent past. It seems to me perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman, that this attempt to create an executive tariff board by the consolidation of two executive bureaus, under a new name, coupled with the revivifying of a certain law which has been obsolete for 25 years, and the addition thereto of new duties which do not appear in the law, makes the amendment clearly out of order as new legislation.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is this amendment offered as a committee amendment, authorized by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir; there has been no formal meeting of the committee. There was a meeting of the majority of the committee, but there was no formal meeting of the committee, and it is not offered as a committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. The rule provides for any committee amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that was not adopted in the rule.

Mr. PALMER. The rule under which we are operating is found on page 5889 of the RECORD of May 4, and clearly does not provide for this sort of an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to address himself to the proposition as to whether or not this amendment as a whole operates as a reduction in the amount of money covered by the bill.

Mr. PALMER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not able to say about that. This amendment appropriates $102,100, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that what he desired to call his attention to was the fact that the exception to legislation on appropriation bills, as provided by Rule XXI, clause 2, is that such legislation is germane; and then, also, such legislation as reduces the amount of money covered by the bill, so it seems to the Chair that is a pertinent question.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment provides, however, for certain things to be done which doubtless will require very much more expenditure than the mere salaries of a few of these officers who are named in the bill. There is not anything on the face of the amendment which shows that it will be a reduction in the expenditure by appropriation, and unless that appears it seems to me that it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point on which the Chair would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. PALMER. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much if the proposition to create a tariff board—for that is what this proposition is—can be held to be germane to an appropriation bill or to the subject matter of this bill provided for the transfer of the Bureau of Statistics to another bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman, Does the gentleman contend there is anything in this provision so far as collating information is concerned that it is not now authorized by law?

Mr. PALMER. I think this language, "and it shall be also the duty of said bureau," and so forth, is new.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not; it is contained in the act of 1888 with the same provision——

Mr. PALMER. No; the act of 1888 is quoted in the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Only part of that provision is quoted in the amendment and only that part of the duties enumerated in the act of 1888 that would be particularly pertinent to this bill is taken out of the Bureau of Labor. There are other duties enumerated there that are left with the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. PALMER. That is very true, but the section of the act of 1888 which is quoted provides for the duties of the Bureau of Labor, and that is adopted by this committee now. It is, as I said awhile ago, a law which has been obsolete for 20 years or more, as the gentleman from New York is perfectly aware.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think not; I think any law is a law. Law is law.

Mr. PALMER. Well, the duties of that bureau specified in the act of 1888 have never been performed and no appropriation, at least sufficient to perform them, has ever been made, and that fact of itself, Mr. Chairman, is pretty good evidence that this amendment will increase expenditures, because if these duties are to be performed, if this proposition is in good faith, it will cost the Government of the United States a great deal more than $102,000, which is the total sum appropriated for this specific office. But after quoting that language from the act of 1888, carrying the duties of this Bureau of Labor, the amendment adds language that is absolutely new and which was only, as I understand it, put in the amendment to-day after conference with some Members whose support of it was secured by the addition of this new language, and that clearly makes it new legislation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is a very disorderly irregularity of language, Mr. Chairman, which I resent——

Mr. PALMER. By myself?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; not by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is always perfectability in the use of language, as well as in ideas. [Applause.] Foreign and domestic—there is no such thing known to the Constitution as domestic business. It is interstate and foreign, and if we are going to name any such board as this we ought to name it according to the Constitution, "interstate and foreign"

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a further point of order, inasmuch as it is impossible for me to assume how the Chair will rule on this point of order. The further point of order is that it is not legitimate to include in one amendment striking out, on page 32, lines 11 to 25, and then have the rest of the amendment applying to page 125; and it illustrates, it seems to me, clearly the impropriety of so joining amendments. Suppose, for instance, the committee or any gentleman on the floor wished to put in a bill an entirely new office. Could he put in an amendment saying there is hereby established a new office, and then couple with the amendment a provision striking out, for instance, all the mints, and then claim that although that applied to an entirely new subject, yet because the amendment as a whole produced an economy, therefore it was in order? It seems to me that would be entirely improper. We are reading this bill for amendment, and an attempt is made here to strike out provisions under the State Department and thereby produce an alleged economy, and then by weight of that economy to say that the amendment as a whole comes under the Holman rule, whereas I claim that the two provisions are entirely independent; that they are in different parts of the bill and can not be treated as one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman, Does this amendment offered strike out a portion of the bill on pages 32 and 33 and also on page 125 specifically?

Mr. GILLETT. That is the amendment as I have it.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair pass on one proposition at a time, without taking up the other. The request of the gentleman from New York this morning was:

I ask unanimous consent that when we return to the provisions on page 33, line 5 to line 23, which were passed over, that we shall also consider the provision on page 32, commencing with line 11 and running down to and including line 4 on page 33. They are all interrelated.

Unanimous consent was granted that that should be done. The Chair would hold, then, you could offer one amendment to this provision on pages 32 and 33, and that you could offer one amendment which might relate to those things on page 125; but you could not strike out page 125 until you reached it. The Chair will sustain the point of order, so far as that is concerned, and give the gentleman an opportunity to reoffer his amendment with the change.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I offer as an amendment, on page 31, to strike out of lines 17 and 18——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to debate the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. I want to ascertain what the purpose of the amendment is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman submitted this very same amendment himself when this paragraph was read.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to ascertain. I have not even looked at it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This strikes out "Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures in the Department of State," which was inserted because of the proposed abolition of the Bureau of Manufactures. I understood the gentleman was striking that out from the amendment he offered.

Mr. GILLETT. No. That is the amendment that is now offered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to have some understanding or agreement that would be effective. Here is an amendment which was offered as a whole, to which a point of order was made, and the point of order sustained to the amendment as a whole. Now it is offered in division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the ground on which the Chair sustained the point of order was that you could not amend a paragraph at the time except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining of the ruling. I think it was correct. But here is a proposition to strike out "the Chief of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500." Of course that strikes out the head of the present Bureau of Trade Relations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it does not. This was a position to be created if the Bureau of Manufactures was abolished and the work turned over to the State Department.

Mr. MANN. This is a new position entirely.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "Bureau of Manufactures"——

Mr. MANN. There is now the Chief of the Bureau of Trade Relations, and the only change the committee made was to change the title to the "Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations." Now, if we strike that office out with the expectation of providing for its duties in some other office, and then when the amendment is offered to that it is subject to a point of order, the committee will leave itself in a fairly ridiculous position. Is it not possible to have a vote on the whole proposition in some way first?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has moved to strike out the words "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations." I move to strike out from his language the words "Chief of Manufactures." I want to leave the "Chief of Trade Relations" in there.

Mr. MANN. You want to perfect the original text first by striking out the words "of Manufactures and"?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] that the Bureau of Manufactures we transfer from the Department of Commerce and Labor to the Department of State.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly. You put here in this section "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations." There is no such position now, and I wish to leave it "Chief of Trade Relations."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment on this amendment. I offer an amendment to perfect the original text by striking out the words "of Manufactures and."

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment pending before the committee to strike out the words "Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations." Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to amend that amendment?

Mr. MANN. No; he desires to perfect the text.

Mr. GILLETT. To perfect the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order until the other is disposed of. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. MANN. Where an amendment is offered to strike out a part of the text, it is in order to perfect the text of the amendment to see what the committee wants to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct, and the Clerk will report the amendment to correct the text.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 18, strike out the words "of Manufactures and," so that it will read "Chief of Bureau of Trade Relations, $2,500."

Mr. GILLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the way this proposition is brought in is treating the House fairly. The first proposition reported by the committee was to practically strike out from the bill the Bureau of Manufactures and the Bureau of Statistics. That was what we supposed was the proposition of the majority when they came in here this morning.

That is what I supposed was the position until late this afternoon. The remark that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has made indicates that when he suggested this morning that these items should be considered together he probably then had in mind the proposition which he now makes, and very ingeniously caught us, unsuspecting, and we agreed to the proposition that these sections should be taken together.

If that is the way we are to be treated, we will not consent in the future to any such suggestion of unanimous-consent agreements. Founded upon that, the gentleman now brings in this proposition, which entirely abolishes a large part of the organization of the State Department, that whole organization of trade relations, under which the State Department has been so successful of late years, without a word of notice, without a suggestion in the committee hearings, with no evidence at all; but apparently because popular opinion was against them in striking out the Bureau of Manufactures and Statistics, not daring to stand by their other propositions, they now are trying to cover it over and accomplish something—although a different result—to accomplish something that looks like economy. Apparently they think that the Department of Commerce and Labor is too popular with the country to allow two of its important bureaus to be taken away, and so they suddenly make a back track and allow this to come in, which abolishes part of the Department of State.

The one thing that they seem to be intent upon is to strike at some department. Now, I do not think it is fair to the minority or fair to the committee that a portion of a commitee should bring in such an important, essential, fundamental proposition as this on an amendment concocted at a late hour in the afternoon of the day when they said the bill was to go through, with no suggestion made of it in committee, and no suggestion made of it to any minority members of the committee until it was handed to us a few moments ago in typewriting. I do not think that is a fair way to treat the minority or the committee.

Now, as to the amendment which I have offered, I think the Bureau of Trade Relations ought to remain in the Department of State. I think it has proved to be of the greatest value to the country, and I think that any proposition to strike it out is most unfair, particularly if such a proposition is brought in in this way, without any evidence or without any previous suggestion. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am not accustomed to treating Members unfairly, or of taking advantage of them, or of being charged with so doing. No unfair advantage was taken of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. I asked unanimous consent that the provision on page 32, commencing with line 11 and ending on line 4 of page 33, might be considered when we recurred to it.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. If the gentleman had objected, when the bill was reported to the House, it would have been in order to have made, and a motion could have been made, to have stricken that part of the bill from it. The gentleman could not have objected, and he would have had no knowledge that it would be done.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Has there been any suggestion that the gentleman was going to do that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose the gentleman was posted by the representatives of his own party in the administration at least as much as members of the opposite party in this House.

The investigation made by the Committee on Appropriations disclosed that there was a certain unnecessary duplication of work. All the departments insisted in each instance that their particular bureaus were the necessary bureaus. The committee was determined to eliminate the duplication and to concentrate the services that were identical in one department. It determined, upon the information it then had, to put those services in the Department of State. Since that time representatives from the Department of Commerce and Labor have come to the committee insisting that a mistake had been made, stating that there was no real objection to certain consolidations, but that, on the contrary, some of them believed that they should have been made heretofore, but that the bureau that should be maintained is the Bureau of Manufactures. And no later than yesterday, although the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to be unaware of what happened, the head of the Department of Commerce and Labor was here in this House, setting forth his views to the Members of the majority, and pointing out where he thought, perhaps, mistakes had been made, and where the services should be protected.

The Bureau of Trade Relations in the State Department has no existence in law. It was built up by the Secretary of State under the provision in section 2 of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law by which authority was given to the President to secure information about foreign tariffs, whether discriminations were being made against American manufactures and American exports, and to enable him to enforce the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff law. Since this bill was reported the committee has ascertained that the Secretary of State had made the statement that practically everything that was to have been done and which could have been done under section 2 of the Payne-Aldrich law has been done; and he has requested the Committee on Ways and Means to amend the law in certain particulars, insisting that the amendments were necessary if the Department of State was to act further under it. The committee believed that the work having been completed, not being in sympathy with the so-called "dollar diplomacy" of the administration, and information having been furnished that whatever remains to be done could properly be done by the Bureau of Manufactures, and that it was more advisable, perhaps, to put the Bureau of Statistics with the Bureau of Manufactures than with the Census Bureau, the committee remodeled its provisions, and so reported to the House.

I have no hesitation in saying—the gentlemen can indulge in criticisms if they wish—that I believe we have done the right thing. In view of the information we had before, we were justified in the previous recommendations. In view of the information we have now I believe that the committee made a mistake, and I am not afraid to say so. I believe that the readjustment of the service proposed in these amendments will make the service more efficient and will promote the interests of the commerce of the United States. That is all there is to it. The committee now propose to drop the entire force in the Department of State, built up under the pretext that there was a necessity for it by reason of certain provisions in the Payne law, and under an appropriation of $100,000 contained in a deficiency act passed two or three days after the Payne-Aldrich bill was approved, as a result of which there was organized the Bureau of Trade Relations in the State Department. Among other places there was created the position practically of diplomatic peace officer. The gentleman who held that position has recently departed this life. He was utilized by the Department of State to smooth out the difficulties among our Central and South American neighbors. A number of other positions were created for which I believe there is no authority, and which I believe it desirable to terminate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] speaks about the committee creating a new tariff board. I deny it. In 1888 a Democratic Congress passed the law relating to the Department of Labor. Among other things, it imposed upon the Department of Labor the particular duties which we now propose to transfer to the Bureau of Manufactures. At that time the Commissioner of Labor, although not a Democrat, was Democratic in his tariff views, and Republican administrations refused to permit him to engage upon any of the work authorized. There exists now a Bureau of Manufactures, and certain duties heretofore imposed upon a Bureau of Labor that have no real relation to the work of that bureau, but would be pertinent, if they were to be performed at all, to the Bureau of Manufactures and should be transferred to it. The committee deemed it desirable to transfer those duties to this bureau, so long as it was engaged in the work of consolidating and rearranging the duties of these different bureaus, into the bureau where the work properly belongs.

The gentleman is erroneous in his statement that new duties have been imposed upon the bureaus by the language to which he calls attention, authorizing investigation to be made in response to directions of either House of Congress. That language is also taken from the act of 1888, although it is not put in quotation marks in the provision as written, but it is in the act of 1888 nevertheless. The Bureau of Labor now exists, and it is within the authority of the President or of either House of Congress to direct the Commissioner of Labor to make such investigations, to make special reports on the particular subjects enumerated, whenever required to do so by the President or either House of Congress, or whenever the commissioner believes the subject in question requires investigation and report. It is to be presumed that the particular investigation to be made would be along the lines of the authority conferred upon the Commissioner of Labor by the act.

I have no hesitation in saying that I am opposed to the present Tariff Board, and I shall not vote to make appropriations for it. If there be some organization which from time to time can secure information under the direction of the Congress, which information may be required in the work of preparing tariff or any other bills, I am perfectly willing to have it. I do not believe we are creating a tariff board in the sense in which I have antagonized and opposed one—a tariff board or instrumentality created by and subject to the Executive, and not under the control of the House of Representatives, where tariff legislation originates.

The Commissioner of Labor, under the act of 1888, has from time to time made special investigations in matters affecting labor, under the direction of both Houses of Congress, and the investigations have always been of a satisfactory character.

In preparing tariff legislation a great mass of information is now obtained, and called for by the Committee on Ways and Means, from various bureaus of the Government which have special facilities and capacity for obtaining the information. I have never known that committee, under any administration of the House, to refuse to ask for or to accept such information simply because it had been compiled by a bureau in one of the executive departments. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina at this time is not, however, involved in that question. It involves only the question as to whether the bureau in the Department of State shall be continued, presumably performing duties created under the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, but which can not further be performed unless the request of the Secretary of State for further legislation be granted by amendment of the law. It makes no difference to me whether the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts be adopted so long as the committee goes further and strikes out the balance of the language in the clause.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those in the House who have confidence in the work of the great committee of the House, and I have been extremely loath at all times to oppose anything which is brought out after full and fair discussion and consideration by one of the committees. And especially would I hesitate to oppose any proposition which had received the full and careful consideration of the great committee presided over by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. But in presenting my opposition to this proposition I respectfully submit that I am following the Committee on Appropriations in their deliberate judgment and refusing to follow that committee in their hasty and eleventh-hour judgment. I am for the bill brought out by the Committee on Appropriations. I would transfer this Bureau of Statistics to the Census Department, and I would do all the other things which the distinguished gentleman's committee have reported to the House after full and fair hearing.

But here is a proposition which, so far as I can learn, was born this afternoon in a corridor of the Capitol, and I assert that its only purpose is to create an executive tariff board to take the place of a tariff board which the gentleman's committee have already given notice will be killed when the sundry civil bill is reported to the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care to have pass unchallenged the gentleman's statement that this recommendation was born this afternoon in a corridor of the Capitol. That is not a fact.

Mr. GARNER. Will it create a tariff board, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe it will.

Mr. PALMER. I think I can show that it will.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says it was not born to-day. I do not know when the idea originated in the gentleman's mind, but I do know that a large majority of the committee which would have charge of the legislation affecting the creation of a Tariff Board never heard of this proposition until after the House met to-day. It was never submitted to them.

I have gone along very willingly during this session in support of rules which have sustained the efforts of the Committee on Appropriations in writing new law on the statute books. I have gone along with them upon that, but I must say that I hesitate when, upon a great political question such as this, whether we shall have an executive Tariff Board in this country or not, I am asked to subscribe to the proposition that the Committee on Appropriations, in an unofficial meeting, as the gentleman himself admits, shall write law into the statute books and make a policy for the Democratic Party.

The gentleman says that it is not a Tariff Board. Why, Mr. Chairman, if you read these provisions of law which are incorporated in this amendment as the duties of this new bureau, you will see that every duty which the present executive Tariff Board has to perform, and does perform, is incorporated within the range of the duties of this new bureau.

The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has said several times in the House and before the country—and no man, Mr. Chairman, can speak the mind of the Democratic Party of the country with greater precision than he [applause]—the gentleman from Alabama has said that the present Tariff Board is a body of clerks of the President. How much more true would it be, with these subalterns in this little bureau, charged with all these great and important duties of the Tariff Board, appointed by a subordinate officer of the President—by the administration—how much more true would it be that then we could consign to a body of clerks the duties which are now exercised by the Tariff Board?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment incorporates the duties of the Commissioner of Labor as prescribed by the act of 1888, into the duties of a new bureau. The gentleman from New York says that all of it is existing law. That may be true, but however the gentleman may refine about the technicalities of the situation—and the gentleman knows it as well as anybody—ever since that law was passed it has been a dead letter upon the statute books. If it were not so, there would not have been the slightest reason for the Republican Party in the last Congress to form a tariff board, because there was a bureau charged with all the duties which it was necessary for them to put into a new tariff board in order to show the country that they were in favor of such a proposition.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. This provision, if I am correctly informed, only carries an appropriation of $100,000. Would that be sufficient to conduct a tariff board as now conducted under the present law?

Mr. PALMER. It probably would not, and neither would it be sufficient to perform the duties covered by this amendment. You will find, if this bureau gets to work and undertakes in good faith to do the things that the amendment calls for it to do, that it will be absolutely necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to come into the House with a deficiency bill asking for an additional appropriation to pay for the performance of all these duties.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who believe that we should undertake tariff legislation without the assistance of experts. On the contrary, I think I have shown during my course in this Congress that I believe in expert assistance. The Committee on Ways and Means in the preparation of its tariff legislation has had that kind of assistance and has employed it constantly; and no Committee on Ways and Means which would perform its duty with fidelity to the House and the country could proceed to revise the tariff without the assistance of such experts.

But, Mr. Chairman, the power to control is in the power of appointment; and my objection to this proposition is that whatever political bias can possibly enter into the report of such a bureau on tariff questions will be the bias of the appointing power, and I assert that if any prejudice should ever get into any of the reports of the tariff board, bureau, or commission, it should be in full sympathy, not with the executive, but with the legislative branch of the Government, because it is in this House that is lodged the exclusive power of originating all this kind of revenue legislation.

I am in favor of expert assistance. I do not care whether you call it a tariff board, a revenue board, a tariff commission, or a board of statisticians. I assert that the only safe and proper plan is to have that assistance controlled—that is to say, appointed—by the Ways and Means Committee of this House, which is the committee which since the foundation of the Government has been charged with the duty of preparing the legislation that under the Constitution must originate in this House.

But, Mr. Chairman, just as soon as we enter upon this proposition we bind the Ways and Means Committee of the House, hand and foot, to views and reports in the present state of the Government control by a partisan President entirely out of sympathy and against the judgment of a majority of the people of the country. Because here in this House is reflected the opinions of the people of the United States upon revenue questions, and whatever board is charged with the duty of presenting the facts for consideration by the Congress ought to be in full sympathy with the prevailing predominant sentiment of the country as reflected in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. I was only going to add that I wish that we could have a board of expert statiticians who would be absolutely devoid of any political prejudice upon this subject. But human nature is human nature the country over, and the time will never come when strong American men will not have decided views upon this tariff question. We can not find any experts in the land who will not have views—yea, who will not have convictions—upon this question of raising the revenue for the Government. We may find men who will subordinate these views and these convictions to the desire to collate the facts without bias and without prejudice. We may and we may not. But it seems to me that the safe thing to do, knowing that trait in human nature, is to make sure that, whatever prejudice or political opinion may influence, the findings of fact and investigations should be in absolute and hearty accord with the judgment of the majority of our people. The people send us here to legislate on this tariff question. They do not want some clerks, as the gentleman from Alabama has so often said, to operate as a tariff board for our guidance. They want us to do it, and until the time comes when we can eliminate this feature from human nature which brings political convictions into every action of life on this question we had better play safe and be absolutely certain that whatever expert assistance we have is that which is in consonance and sympathy with the judgment of our people.

I would not oppose a board which was appointed by the House of Representatives, because that necessarily—though I would want it to be unbiased and unprejudiced—could not be charged with being opposed to the predominating sentiment of the country. I would not oppose this provision if it were under the control of the Committee on Ways and Means. I would not oppose it if it could be so changed that it would consist of clerks who would work under the direction and subject to the order of the committee which since the Government began has been charged with the duty of preparing this kind of legislation. But so long as it will be composed of clerks who may be small politicians back in the country, appointed for the purpose of rewarding them for some political support, I shall oppose any effort on the part of the Committee on Appropriations or anybody else to put this tremendous power in the hands of such a board or bureau. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment in part meets my aproval, in part it does not. It is a changing of front. It is an attempt to change a horse while the gentlemen in charge of the bill are crossing the stream. Now, I am entirely in harmony with one of the amendments, namely, that which consolidates the Bureau of Manufactures in the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Bureau of Statistics in the same department. I believe they can be profitably consolidated. There is a report of a very able commission recommending this, and it would have been done before this, but under the information of the Attorney General, while Mr. Straus was Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, he held that the law would not permit it. This proposes to change the law and consolidate those two bureaus; but it goes further than that. It makes it impossible to expend the sum of $69,160 that is being expended for the current year by the Bureau of Trade Relations in the State Department. It omits that and transfers the duties that are being performed in the State Department, costing $69,160, to the Department of Commerce and Labor, but does not add the $69,160 or any part thereof. Further than that it provides or fails to provide for $60,000 worth of commercial agents that are now employed by law in the Department of Commerce and Labor. So we have thrown these duties upon this newly created bureau, consolidating Statistics and Manufactures, and in addition drop out the $60,000 for commercial agents under the Department of Commerce and Labor, in a total cost of $235,400 this current year, and the proposition is to appropriate $102,000—decrease the amount, notwithstanding the added duties. In addition to that it takes and repeals, as the amendment shows, the authority that the Department of Labor has and forces it upon the new bureau and directs that that bureau shall perform certain duties, or have the power to perform certain duties, and proposes this additional legislation:

And it shall also be the duty of said Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to make such special investigations and reports on prevailing subjects when required to do so by the President or either House of Congress.

That is new and no money given. Oh, it looks to me like saying do certain things, and when you require a horse and a wagon and a ship and employees and agencies we will not appropriate for them. Now, it seems to me that about covers all the ground. I am inclined to think, under the special rule that has been adopted and under the so-called Holman rule, that this is in order. You have the majority on that side, and a working majority. Work your will; you are responsible. Say to this newly created bureau with its new duties perform your duties, but you shall not have the money with which to perform, and I never yet knew what it meant by Pharaoh ordering the children of Israel to make bricks without straw if straw was required, but you are requiring the same thing to be done by this newly consolidated bureau with the new duties that it has to perform. I really expect that you would really like to have the power to escape criticism by saying we have provided for all these things, and then by withholding the wherewithal to peform the functions that duty shall not be performed. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I can not but be impressed with the belief that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is laboring under a misapprehension as to what we are endeavoring to accomplish by the pending amendment. The effort is being made for the purpose of eliminating duplication of work by the consolidating into one bureau three existing bureaus, to wit, the Bureau of Statistics, the Bureau of Manufactures, and the so-called Bureau of Trade Relations in the State Department. These various bureaus deal with certain subject matters. The so-called Bureau of Trade Relations in the State Department is chargeable with the responsibility of gathering data and aiding and advising the President in the enforcement of the maximum and minimum clause of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act. The Bureau of Manufactures also has certain duties to perform in connection with our tariff law and the compilation and collection of foreign tariff laws, their translation for the information and benefit of those engaged in commerce in our own country. In the preparation of the item that is now offered as an amendment by the gentleman from South Carolina we had before us a report made by a board appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor having for its purpose the consolidation of two of these bureaus. We have adopted in this amendment the recommendation contained in that report.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I have only five minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. As I have said, we followed the recommendations contained in that report. This bureau provided for in the amendment, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, they urged in lieu of Manufactures and Statistics. Mr. Chairman, another recommendation of the commission in their report was that there should be in this new bureau a division of tariffs, for the purpose of compiling or collecting the very information provided for in detail by this amendment, and against which the gentleman from Pennsylvania directs his criticism. Now, gentlemen, how can it be contended or claimed that we are attempting to create a tariff board by this amendment. In view of his record, who can charge the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] with being in favor of an Executive-controlled tariff board when it rests within the recollection of every man here that it was through his efforts that a Tariff Board sought to be fastened upon this country by the other side was defeated during the closing hours of the last Congress?

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I suppose the gentleman from Texas agrees with the statement made that this is the law now as to the duties of the Department of Labor.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Then why in the world is it repeated in this bill that is now brought in advance of your proposition to kill the Tariff Board?

Mr. BURLESON. Because we were endeavoring to intelligently formulate a bureau to take the place of three other bureaus which now exist, two of which the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures and the Secretary of State have said before the Committee on Appropriations were engaged in duplication of work. We are endeavoring to amalgamate the duties and responsibilities of these three bureaus into one and to add thereto the duty imposed on the Bureau of Labor in relation to the comparative cost of manufactured articles here and abroad. That is the reason. The gentleman from Massachusetts, during the preparation of the last appropriation bill, propounded the query to the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, "Do not you believe that this work could be better done under one department?"

meaning the work of the Bureaus of Trade Relations and Manufactures.

When this same matter was before the committee at the time the Secretary of State suggested that this consolidation was desirable, but of course he wanted the consolidation under his department. The Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures earnestly insisted it be done, admitting the work was a duplication, but he wanted the consolidation under the Department of Commerce and Labor. We knew then it was utterly impossible to get these heads of departments to agree, and now, when we have take a report, formulated by the chiefs of these bureaus and certain eminent experts whom they have called to their assistance, and make an effort to carry into effect the recommendations contained in that report, we are charged with attempting something entirely foreign to our purpose with an effort to create a tariff board. I insist that there is no additional duty imposed upon this proposed new bureau that is not imposed upon the various bureaus we are attempting to consolidate, and a fair reading of it will drive this conviction home to any man who will take the amendment and carefully read it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. When we created the Department of Commerce and Labor we provided in that department a Bureau of Manufactures, and in the consideration of the question as to what bureaus should be transferred to the new Department of Commerce and Labor and what bureaus should be newly created in the Department of Commerce and Labor, to a certain extent this question came up for consideration. At that time it was thought desirable that the information which should go directly to the manufacturers of the country should go through and from the Department of Commerce and Labor, which is in close touch with the manufactures of the country, and not through the State Department as formerly had been the case by the issuance of monthly bulletins by the Bureau of Consular Service in the State Department.

On the other hand, it was not desirable to place the consuls of the United States under the control of the Department of Commerce and Labor and away from the control of the State Department, because, while the consuls of the United States are in the main mere commercial agents, yet there are times when they have diplomatic duties to perform, and their reports at times, if published in the way they are made, might lead to diplomatic difficulties. And we, therefore, left in the State Department the Consular Bureau and the Consular Service to obtain the information of consuls abroad and to strike out of that information, so far as publication was concerned, those matters which might lead to diplomatic troubles, and to turn the other information over to the Department of Commerce and Labor for that department to utilize for the benefit of the country and the manufactures of the country.

Now, the proposition is to abolish what is now called the Bureau of Trade Relations in the State Department, but which is the bureau in the State Department which deals directly with the consuls and which obtains the information. As at present constituted, that bureau in the State Department when it obtains information from the Consular Service crosses out that which ought not to be made public, because diplomatic only, and turns the balance of the information over to the Bureau of Manufactures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and that bureau publishes the information daily for the benefit of those in the country who may be interested in the matters involved. It does not seem to me feasible to abolish the control of the State Department over the consuls or over the consular reports on the one hand, nor does it seem to me feasible to abolish the control of the Department of Commerce and Labor over the publications made for the benefit of those interested in manufactures and foreign exportations in our country who are in close touch with that department.

I do not see any objection to the consolidation of the Bureau of Statistics with the Bureau of Manufactures, although I had hoped that when the Bureau of Manufactures was created it would gradually expand and become to a certain extent an expert and scientific bureau of the Government, which might not only publish information obtained from abroad for the benefit of manufacturers and manufactures, but also obtain original information in our country for that purpose. Of course, this proposition involves abandoning the idea of the Government giving any benefit to the manufactures of the country through obtaining original information in our own country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not myself think that this creates a tariff board, nor do I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] was quite correct in believing that there was added to the power now possessed by the Bureau of Labor the power to furnish and obtain information at the request of the President or of either House of Congress, because the act creating the Department of Labor, now called the Bureau of Labor, carried the express provision in it:

That the Commissioner of Labor is also authorized to make special reports on particular subjects whenever required to do so by the President or either House of Congress, or when he shall think the subject in his charge requires it.

And I do not see how the power that the Bureau of Labor now possesses is enlarged. I am not familiar with the information of the Attorney General, which was that these bureaus could not be consolidated. We carried a provision in the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor intending to authorize the President to consolidate all statistical bureaus, with the exception, I believe, possibly of the Department of Agriculture and possibly the War and Navy Departments. It was then the expectation that these various statistical bureaus, dealing in the gathering and compiling and publishing of information, should be consolidated as far as possible and practicable. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anyone in this House will accuse me of favoring the creation of a tariff board. Anyone who was in the last House will at least give me the credit of having prevented the creation of one. The provision that will be proposed in a little while is not intended to create a tariff board. If, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] states, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is best fitted to express the opinion of his party upon what should be done in this matter, it is but fair to say that he was present in all the conferences during which this provision was framed, and that it meets his hearty approval. There is no attempt on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to go afield in creating tariff boards. It was confronted with this situation. There was a power existing in one bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor; a consolidation was being proposed of two bureaus—the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Manufactures; the authority now resting with the Bureau of Labor in the Department of Commerce and Labor more properly belonged to such a bureau as is now being created, or enlarged, and the committee has proposed to place that power in this bureau.

There will not be a lot of political hacks placed in the places provided. There is no authority for appointments outside of the chiefs of the bureaus and of certain men who are now in the service, except of persons in the classified service. Any work that will be done will be the mere gathering of facts, and if the work be done the objection to the work of a tariff board will be eliminated, because whatever will be obtained will be facts and not conclusions of the men constituting a so-called board resulting from the facts. Under this provision investigation can be made at the direction of either House of Congress, and information be transmitted to Congress pursuant to any direction to make investigations; and this bureau will not be able to do what the tariff board did to the gentleman's committee this year, namely, decline to furnish facts upon which their conclusions were based.

This does no more than is now authorized. This House can never do any legislative work connected with the tariff without relying upon statistics and information furnished from some of the bureaus of the Government. The reports of the gentleman's committee are filled with statistics compiled by the Census Bureau, upon which the conclusions of the committee were reached. If such information can be obtained through some sort of a force under the same sort of management and control as is the information upon which the gentleman's committee is willing to act, I can not see any justification for the charge that an attempt is being made in a shrewd, ingenious way to create a tariff board. I have no sympathy with such a board, and I would not support a proposition for such a board. I believe my own conduct in the past is sufficient justification for the statement that I do not propose or desire or intend to create any such board.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman also opposed to a board of statisticians that would be appointed by the House or by the Committee on Ways and Means to furnish information to the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say very frankly that I have read several bills that have been introduced on that subject. I made a suggestion myself that was not adopted. I suggested that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means ask this House for such experts as he thought the Committee on Ways and Means should have; that they be authorized by the Committee on Accounts; and that the Committee on Appropriations would then carry them in this bill. He informed me that he still had left a balance of the money given by Congress to enable his committee to obtain the information it desired, and that at the present time it would not be possible for his committee to use additional funds if granted in that way.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not yet answered my question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am not in favor of such a board as is proposed in the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Has the commission anything to do with bringing in this amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. It had nothing to do with it. My action was entirely impersonal.

Mr. Chairman, I was about to state, so that the House would know, what the gentleman's bill proposed to do. It was to create a board, and at the beginning of each Congress should proceed to elect three members of the board, two by the majority and one by the minority. I examined the gentleman's bill, and do not think it is a scheme that would work or would be practicable.

Mr. McCALL. I understood the gentleman to say that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means had informed him that the committee had not expended all of this money that had been put at their service to get information. Now, what I wished to ask was, What evidence is there that the committee got any information whatever?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, if the gentleman had taken the trouble to read the reports of his own committee instead of the ridiculous reports submitted by the so-called Tariff Board, he would not have asked any such question. The committee reports are full of valuable information. They have analyzed a number of reports and a great amount of statistics obtained from many sources. I am informed that the majority of that committee are very content with the character of the information obtained. I do not suppose it would have been possible to have satisfied the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] and his associates, no matter what information would have been obtained. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMER. Is this the amendment covering the duties of this new bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is simply, as I understand it, the amendment striking out the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this amendment strikes out the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on page 32 I move to strike out lines 11 to 25, inclusive, and on page 33, lines from 1 to 23, both inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32 strike out lines 11 to 25, inclusive, and on page 33 strike out lines 1 to 23, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, if there is nobody to be heard in favor of the amendment, I desire recognition against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] is recognized.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment strikes out of the bill as reported by the committee the appropriations for the Bureaus of Manufactures and Trade Relations. I understand this amendment strikes out page 32, from line 11 down to and including line 23, on page 33, and of course the amendment is made necessary by the subsequent amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer as soon as this is voted upon, the next amendment being the amendment to define the duties of a new bureau, which is a consolidation of two of the bureaus now in existence.

As I said a little while ago, I am in favor of transferring the Bureau of Statistics. I support the committee's bill as they brought it into the House; and therefore, being opposed particularly to the amendment which will be offered after this is voted upon, I am of course also opposed to this amendment, which strikes certain sections out of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that if anybody here had offered to me any good reason why the powers of a Tariff Board were written into this amendment, unless they expected to give those powers to this new bureau, I would not so strongly oppose this proposition. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says it is law to-day, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] quotes the law to-day, giving the Department of Commerce and Labor all of these powers. Then this amendment offered by the committee comes in and creates a bureau in that department and gives them the powers which they now have. What is the purpose of it? If it is in the law now, why should the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. No; I have not time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will tell the gentleman the purpose if he will yield?

Mr. PALMER. I should like to hear it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The purpose is simply this: That having created a bureau with certain functions, we gather into that bureau all the functions that properly belong to it, among which are those now in the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] say the department already has full charge of it under the law. If that is the law now, why should we be asked to legislate upon it? I will tell you what I think about this thing. I know the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is absolutely honest and sincere in his opposition to a Tariff Board, but he is the chairman of a great committee, which proposes to wipe out the Tariff Board, and he knows that there will be in many sections of the country criticisms of that action. He is leaving a lifeboat for somebody to get into, and he can still say that he is opposed to the Tariff Board. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] favors this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether I do or not.

Mr. PALMER. I have great respect for the learning and ability of the gentleman from Illinois, but very little for his political judgment. His decision does not affect my action on political questions of this character. Certainly his decision will never move me to favor his proposition. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority floor leader in this House, comes forward in favor of a political proposition, submitted and supported by Democrats—I do not care what committee it comes from—I feel like quoting Virgil:

Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

[Applause.]

I am afraid to follow, and I will not follow upon this floor, the minority leader upon a great political question like this.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply submit that whatever may be the purpose of this amendment, the effect of it is going to be this, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] and others of these high-tariff Republicans, long devotees of an executive tariff board, will go out to the country in this fall's campaign after we have passed this amendment, and say that the Democratic Party have approved of their stand in creating a Tariff Board. [Applause.] I do not care if it does receive the approval of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] or of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. They are mistaken in the proposition, if for no other reason, because from the political standpoint it would be extremely unwise. If we are opposed to a Tariff Board, let us have no Tariff Board. And if, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says, we are opposed to a Tariff Board now, which is composed of clerks appointed by the President, let us not approve of a Tariff Board appointed by a political appointee of the President, subalterns in one of the departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. You must be afraid you will not have the next President.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from Connecticut will not go to the country this fall and make any such statement. He will make a statement of this kind, that the Tariff Board, which is now designated as a board of clerks, was approved; that the proposition to make it what it was intended to be was approved by the gentlemen who now denounce it as a board of clerks. When the Republican Party was in the majority these gentlemen approved it, and they denounced it as a board of clerks after the Democratic Party was in the majority. Not only that, but the Speaker of this House and every Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee voted for that proposition cheerfully and heartily in the committee on this floor, and defended it by their presence and by their voice while they were in the minority.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman should state the fact about it.

Mr. HILL. Just one minute. When they came into the majority and were responsible for legislation here, then they opposed the very proposition which they were in favor of before.

Mr. PALMER. That was in the Sixty-first Congress, and one Democratic member of the committee voted against the bill on the floor, and a large majority of the party on this side voted against the bill, and it was finally killed on this side; and none of the additional Democratic members of the committee now sitting in the Sixty-second Congress supported that proposition. And yet that was better than this.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, knowing the character of the men who supported the Tariff Board bill when they were in the minority, and knowing the character of the one man to whom the gentleman refers, I have not the slightest question but if he had then been associated with the Democratic leader on this floor and the present Speaker of the House he would have stood solid with them under those circumstances. It was only after they were in the majority that a different attitude was taken in regard to it. Now the gentleman says they have no use for it. We have had the Tariff Board report, and it was only a few weeks ago that the gentleman stood on this floor and said that they had had private, confidential communications and interviews with hundreds and thousands of men—he used the word thousands—interested in the then pending tariff bill, never a public hearing, not a word made public, but in private repudiating the action of the Tariff Board and holding secret conclaves with interested manufacturers in making up your iron and steel schedule. [Applause on the Republican side.] I shall tell the country that when I get into the campaign this fall.

Mr. PALMER. Well, you are welcome.

Mr. HILL. I shall tell the country another thing, that the gentleman who made that statement said that he was opposed to a nonpartisan Tariff Board, an independent bureau, but that he wanted a subattachment to the Ways and Means Committee which he himself said should be in political accord with the committee, Republican when they were Republicans, and Democratic when they were Democrats, when the country wants a fair nonpartisan presentation of the case.

I shall tell the country another thing, that he wanted when the Democratic Party was in the majority a Democratic Tariff Board in the House, and when the Republican Senate was in the majority that his plan would compel them to have a Republican Tariff Board in the Senate, for the Senate in these United States legislates on tariff questions as much as the House does. These are the things I shall tell the people, and I have not the slightest doubt that this country, which has already by the State platforms of 28 States in this Union indorsed the proposition of a Tariff Board, will indorse it again next fall and send back a Republican majority to the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to set right the history which has entered into this matter. As everybody knows, when the Tariff Board was proposed I fought it, and fought it with all the might and power that I had. So did the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who occupies the chair at this moment. I am willing to stand on the declarations made then. I could not improve them if I had unlimited time now.

The main assertion on the part of the Democrats in the minority of that Congress was that we did not object to receiving information from any source whatsoever on the tariff. We fought the Tariff Board, originally, largely on the proposition that it was to be appointed by the President and under the control of the President of the United States, responsive to him, and that we could not get the information unless he graciously permitted us so to do. I am as much against that proposition now as I was then. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Afterwards the distinguished gentleman now occupying the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and myself very largely induced the change to make the Tariff Board responsive, in the first place, to the House of Representatives and, in the second place, to the Committee on Ways and Means, where it ought to be, because tariff bills must, under the Constitution, originate in the House. We never did indorse that proposition which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asserts we did. He has asserted it before, but reiteration does not make it correct history. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We, you and I, Mr. Chairman, more than anybody else, induced the Ways and Means Committee to change that machinery of the Tariff Board and make it responsive to the House of Representatives and the Committee on Ways and Means. Every member of the Ways and Means Committee voted for it in the committee. Afterwards one gentleman changed his opinion, as he had a perfect right to do. I am not complaining about that. But I do not propose that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] or the gentleman from anywhere else shall misstate the facts of history, especially the facts that I helped to make. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I will tell you how we lost out, for it is an open secret. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and myself and the rest of us that had to do with that thought it was such a clear question of being right about making the tariff experts—and the thing that knocked it in the head at last was because the word "board" was used in it—we thought it was such a plain case that if tariff experts that every man recognizes can help if they are real and not bogus experts—we thought it was such a clear case of pulling Congress out of the hole that it had fallen into that we took it for granted—and it was the only time I ever took anything for granted when I was minority leader of the House, and if I was to be the minority leader for 75 years more I never would take anything else for granted again—as I say, we took it for granted that the proposition was so plain that we were rendering a public service and getting rid of an expensive incubus that we never took any pains to explain it to the Democrats or line them up, and the first thing we knew certain active propagandists on our side of the House lined up two-thirds of the Democrats against Mr. UNDERWOOD and myself and the rest of us and rolled us to a "fare you well." [Laughter and applause.]

That is the truth about that. Now, I am willing to go to the country any day on two propositions: The first one is that we do not object to getting information from any source whatsoever. Every sensible man wants it. In the second place, if the United States is going to spend money for tariff experts, they ought to get tariff experts and not a lot of politicians, great or small. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I had a little something to do about the Tariff Board myself. [Laughter.] Before we had the experience of the hearings before the committee in 1909 I opposed the tariff commission or a tariff board. I opposed it a year or two before in a speech I made to some people who waited on the late Speaker of the House and myself. We went through 8 or 10 months of pretty hard labor in the tariff hearings. I heard the gentleman from Missouri, Speaker of the House now, say that it was the hardest labor he ever did in his life, and he thought that was so with every member of the committee. He said it took from the lifetime of each member a certain amount because of the heavy work that was done in that committee; that it shortened the life of each of us.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And I say so now.

Mr. PAYNE. We did our best to get out the facts, Mr. Chairman; but we were not able to cover the whole tariff schedule. We were not able to cover the whole of it in a manner satisfactory to the men who made the bill. But we made a bill and brought it into the House, and all the Republican Members of the House voted for it with the exception of a single Member. He objected because he said the revision downward was too great. After my experience with our bill I changed my views with reference to a board of tariff experts who would have more time than the brief life of one Congress to get at the facts in the matter. And I announced it. I never took back anything I had said. I simply said I had changed my mind on the subject. Various bills were introduced here in the Sixty-first Congress. They were before the Ways and Means Committee. I went to work quietly by myself at first comparing those bills and studying them. Then I submitted the results of my labors to various gentlemen who had introduced bills, and we got a concurrence on the part of the majority on a single bill which was introduced and brought before the Ways and Means Committee. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was there. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was there. The bill was read through carefully twice in the committee so that every man might understand it, and every man had a printed copy of the bill before him when he considered it in the committee.

I asked the minority what objections they had to it, and they made but one single objection, any one of them, and that was made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and he wanted some provision in it that the results of the Tariff Board investigations be reported to the House or to Congress. When that amendment was suggested we said we would readily agree to it. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] offered such an amendment. The minority members of the committee asked for a little time. They went out into another room, they took the amendment and bill with them, and when they came back they said they were satisfied with the bill, with the amendment which was proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut. [Applause on the Republican side.] No one will deny that who was present at the time. Then we agreed unanimously to report that bill with the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman will permit, that is exactly what I said a while ago.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; not exactly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is no difference in the statement——

Mr. PAYNE. The trouble with the gentleman from Missouri is he can not make a historical statement without coloring it a little with his imagination. There is no need to do so, but he can not help it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The RECORD will show my statement is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. Everything the gentleman suggests in the matter of making history is colored a little by his magnificent imagination.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman will remember the gentleman then offered to consider it by unanimous consent the very next day, and there was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I said there was no objection. The bill was reported the next day, and it came up very soon afterwards by unanimous consent in the House, and one gentleman of the minority, my colleague from New York, over night got cold feet and he withdrew his assent to the bill.

A MEMBER. Who was that?

Mr. PAYNE. I refer to my colleague from New York [Mr. HARRISON], who made a speech in the House against it. At any rate, we passed the bill, and passed it by a large majority in the House and sent it over to the Senate, and the Senate held it for two or three months and finally sent it back with half a dozen inconsiderable amendments. We brought it up the first opportunity we had on the last day of the session, and in order to consider it before the gavel should finally fall we had a rule brought in the House so as to vote upon those amendments——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Then a filibuster commenced by gentlemen on that side of the aisle, striving to beat the bill by the lapse of time and before the gavel finally fell. We did our best to pass it. They called for the yeas and nays, and they had a sufficient number to order the yeas and nays. We passed it through from stage to stage until we got to the final vote, and then a conference report on an appropriation bill came in and carried it to the very limit of time, and no time was left to make that Tariff Board bill a law; otherwise it would be on the statute books to-day. But in the sundry civil bill another amendment was put in providing for a Tariff Board after a fashion, not as full as the Tariff Board we had proposed in our bill and not as well guarded; yet under that provision the President appointed five gentlemen on the Tariff Board, three of whom were supposed to be Republicans, although I believe one of them is a free trader in principle, and the other two Democrats of high standing. Those gentlemen went to work. They had the authority to make examinations upon various questions of the tariff. They went diligently to work. They spent $300,000 or $400,000, employed clerks and experts, and they made a tariff report to this Congress on the wool question. Why, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] says, "We welcome information from every source." No; he did not say that. He said, "We do not object to information from any source."

Do not object to it, but they do not receive it; they do not read it; they do not study it; they are not governed by it; and when they come to make a bill they sit around a table—the majority members—with the minority excluded from all the hearings they are supposed to have. Why, Mr. Chairman, they have declaimed against the Senate because the Senate had hearings which were not public, and yet in this Congress the Ways and Means Committee have not had a single hearing on the tariff question but what was in a star chamber and no Republican member even was permitted to be present. They brought in their series of bills, made up by sitting around a table with the chairman or some one else reading the draft of a bill, with a supposed expert (drawing $1,500 or $2,000 a year)—who made up the greatest schedule in the whole customs law—they sit around the table, one member suggesting one thing and one another, and without information, apparently, on the subject they fix up their bill and bring it in the House. They submit it first to the caucus, and, on a false assumption of the amount of revenue duties and a grave blunder made by the chairman of that committee in stating to the caucus that there was a deficit when there was a surplus of about $50,000,000, they got the bill through the caucus.

And then they bring it in here. Is there time for consideration and debate? No. They bring it in almost surreptitiously, and, without having time even to examine the details of it, they force it through and they force it through by sheer brute force, as they have every tariff bill they have brought in here from the beginning of the session. Was it an honest effort? Did they wait for information? No; nothing of the kind. It was not for an actual reduction. It was so that they could go out into the highways and say to the people of the United States that they had revised the tariff downward. It made no matter whether they put one item or a dozen items or a hundred items in the bill with a greater duty than there is in the present law or whether they cut so that importations would come in freely and take our market. They jammed it through the House and called it a downward revision of the tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate on this amendment and any amendments thereto in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to close debate on this amendment and amendments thereto in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we have had a very interesting experience meeting, but I think the committee is somewhat at sea as to what the amendment is that is before us. It is to strike out the section on page 32. Now, the gentleman from Texas carried the impression that that was simply the Bureau of Trade Relations. He is mistaken in that. That is not the Bureau of Trade Relations. It is far more than that. It strikes out the Director of the Consular Service at $4,500, the counselor for the Department of State at $7,500, the diplomatic offices at $7,500, and many others. It strikes out $69,000 of salary. What are those for? Those are not simply for the purpose that the Bureau of Manufactures are for. They are to carry on the business of the State Department. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] intimated that the Economy Commission had recommended its consolidation. He will not pretend that the Economy Commission recommended this.

Mr. BURLESON. Not the Economy Commission.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman said that the Economy Commission had recommended that this should be stricken out. They recommended that the Bureau of Trade Relations should be stricken out. This is far more than that, and this takes out the life of the State Department.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York said that they had started on one theory and changed their minds on new evidence. I would like to know where the new evidence came from. He said the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor had been here, but I venture to say that the Secretary of that department did not suggest that this Bureau of Trade Relations should be thrown out. I venture to say that he simply insisted that his bureau should be continued, and if there is new evidence it has not been given to our side of the committee. If there is new evidence on which a change of the bill should be made, the whole committee is entitled to hear and know of that evidence. Mr. Knox, the Secretary of State, was asked, when he was before the committee, what this new organization, covered in this paragraph, did, and he said:

> This enables us to deal in the light instead of dealing in the dark. It is a system that is followed in all the foreign offices of the world—that is, in all the important countries of the world—and, from my observation of the system that was heretofore followed in this country and this system, I do not see how we could get along without it. It would be breaking the back of the department to break down the existing organization.

And it is that organization which this paragraph endeavors to cover, and it is that organization which this amendment attempts to strike out. It is a new organization which has been built up within three years, which has made a splendid record in the State Department, which has developed our trade, and of which I think every American ought to be proud; and the Secretary says if we abolish that we are breaking down the system of the department; and yet the committee, or a majority of the committee, in the late hours of the afternoon, without any discussion or consultation with the minority, bring in this amendment striking out this part of the State Department. I believe it is shortsighted and dangerous policy. There must be some compensation, they think, if they are going to give us back the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Manufactures, which they originally struck out.

And so now, apparently, they grope around and they find this section in the State Department, and they strike that out. They have no evidence to justify them in doing so; only secret conferences, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] referred to, and yet which he did not give us any facts concerning. He did not state what they were. That is the only basis, apparently, for this change. I claim it is unjustifiable and preposterous, and the House ought to vote it down. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not have anything to do with preparing the bill that proposed to create the Tariff Commission. You have heard some of its history. I did have something to do with the drafting and the presentation, through the Committee on Appropriations, to this House of the proposition that is now before it. That proposition is simply to consolidate the work in one bureau that is now being done, more or less, in three or four.

There is nothing new created in the way of powers. There is not a line of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] says constitutes a tariff board in disguise that is not now the existing law of the land and a law with a most distinguished Democratic parentage. It was when Mills was in charge of tariff matters in a Democratic House and a Democratic President was in the White House that that law was put on the statute books, and it has been Republican administrations that have permitted it in effect to remain a dead letter. When we were creating the bureau that should deal with foreign and domestic commerce and found that these duties were imposed on the Department of Labor, we felt that logically such duties should go to this new bureau; and therefore we lifted the law exactly as it appears to-day and put it in this proposed amendment, making it part of the duties of this new bureau.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] complains very greatly because we propose to dispense with a bureau in the State Department, a bureau, by the way, that never was created for or intended to be a bureau for the general purposes that the gentleman seems to indicate. It was created for the purpose of taking care of the maximum and minimum clause of the tariff law; and so far as it had duties to perform under that clause, those duties have been performed, as testified to by the Secretary of State himself. There is no reason for a longer continuation of it.

We bring simply to this House a proposition looking to economy, looking to the prevention of duplication of work, looking to the revival of a proper law existing now, a law that was put on the statute books by Democrats. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that he does not want to follow the lead of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader. He is not asked to do it, but he is asked to follow the lead of the majority leader on this side. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I ask that instead of undertaking to do his duty by choice of personnel he undertake to point out what is wrong in the proposition. I submit the proposition not because it comes from the Committee on Appropriations. It is not necessarily good because it came from there and it is not necessarily bad because it did not come from the Committee on Ways and Means. Let it stand for what it purports to be. It is easily understood by the membership of this House.

There is much talk indulged here from time to time about consideration by committees. I believe in committee consideration; but never in my service here have I asked that a thing should be supported simply because it came from a committee. This has been considered heretofore by a committee, and it is now being considered by the greatest of all committees—the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—and I appeal to those Democrats whose protestations of economy mean something to support the committee in an honest effort to reorganize these departments. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division of the question and a separate vote on the paragraph, commencing with line 11 on page 32 and continuing down to line 4 on page 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is divisible.

Mr. MANN. Without objection, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the language read, so that the House will understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the proposition in two amendments, they being divisible. Without objection, the Clerk will read from line 11 on page 32 to line 4 on page 33. That will be the first one to be put before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Advancement of commercial and other interests as provided in the act approved August 5, 1909, and March 4, 1911; Director of the Consular Service, $4,500; counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at $7,500, and to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909; eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at $4,500 each and four at $3,000 each, to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the act approved August 5, 1909, and to be employed upon tariff, treaty, and trade relations and negotiations, any one of whom may be employed as chief of division of far eastern, Latin, American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations; assistant solicitor, $3,000; law clerk, $2,500; clerks—one of class 4, three of class 3, two of class 1, three at $1,000 each; three assistant messengers; in all, $69,160.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the language that has been read by the Clerk.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask a division.

The commitee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 52.

So the motion to strike out the language read, beginning on page 32, line 11, down to and including line 4 on page 33, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment now before the committee is to strike out all that portion of the bill from page 33, line 5 down to and including line 23. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to page 125, to strike out all from line 3 to line 20, both inclusive, and to insert a new provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 125, strike out all of lines 3 to 20, inclusive, and insert, after line 2, the following

"That hereafter the Bureau of Manufactures of the Department of Commerce and Labor shall be known as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

"The Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby consolidated with the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, to take effect July 1, 1912, and the duties required by law to be performed by the Bureau of Statistics are transferred to and shall after that date be performed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

"Those certain duties of the Department of Labor, or Bureau of Labor, contained in section 7 of the act approved June 13, 1888, that established the same, which especially charged it 'to ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production and under a classification showing the different elements of cost, or approximate cost, of such articles of production, including the wages paid in such industries per day, week, month, or year, or by the piece; and hours employed per day; and the profits of manufacturers and producers of such articles; and the comparative cost of living and the kind of living, what articles are controlled by trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor, and what effect said trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor have on production and prices' are hereby transferred to and shall hereafter be discharged by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and it shall be also the duty of said Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to make such special investigation and report on particular subjects when required to do so by the President or either House of Congress.

"Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Chief of bureau, $4,000; assistant chiefs of bureau, 1 at $3,000, 1 at $2,750; chief of Division of Consular Reports, $2,500; stenographer to chief of the bureau, $1,600; clerks, 7 of class four, 5 of class three, 1 at $1,500, 11 of class two, 14 of class one, 17 at $1,000 each; 11 at $900 each; messenger; 5 assistant messengers; 4 laborers; laborer, $480; in all, $102,610.

"To enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collate and publish the tariffs of foreign countries in the English language, with the equivalents in currency, weights, and measures of the United States of all such foreign terms used in said tariffs, and to furnish information to Congress and the Executive relative to customs laws and regulations of foreign countries, and the purchase of books and periodicals, $10,000."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this establishes a bureau not authorized by existing law, and that it does not reduce expenses. Of course, as originally offered, when combined with the consular bureaus, striking them out, it did reduce expenses, but now there is a new department here, and the only saving is the consolidation of the Bureau of Statistics. This appropriation is much larger than the appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman on the question of fact as to the saving of expense. The Chair is not informed on that proposition.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask to recur now to page 64.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In the amendment that was just agreed to it was provided that hereafter the Bureau of Manufactures shall be known as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Would it not be better to make that "after the 1st day of July, 1912"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to amend the amendment that has just been agreed to by striking out the word "hereafter" and inserting the words "from and after the 1st day of July, 1912." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment relative to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether he would prefer that I offer it now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, certainly; offer it now.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, on page 120, line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 120, after line 22, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"To further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, $60,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment, that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the amendment is not authorized by law. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, that is in the very language of the statute under which the Department of Commerce and Labor was organized. It is found on page 827 of volume 32 of the Statutes at Large.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that that same amendment was offered the other day by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and the point of order was made against it and sustained.

Mr. GILLETT. This is quite different, Mr. Chairman. I will admit that it is intended to accomplish the same purpose, but the language of the amendment is quite different.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] as to whether there is existing law for this provision.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, in section 3 of the law which provided for the Department of Commerce and Labor it says:

It shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop * * * the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States.

I think that is the language I used there.

The CHAIRMAN. It reads:

To further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States.

Mr. GILLETT. That is the language in this section here. Of course when the Chair ruled the other day on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] that amendment provided that certain offices should be created. I simply follow the words of the law.

Mr. BURLESON. And give them a lump sum, to be expended as the Secretary sees fit. He can pay it all to one man if he wants to.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply to provide what the law now provides, and I have no doubt it will be expended in the same way that the present appropriations are expended, for the maintenance of commercial agents to study trade conditions abroad and report and advance our commerce. I think the whole commercial United States is deeply interested in the work that is done by these commercial agents. I think they have shown themselves to be of great value. I think it is one of the instrumentalities by which our export trade has been largely increased, and I think that the business of the United States is going to be more and more dependent upon and helped by the reports of these commercial agents. It is simply to continue this work, which was commenced about a half a dozen years ago by a small appropriation, which, under the influence of the value of its work, has been increased year by year. It started, I think, with $20,000, and it has now become $60,000 a year. It is of great value. The business world wants it. Our consular officers can not be expected to be experts in different branches of business, and this is intended to supplement them. The present committee left it out, and I hope the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will reinsert it in this form.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, this service was provided for a few years ago because one section of our country was practically without consular representation in the service. Today we have the most efficient consular service in the world. It is thoroughly equipped and well qualified to promote the commercial interests of our country. This item was stricken out of the bill because the consular service has since that time been reorganized, and now every section of the country is fairly represented in that service, and consequently there is no real need of a continuance of these agents sought to be provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, in my judgment, this amendment should be adopted. The reason I say that is that I happen to know something about the working of this particular department of the Government. Quite an interest has been taken in the cottonseed industry by this department, an industry in which we of the southern parts of our country are vitally interested. It is only lately that our cottonseed products have become such important factors in modern life, and they are destined to become vastly more important. Only a few years ago cotton seed were allowed to rot in the field and were considered good only for fertilizers. Now the annual crop is worth more than $100,000,000. Of course, with greater and more numerous markets for them, their value and importance will correspondingly increase.

We have agents in nearly all European countries, some in the Asiatic and some in the African countries. They have been studying these things, and have added to our commerce and trade in our southern products. These southern products—and especially cottonseed products—are being sent, my Democratic friends, to foreign countries where they were never known to go before, because of the efforts of these agents of the Government; and I hope you will vote with me to continue these agencies, which are increasing and extending our trade in foreign lands. One of these agents, Mr. Julien L. Brode, happens to be from my State. I know him personally, and I have seen his reports, and I know of the good work that is being done. This is a comparatively small appropriation for this service, only $60,000, and I hope that the House will agree to the amendment offered by my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the House has already stricken out of the bill a provision for agents under the State Department for the promotion of trade relations. We have carried heretofore in the law a provision for commercial agents in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and also provision for agents under the State Department. The State Department agents have just gone out of the bill.

These commercial agents which will be covered by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts were inserted in the bill some years ago; in the first place, I think four were provided for. I think there are probably eight altogether. They were added to from time to time at the request of the southern Members of Congress, who properly desired that cotton goods, cottonseed oil, and other products of the South should be brought to the special attention of some parts of the world, including the Orient and South America.

The trade of the United States has leaped in wonderful jumps and bounds since these commercial agents were authorized; and there has been no other one thing of equal importance in increasing our trade as the work done by these commercial agents in the Department of Commerce and Labor. They have added immensely to the foreign exports of cotton goods by bringing the attention of people abroad to the goods that we manufacture here, and by bringing to the attention of the manufacturers here the possibilities of trade abroad.

They have called attention to the use of corn meal in foreign countries, and have added largely to the price of corn in this country by reason of the use of that commodity. In various directions they have brought the attention of foreigners to products that we could furnish them, and have brought the attention of our own people to the possibilities abroad. If this paragraph is not agreed to the Philadelphia Museum, a private institution, is practically the only institution left in the country engaged in furnishing practical information to the people generally upon which trade may be based and increased; and if the gentlemen on that side of the aisle, through mistaken apprehension of the work of these agents, dismisses them they will make, in my judgment, a grave mistake for their own good.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GILLETT) there were—ayes 59, noes 29.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Thirteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that beginning with line 20, on page 64, down to and including line 10, on page 65, be stricken out. It provides for an assay office in San Francisco, and we have already provided for a mint there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that on page 64, beginning with line 20, down to and including line 10, on page 65, be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FINLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6658. An act to provide for emergency crops on overflowed lands in the Mississippi Valley;

S. 2356. An act for the relief of John W. Morse;

S. 5211. An act to require the registration of vital statistics in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

S. 5362. An act to reimburse the enlisted men of the U. S. S. Georgia who suffered loss through the defalcation of Paymaster's Clerk Edward V. Lee; and

S. J. Res. 75. Joint resolution to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions in other countries.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6167) to authorize the Williamson & Pond Creek Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, Mingo County, W. Va.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at New York: Superintendent, $5,000; assayer, $3,000; superintendent of melting and refining department, $3,000; chief clerk, cashier, deposit weigh clerk, and assistant assayer, at $2,500 each; two clerks and assayer's assistant, at $2,000 each; bookkeeper, $2,350; assistant cashier and four clerks, at $1,800 each; one clerk (formerly paid from "parting and refining"), $1,600; one clerk, $1,500; private secretary, $1,400; one clerk, $1,250; seven clerks, at $1,000 each; in all, $51,100.

For wages of workmen and other employees, $80,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs, wastage in the melting department, and loss on sale of sweeps arising from the treatment of bullion, $60,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this item is raised $50,000 from the appropriation of last year on account of the intended legislation, and the next item is also raised $50,000, and another item $4,600, which makes in all $104,600 put in by virtue of an attempt to do away with the assay offices and mint. Is that not correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is not correct at all; there is no foundation for any such assumption. The fact is that under the law the mints and assay offices make certain charges for assaying bullion. They have been allowed to use that appropriation in employing workmen and running the assay office. The law now provides that that money shall be covered into the Treasury, and we are simply increasing the appropriation so as to provide for the force that they already have.

Mr. RAKER. One other question. This was not intended for that purpose, but was intended as an increase of appropriation necessitated by the New York office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It had nothing to do with the other assay offices or the mint.

I now ask that the Clerk return to page 85, the Naval Observatory, the item passed over by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read the items under the head of Naval Observatory.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I now ask to return to section 4, page 138, for the purpose of offering an amendment. The section has already been read.

Mr. GILLETT. It has been read, and I reserve the right to move to strike out the paragraph, and I now move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 138, line 6, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "except the forecasters in the Weather Bureau."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We do not object to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is the question before the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] ought to be agreed to, but it illustrates what the proposition of the bill is. Here is a proposition in the bill which provides that no vacancy in the District in any office in the classified service can be filled by original appointment. No one can be appointed to a vacancy unless it is somebody already in the service. Here is the office that Dr. Wiley filled. If this provision goes into the law, that office can not be filled except by somebody now in the classified service in the District of Columbia. You can not call in anyone from the outside, although they may be in the service enforcing the pure-food law. You could not appoint anybody from the civil-service register. Take the Bureau of Standards, where they have a large number of scientists, some called physicists. If one of those gentlemen dies or resigns, there is no way of filling the place except by appointment of some other person now in that service, and in the end no way of filling the final vacancy, because there is no one qualified to fill it in the Government service, and you can not make an original appointment.

Now, do gentlemen mean that these scientific places in the Government can not be filled at all during the next fiscal year, because that is what section 4 provides, unless you propose to name janitors now in the service as scientific experts to fill some vacancies in place of somebody who dies or resigns or goes out of the service; and if the gentleman from South Carolina had not offered the amendment which he has on the Weather Bureau, if some forecaster here should leave the service you could not fill the place by appointing a forecaster who is now outside of the District of Columbia. How absolutely ridiculous such a proposition is.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee but a moment. We believe that in practically every bureau, in every division of the Government, the force is excessive, but the Committee on Appropriations has not sufficient information to know just where that force can be cut without impairing the public service. In order, therefore, that the force might be reduced and at the same time nobody be turned out of office, we have provided in this bill that during the next fiscal year no vacancy shall be filled except by promotion, and that would then enable the department, wherever the chief clerk or a clerk of class 4 should resign or die, to promote men all along the line. We contemplate that the vacancies would be left in the lowest grades of office. We further provide, in order that there may be no difficulty in carrying on the affairs of the Government, that the President shall have ample power, if it is found that the force is short in any particular bureau or division, to transfer men from any other bureau or any other division in the service of the Government.

Now, gentlemen, there is no trouble about it. It is intended to carry on the work of the Government in an efficient way. It is intended at the same time, by not filling vacancies by original appointment for a period of one year, to reduce the excessive force now in the departments. Oh, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that Dr. Wiley's position can not be filled. The President has until the 1st day of July to fill Dr. Wiley's place. I apprehend that there are few bureaus or divisions of the Government where, if a man were to die or resign, his place could not be filled by some man already in the work. We did except the forecasters in the Agricultural Department, because it is the custom with that department to bring in forecasters from the country to fill vacancies. With that exception, the committee sees no reason why we should not adopt this section as it is written into the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, just one word. During the last three fiscal years the officials of the Treasury Department, on their own initiative, reduced the clerical force of that department by 506 employees. This fact impressed your committee with the belief, and it was concurred in by those with whom we consulted, that similar reductions can be made in other departments. In fact Gen. Wood, speaking for the War Department, came before the committee and said that the clerical force of the War Department could safely be reduced 25 per cent. Your committee did not want to take any radical action. Your committee wanted to give the heads of the departments an opportunity to exercise their discretion in bringing about reductions. We desired that these officials should adjust the clerical forces of the various divisions and bureaus of the various departments so as to bring about reductions without any injury to the service. This item practically liquefies the classified service throughout all the departments for the next fiscal year and gives the opportunity of reducing the force in these various departments to the extent that vacancies will occur during the year. That is all there is of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, just one word on my amendment. The gentleman from Illinois has expressed better than I could the reason why I think this paragraph ought to be stricken out, but in answer to what my colleagues on the subcommittee have said, the very fact that the Treasury Department has cut down the force of clerks within the last three years shows that they are doing the best they can; that the force is down to a bedrock basis, and that we ought not to go any further. The department has been able to do that, not simply because they had too many clerks, but they did it by introducing new labor-saving devices, which largely enabled them to make this reduction. But this provision assumes that in all the departments there are too many clerks and that in the course of a year not more will die or resign than will leave enough to do the work. That is an assumption for which there is absolutely no basis. See in what a condition it leaves the Treasury. See the power the clerks have. A dozen clerks or three clerks or one clerk in a little bureau may be doing work where he knows he is indispensable. He knows that they can not get along with less clerks and he knows if he goes out that they can not fill his place. He can be as insubordinate or lazy as he pleases and yet the department can not hold over him the authority of bringing in somebody else, because the law forbids that any new clerk shall be appointed.

I think it is a preposterous provision. If the committee wants to effect economy and have the right number of clerks, the way is to decide how many clerks there should be and appropriate for them, but not by such guesswork as this to say that in this year no more clerks will die or resign than can be spared.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, let us take up section 5.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 9.

Mr. MANN. What becomes of the sections? Do we not take them up in regular order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I called up section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I called up section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] later.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 139, line 13, after the word "appointed," insert the following:

"And provided further, That in reducing the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Do not the sections come in regular order?

Mr. GILLETT. I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that all these sections have been read. Unanimous consent was granted that they could be called up again for amendment.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be more convenient to take them up in the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed which sections the gentlemen wish to move amendments to.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia and then come back to it. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 142, line 25, after the word "appropriations," insert the following:

"Provided, That the Department of Agriculture shall be exempted from the provisions of this section."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we have not reached that section yet. Let us first dispose of section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that these sections have been read and the committee amendments agreed to, and that unanimous consent was granted that individual Members could go back and offer amendments. The gentleman in charge of the bill stated that he had no further amendments to offer. The Chair is not a mind reader. It is impossible for the Chair to know until a gentleman takes the floor to what section of the bill he desires to offer an amendment, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] having the floor, and having the right under unanimous consent——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the Chair to this fact: At the time the gentleman from Virginia took the floor section 5 was before the committee. One amendment had been adopted, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] had announced that he moved to strike out. Of course, any amendment to amend that would have the preference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] did not announce it until the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that the orderly manner is to dispose of each of these paragraphs before we pass to another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from New York. But, as the Chair has stated, he is not a mind reader, and when a gentleman takes the floor it is impossible for the Chair to know what his motion is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point I make is that section 5 being undisposed of, it is not in order to make amendments to some other parts that have not yet been reached.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] withdraws his amendment. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. At this hour I do not want to detain the committee. At the same time this is such an important matter that I do wish very briefly to state my opinion upon it. I think one of the most important questions before the House to-day is the question intended to be dealt with by this section—the question of superannuation. And while I do not at all agree with this section as reported by the committee, yet I think it but fair to the majority to say that I do think something ought to be done and that I think the committee was actuated by an earnest desire to find some remedy.

While I think their remedy was a crude one, yet something certainly ought to be done to check the disease. It is a disease that must be remedied or else it will grow until we are obliged to take a very much worse cure, I fear, than what is now suggested by the commitee.

Now, I have an individual opinion as to what is the proper remedy. I may be wrong, but I have studied the question a great deal, and it seems to me there are only three ways of meeting it. One is this way, suggested by the committee, to give a fixed tenure of office to everybody in the service and thereby all need of pensions is done away with. Another is a straight pension; that is, to give to everybody when he retires or reaches a certain age a pension. And the third, which I think is the best way and the way which would cure it permanently, is a contributory pension bill; in other words, a compulsory saving system.

I have in the past expressed my views on that subject at length. A bill was reported from the committee last session on the subject, which, although it does not entirely meet my views, is yet the best proposition that has been suggested. The pending provision, in which it is proposed that everybody shall go out of the service after five years, is a very crude way to remove the difficulty. I had proposed to discuss it somewhat exhaustively, but it is now so late that I shall not take further time. But I think it is a serious question that must be seriously confronted soon and almost any remedy is better than the present unsettled conditions, for now while the law absolutely forbids a pension yet in many departments and bureaus a practical pension system does exist. It differs in literality according to the caprice of the head of the bureau. As it is unlawful it has to be furtive and unacknowledged. No employee can depend upon it, and it is the most expensive, demoralizing, unequal, and unfair kind of a pension system. I think the committee in charge of such legislation ought to report a bill and the whole subject should be considered and finally settled by Congress, but this proposition is a halfway measure which has not been prepared with the care and study the subject deserves and ought not to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What is the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to strike out the paragraph. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. To section 6, page 140, Mr. Chairman, we have no amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] is recognized.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, on page 139, after the word "department," beginning on line 16, I move to strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on the amendment. The amendment should have been offered to perfect the text before the motion to strike out the section had been voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It is customary and proper to allow a gentleman to perfect before he moves to strike out, but it is not out of order for the gentleman from South Carolina to move to strike out a portion of the paragraph now, the paragraph not having been passed, unless some gentleman wants to perfect that portion of the paragraph.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to one thing, and that is that the part that I moved to strike out provides—

> That no person separated from the classified service under this provision shall directly or indirectly solicit indorsement for reappointment through any member of the legislative department, and any person violating this provision shall be denied reappointment: And provided further, That no head of an executive department shall receive or consider from any member of the legislative department any request for the reappointment of any person seeking employment in the classified service; and it shall be considered a violation of law for any member of the legislative department to submit to any executive officer a request for the reappointment of any person in said classified service.

Now, I want to ask the membership of the House a question. I was in favor of the first part of the proposition; that is, limiting the length of service, the tenure. But here is a Representative in Congress who has constituents. They have appealed to him and claim that they have been unfairly treated, that they have been wrongfully dealt with, in being discharged from the Government service, and if he makes a request he, the Congressman, violates the law. I do not believe Congress is ready to inaugurate any such legislation, and so I hope that this part of the provision will be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] to strike out the paragraph on page 139, beginning on line 16 and continuing on down to and including line 3 on page 140.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if we do not want to return to the spoils system—and I do not think Congressmen ought to have any patronage—I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FINLEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 38.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FINLEY and Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next section is section 6, and the next after that is section 7.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves that section 6 be stricken out. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire recognition?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the act of 1882 forbids any appropriation to be used for the employment of personal services in the District of Columbia unless such employment is authorized by the act making the appropriation.

This section provides that anyone violating that act shall be dismissed from office and subject to both fine and imprisonment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is the situation: We make an appropriation of, say, $50,000 for a certain purpose in one of the departments, and it is up to the department to decide whether they shall carry out the purpose of the act, if they are required to have personal services in the District of Columbia thereby, or not carry out the appropriation. We make the appropriation of $50,000, which requires some personal services in the District of Columbia. The law says that they shall not employ personal services in the District of Columbia out of the appropriation unless specifically warranted; but the appropriation says nothing about it. You can not carry out the purpose of the appropriation without employing personal service in the District of Columbia, and the department must determine whether they will use the money for personal services within the District of Columbia or not.

There have been some cases which have gone to the Comptroller of the Treasury to determine whether the appropriation authorized the use of personal services in the District of Columbia out of the appropriation, and the comptroller has been in doubt. In some cases, resolving the doubt in favor of carrying out the purpose of the appropriation, he has said that it would authorize personal services in the District of Columbia, and in other cases he has said that it would not. Now, this bill proposes that an official of the department shall determine, at his peril—first, that he shall be summarily dismissed if he decides wrong, and, second, that he may be fined and imprisoned. That is not a fair burden to cast upon anybody for construing a law which is in doubt.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman the decisions to which he refers?

Mr. MANN. I have the cases. I have the decisions of the comptroller, but I have not the time to read them now. The other day we made an appropriation on the agricultural appropriation bill in a lump sum. You could not carry out the purposes of that appropriation without employing personal services in the District of Columbia, in my opinion. I heard a gentleman on the floor say that, in his opinion, you could. Now, is the department officer who expends the money to be imprisoned because he exercises his best judgment? Sometimes he can get the Comptroller of the Treasury to tell him and sometimes he must act before the comptroller can pass upon the question. It seems to me altogether too harsh a remedy. I have no objection to a proper remedy, but to say that if a man, not intentionally, not purposely, violates the law, but if he makes a mistake of judgment, not knowing which way to turn, Congress, on the one hand, telling him to do a certain thing and giving him the money with which to do it, and, on the other hand, telling him that under certain conditions he must not employ personal services in the District of Columbia, it is up to him. He has to follow the act of Congress and employ personal services if he carries out the purposes of the appropriation, and if he does not carry out the purposes of the appropriation, then we scold him for that. If he does carry it out and employs personal services, then we propose to fine and imprison him for that. It is too harsh a remedy.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just a word. In 1882 Congress enacted the law referred to in this section, which prohibits the heads of any of the departments here in Washington from employing personal service in the District of Columbia unless the personal service is specifically appropriated for. For 30 years the law has been upon the books, and it has been violated constantly, and there was no penalty for its violation. We are simply trying to have good administration. We want the departments to use the force we give them in the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out section 6.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 50, noes 78.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GARNER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 100. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 308):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Friday, May 10, 1912.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 6, as follows:

In lieu of the words "less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month" I move to insert "more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 4, after the word "person," the word "willfully."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 140, line 4, after the word "person," insert the word "willfully."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this would simply provide that the penalty should ensue where the person willfully violated the section.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It just simply nullifies the law. A man is presumed to know what he is doing.

Mr. MANN. It is a common expression in the criminal statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN), there were—ayes 47, noes 73.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph is section 7. If there is no amendment offered, the next paragraph is section 8. If no amendment is offered to that, the next paragraph is section 9.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 142, line 25, after the word "appropriations," insert the following:

"Provided, That the Department of Agriculture shall be exempted from the provisions of this section."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this amendment only keeps the Division of Publications in the Agricultural Department, just where it is now. It does not transfer the duties of that division over to the Government Printing Office.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I should like to ask the gentleman just where his amendment comes in. I could not catch it.

Mr. LAMB. At the bottom of page 142, after word "appropriations," in line 25.

Mr. RAKER. Will my distinguished friend from Virginia submit to a question?

Mr. LAMB. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Who has charge of that division in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. LAMB. A gentleman by the name of Arnold.

Mr. RAKER. Joseph A. Arnold?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. One of the most competent men in the service, is he not?

Mr. LAMB. He is very competent. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word.

The provision for centralizing the distribution of all Government publications in the Government Printing Office is in line with the recommendation of the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, which estimated that a great saving would result therefrom. So far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned the actual saving would be very small, and the inconvenience and interruption to its work would be very great, if not disastrous. It is undoubtedly true that the cost of hauling publications from the Printing Office to the department and back to the Union Station would be eliminated, the expenditure for which service is only about $2,000 a year, which is more than offset by the convenience and advantage of the immediate personal supervision of the distribution by the department. The total appropriation for salaries, rent, materials, and so forth, of the Division of Publications of the Department of Agriculture for the year ended June 30, 1911, was $202,730, with which it edited, illustrated, indexed, and read the proof of 1,253 publications, and received, stored, wrapped, addressed, and mailed 27,500,000 copies of publications. The appropriation of the office of the superintendent of documents, Government Printing Office, in whose office it is proposed to centralize the distribution of all publications, for the same year was $255,884, with which he distributed only 3,644,600 publications.

It will be seen by comparison that with an expenditure of about $32,000 less than that of the office of the superintendent of documents the Division of Publications distributed more than eight times as many publications. In justification of the distribution of documents by the Government Printing Office an ideal theory of handling the documents has been evolved, which long and intimate experience with the actual conditions under which publications are distributed seems impracticable. The proposed plan assumes that automatically and without delay the publications will be passed from the Printing Office to the mailing room of the superintendent of documents; then passed through wrapping, sealing, and addressing machines; and thence at once to the Union Station, scarcely halting on the way and requiring no storing or handling. Were the publications of the Government, or at least of the Department of Agriculture, distributed at once upon issue to persons whose addresses were maintained by permanent lists, is it probable that machinery could be installed which would do the work; but the bulk of the distribution by the department is to miscellaneous applicants for which no mailing lists are maintained. It is absolutely necessary, therefore, for the department to keep a supply of publications of all kinds and send out copies upon request, which it is prepared to do with promptness and accuracy. It is very doubtful if the Government Printing Office is prepared or could equip itself to take over the distribution of publications of this department. It is doubtful, without alteration of the law, whether the distribution of publications could be separated from the department, as it is a function enjoined upon the department by the act creating it. It is believed that the distribution can be more efficiently, intelligently, and more promptly done by the department than by the Public Printer.

Once the distribution of documents is turned over to the Public Printer, the correspondence will gradually be diverted to that official. Now, the publications are not like supplies, to be sent out in quantities as requested, but in their distribution expert judgment and knowledge is required which the Government Printing Office does not possess. There is a specific provision of law for the distribution of Farmers' Bulletins by the Department of Agriculture. If the distribution by the department has been satisfactory to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates it would seem that no change in the method should be made. Even if the distribution were taken away from the department, it would still be obliged to maintain a considerable force of clerks to make orders and handle the correspondence, and would still require the building which it now occupies. As a matter of fact, the entire cost of labor in handling that part of the department's work which it is proposed to transfer to the superintendent of documents was, for the fiscal year 1911, $48,333.20. Nor can the superintendent of documents avoid using large storage space, as the printing of large editions is cheaper than when many small editions are ordered, and the delay in securing new editions is ofttimes from four to six weeks. Even if the order for the mailing of the bulletin were on hand when the edition was issued, many of the addresses would be of only casual applicants, which it would not pay to cut on stencils, and they would have to be addressed by hand, and the filling of the envelopes done by hand the same way. Therefore the statement of the committee that the new plan will effect an important economy by saving rent is unfounded, and as his storage space is now crowded he would require another building.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the President has an Economy Commission which has been investigating various matters in order to bring about economy in expenditures. This commission has investigated the matter of public documents. Any Member can see almost any day in the year great loads of documents being hauled from the Government Printing Office to other departments of the Government. These documents are wrapped in the Government Printing Office before they are sent to the departments. After they are sent to the Departments they are unwrapped and before they are sent out they are wrapped again, and then the wagons take them to the post office or to the Union Station.

This committee reports that if public documents were mailed out from the Government Printing Office instead of from the departments, as they are now, it will save $200,000 a year. The President has sent a message to Congress to that effect.

Mr. LEVER. Can the gentleman state how much would be saved in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not say how much would be saved in any one particular department; but if we are going to stop the Government from hauling documents to the departments and then from the departments back to the Union Station, why should we except one department and not all of them? [Applause.]

So we put this item in the bill, because it is good legislation. It is in the interest of economy. There is no place in Washington where they are so equipped for mailing documents as they are at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. LAMB. All I am asking is that you exempt the Agricultural Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; and then the other fellows will want us to exempt them. What you people believe in is economy, but you want the other fellow to economize. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMB. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Is there room enough in the Government Printing Office to do all this work?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Public Printer has a large space that he is not now occupying. He has all the machines; he has an organized force for mailing out public documents, and he said that he could do a very large amount of the work in addition to what he is now doing without increasing his force or without increasing the expense, because these overhead charges, this equipment he has, must be kept up, whether he has documents enough to keep it busy two hours of the day or eight hours of the day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is not a matter of recent recommendation. As early as 1882 a commission was appointed under a resolution of the House of Representatives, consisting of Mr. Spofford, Librarian of Congress; Mr. Baird, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; and Mr. John G. Ames, superintendent of documents in the Department of the Interior, a man who was recognized as the foremost document expert of his time. They pointed out the gross extravagance that came from the system of distributing public documents from the various departments of the Government. This reform has been recommended on many occasions by the Public Printer, the superintendent of public documents, and lately by the Economy Commission.

At present these documents are printed in the Government Printing Office. It is necessary to wrap and tie and ship them to the departments for which they are intended. They are then handled two or three and sometimes four times before being handled for issue. Under the system of distribution here proposed the departments for which the documents are printed will have complete control over those to whom the documents are to be sent. The handling of the documents three, four, and five times unnecessarily will be eliminated.

In the report upon this matter by the Economy Commission it was pointed out that a saving of $242,000 a year would be effected by this consolidation. The commission points out that the Department of Agriculture, particularly, has its publications located in offices far away from those who have charge of the issuance of the publications.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose a constituent asked for a publication by the Agricultural Department, how would that be ordered from the Public Printing Office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Through the Department of Agriculture. And I wish to say that the new post-office building is to be located within a short distance—directly across the street—from the Government Printing Office, and it is proposed that a system of pneumatic tubes will be installed, so that when a publication is called for by the department it will be shipped out at once, and time will be saved, as well as money.

Mr. COOPER. One other question. Suppose a Representative sent a request there for mailing one of the Farmers' Bulletins or the Yearbook, under whose frank would it go out?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would go as at present—under the gentleman's frank. The number of documents, the disposition of documents, the control of documents by the departments, the records of them will not be affected, but it is desired to concentrate right where the documents are printed all the publications issued, so that they will be taken from the press and distributed from where they are printed. The records will be kept in the various departments. By the installation and concentration of the distribution of publications of all departments at this one place a great economy will be effected.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to except one department of Government we might as well except them all.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I find on the top of page 142 this language:

> And each head of such executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall furnish from time to time to the Public Printer mailing lists, in convenient form, and changes therein, for use in the distribution of publications issued by such department or establishment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the permanent mailing list of the departments, and the Division of Distribution is to be furnished with a list up to date so that there will be no delay.

Mr. COOPER. Might I ask the gentleman from New York one other question? A number of gentlemen talking here have thought that if this were to pass in the form in which it is now being discussed it would result in publications going out from the Printing Office under a frank of the department as a Government publication.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. There is no intention and no desire to change the present method in that respect; but by a concentration of the distribution of the documents right at the place where they are printed, where the space is available and where the force could be so organized as to do the most efficient work, great economy and efficiency would be effected.

There was held in this city last year an exhibit of labor-saving office devices. A great number of machines were exhibited here by which documents and all kinds of publications can be so handled as to be wrapped and addressed and ready to go from the machine into the post office. With the location of the new post office the documents as they come out of the machine could go into a pneumatic tube and go directly to the trains which are to transport them out of the city.

Mr. COOPER. One more question. On page 142, line 6, it says:

> And the Public Printer shall furnish copies of any publication only in accordance with the provisions of law or the instruction of the head of a department or establishment issuing the publication.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is to prevent any misunderstanding that the Public Printer has control of the distribution of these documents. That is to continue the rights of everybody as they are at present over the distribution of documents.

Mr. COOPER. Then I would like to ask the gentleman from New York——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York this question: It could not be interpreted, from line 6 down to the end of line 9, as meaning that the head of the department or establishment issuing the publication could or would direct or order that the publication should go out under the frank of the department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. PALMER. Is this correct, that as to the distribution of documents by Members who make a request of a department that the only difference from the present system would be that the Member's frank would be sent from the department up to the Printing Office, whereas now the document itself is sent from the Printing Office back to the department and from the department to the station?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. More than that. It goes from the Printing Office to the department, back to the post office, and then goes to the station, thousands of tons of it.

Mr. PALMER. That makes it all the worse.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am not against the general proposition, but I would like the gentleman to answer this question. On line 8, after the word "law," I read:

> Or the instruction of the head of the department or establishment issuing the publication.

Referring back to the proposition that these documents are issued under the provisions of the law or at the discretion of a head of these departments. Now, then, take the agricultural bulletins issued by the Department of Agriculture. I do not remember the law on the subject, but assuming that there is no law, would the Public Printer or the Secretary of Agriculture have the right to say that I as a Member of Congress shall not have or shall have the right to issue our bulletins printed by the department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there is no intention of changing in any respect the present law. The provision in the agriculture bill controls the distribution of the bulletins by Members. Now there are in addition a number of bulletins printed by the Department of Agriculture over which it has complete control, and this is to prevent any construction that the Public Printer would have control of the distribution of them.

Mr. LEVER. This language that I have referred to relates entirely to publications not controlled by law and are issued by the heads of departments entirely. Is that true?

Mr. LAMB. This is transferring all the equipment and everything over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does; it turns over all the distribution.

Mr. LAMB. And that is what I object to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It concentrates it; it abolishes a number of distributing agencies. If this provision is not feasible, not desirable, not good for the Department of Agriculture, it should not be adopted for any of the departments. Mr. Chairman, in order not to treat any department as a favorite, if the Department of Agriculture or any other department be excepted from the operation of this provision, I shall move to strike the entire provision from the bill. This provision is designed to effect an important reform and an important economy, and I do not propose that gentlemen in a department of the Government, in violation of the instructions of the President, shall circulate proposed substitutes, prepare proposed amendments, and endeavor to build up an opposition here to a committee simply because some gentleman may believe or some bureau or a department may imagine that they can return favors for favors received.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment, and if my colleague will hear me one minute——

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] has been recognized once and is not entitled to recognition now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York first whether there would be any objection to inserting into this section the words "or franked slips"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. So that when that part of it is reached it will say that the department shall furnish from time to time to the Public Printer mailing lists in convenient form, or changes therein, or franked slips, for use in the distribution of publications.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There would be no objection to that, except I do not wish to be understood that there will be no objection to the furnishing of addressed frank slips. The addressing should be done at the place where the distribution is to be made.

Mr. MANN. That depends. You might want to send blank franked slips to be pasted on, in order to have the publications sent in bulk to your office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. There will be nothing in that to require them to address the franked slip. Now, may I ask the gentleman further: Suppose a Member of the House gets a letter asking for publications of a certain character. He very often, probably constantly, sends such a letter to the Department of Agriculture, and in course of time gets back a reply stating that certain bulletins or circulars have been sent to the correspondent. What will be the process now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He would send his communication to the Department of Agriculture, which has the record of the quota of the gentleman, and they would arrange for the sending of the blanks to the distribution office and would notify the gentleman the same as at present.

Mr. MANN. Now, what they do is to notify us that they have sent the bulletins. Under this provision I suppose they would notify us that they would send them if the Public Printer would send them out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think there would be any trouble about that. If the bulletins were to the credit of the Member, they would be sent out, and the Department of Agriculture would keep that record.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman sends out as many bulletins as I do, he doubtless has discovered a long time ago that he frequently asks for bulletins that are not in print and are not sent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the bulletins would be in print and available if the department had ordered them. The Public Printer would have no discretion as to the particular bulletins to be sent. But the department itself would have the record.

Mr. MANN. Exactly. How would you know whether they would be sent out? The department might not know they had sent them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume this organization, when it received an order from the department, would promptly send the bulletin out.

Mr. MANN. The Department of Agriculture is the only department that uses franked slips to send out documents; but most of the franked slips we send out, outside of the Farmers' Bulletins, are sent to the folding room of the House. But if it is advisable, as I am inclined to think it is, to avoid the transshipment across the city between the Printing Office and the Agricultural Department, why is it not equally advisable to avoid the expense of transportation between the Printing Office and the folding room of the House of Representatives? Why could we not just as well send our franked slips to the superintendent of the folding room and have him transmit them to the Public Printer, so that they can be sent out of stock in the Public Printing Office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that, personally, I think that would be performing a great economy.

Mr. MANN. But it would interfere with Democratic patronage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A bill has now passed the Senate that provides for some such arrangement. I am not concerned with the persons who may be affected. I do not know them, and I am not particularly interested. I desire to see this adopted because it will be the beginning of a movement that would compel both Houses of Congress to abolish the folding rooms and concentrate all of that work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no employees in the Department of Agriculture and none in the folding room of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Neither have I.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and I wish you would stop the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] while I have it. I had been recognized some moments before.

Mr. Chairman, I come from a great agricultural district—the greatest in the United States—[cries of "Oh!"]—and I am going to follow the advice of the leading farmer of the House of Representatives—JOHN LAMB, of Virginia. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Of Richmond, Va.

Mr. CLAYTON. He is right on this proposition. This city farmer from the city of Chicago [Mr. MANN] and this city farmer from the city of Brooklyn [Mr. FITZGERALD] are both dead wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. They know less than the city farmer from Richmond. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. They know less than the city farmer from Virginia. [Laughter.] He is right in this matter as to the distribution of these farmers' bulletins, and I intend to support his proposition. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"] Now, some gentlemen say "Vote!" You do not know what a good speech you are going to miss by calling for a vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the most valuable publication in behalf of the greatest industry of the United States, to wit, the farming industry, although you city farmers may not have found that out, is the bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture. [Applause.] And we ought to follow the suggestions of the gentleman from Virginia, the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I shall support most heartily the amendment offered by the gentleman. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let us have a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the balance of the section. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] I move to strike out section 9, and I wish to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 141 and 142 strike out all of section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion the other day to refer to the efforts of some gentlemen upon this side of the House to assist the Committee on Appropriations in carrying out the pledges of the Democratic Party to effect reforms and to retrench public expenditures. If the Democratic Members of this House imagine for a moment that, to use the vernacular, I may be made the "goat" of this House, that they are to beg me to save the party by keeping down the appropriations and then every time they are affected by any proposition that may be proposed in the interests of economy they will vote against it and then have me meekly shoulder the responsibility for the failure of the party to meet its obligations, they are very much mistaken. [Applause.]

I noticed to-day certain distinguished gentlemen upon this side of the House who have been making campaign speeches in the interest of economy voting against the Committee on Appropriations on certain matters on which they could have had no interest whatever except a political interest. I am compelled, regardless of the interests of my constituency, regardless of the wishes that may be entertained by those upon whose support I depend for my place in this House——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not yield.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not yield. I did not refer to the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. It is not proper, it seems to me, for the gentleman to lecture the Members of this House. I will vote as I please.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from California makes a mistake. I did not have him in mind. I referred to certain distinguished Democrats in the House. [Laughter and applause.]

I am compelled, Mr. Chairman, in carrying out the work imposed upon me by the Democratic Party to ignore the wishes of my constituency, to ignore the demands that they make because of purely local and selfish interests, and to put myself out where I will be a mark for every political guerrilla, in an honest attempt to make it possible for the Democratic Party to succeed in the next campaign. I do not propose to go through this House during the balance of the session and let every other gentleman run to cover, and let everybody else take care of himself, and then at the end of the session place the blame upon me for the failure of the party to live up to its pledges.

The committee over which I preside, regardless of the effect upon themselves, regardless of the effect upon their districts, regardless of the effect upon those in the departments who may have favored them or withheld favors from them, have honestly recommended reforms upon which there could be no division of opinion, in order to do that which the country expects from the party; and if gentlemen upon this side of the House wish to join those upon the other side in making futile the work of this committee, they might just as well understand now as later in the session that the responsibility will be fixed upon them.

The President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Economy Commission, and everybody who has ever looked into the matter and had no local interests or political interests to advance recommended the abolition of the mints and assay offices as proposed by the committee.

There was no political division in the Committee on Appropriations upon the question. It is immaterial to me whether those mints and assay offices continue to exist or are abolished. I have no desire to antagonize the Members by recommending things that may be unpopular or distasteful to them; but during this session I shall continue to insist upon presenting to this House recommendations that will carry out the pledges of the Democratic Party. [Applause.] If the Democratic Party fails to reduce the appropriations made by a Republican Congress—and they are very likely to fail if they continue as they have been doing—they must shoulder the responsibility; I shall not do so. If they bring defeat upon the party by their action, it is what they have a right to expect will come. Since the House has indicated a disposition not to have a thorough reform I ask, rather than to favor a sham reform, that this paragraph be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. FITZGERALD] in his efforts along various lines to economize. He has labored earnestly to bring about legislation to accomplish this end. But we have many districts in the United States, represented by gentlemen who are looking out or should look out for the best interests of their constituents and for the welfare of the entire country, and who can not, in every instance, see things as the gentleman from New York sees them. These gentlemen feel it their duty to express their views, to vote in accordance with their convictions, and to represent the wishes of their people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not want my good friend from New York to be in the least worried or irritated because once or twice to-day we have seen fit to advocate one or two amendments that we thought should be adopted. Everything will come out all right.

The high priest of protection from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said to-day, but said it feebly, "We will elect another Republican House." Where will you get the votes? Your old stand-pat party is torn wide open, and thousands of honest Republicans are coming into the Democratic Party. While the door is still open I bid you come and we will baptize you into the faith of the Democratic fathers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to say to my good friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that this committee bill has covered in its provisions three great departments. It contains more than 100 pages, and I think, gentlemen, that you have done remarkably well to get through with only a few changes made in it. I congratulate you and the party for good work accomplished for the people in this House. We are harmonious and militant; we have kept the faith, and the people everywhere are indorsing our work. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say to the gentlemen on the other side that, in spite of their efforts to create division over here, under the splendid leadership of the Speaker of this House, and the majority leader, OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, we have been united and harmonious throughout the session. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There has been no serious friction anywhere. We have not and we will not permit anybody to divide us now. You gentlemen on the other side devoted some time to condemning the Democratic caucus. You held caucuses yourselves until you became so divided and broken that you could not have a caucus. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We will continue to hold caucuses in our efforts to carry out the principles for which Thomas Jefferson stood. [Applause on Democratic side.] The people will indorse what we do. From one end of the country to the other they are indorsing it now, and we rejoice that the day is near at hand for a general sweeping Democratic victory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. FOSTER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the House, but my explanation of the position I have assumed to-night is predicated upon the belief that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] seeks to perpetuate to the largest extent the usefulness of the Agricultural Department. [Applause.] I think it is a false economy to begin to practice cutting down the expenditures of the Government in the Agricultural Department. [Applause.]

Let us keep the service of the Agricultural Department up to the highest state of efficiency; and because I think it promotes the great agricultural interests of this country in the highest degree, following the leadership of the chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture, is the reason why I favor his amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to close all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to have anything to say about this provision or the vote that had been taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], but I am satisfied that three-fourths of those who voted for his amendment voted under a misapprehension. I am not going to lecture anybody on this side or undertake to lecture, but I know gentlemen walked in on the floor of this House and voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia without knowing what the original proposition was, because they came in after gentlemen on the floor had made an explanation of the provision in the bill. Now, my friend from Alabama has made a very vigorous speech. He has heralded the farmer and the Agricultural Department, in which we are all interested and in which I am interested as greatly as he, and he has succeeded in making an impression upon his own mind and upon the minds of the other gentlemen here that there is something in this bill that hinders or prevents the sending out of the bulletins of the Agricultural Department. He did not state what it was, because he did not know, and nobody else knows.

If he will read the provisions of the bill, he will find it simply means if this provision in the bill is adopted that the Government could save the amount of money it costs to haul across this city and back the voluminous publications for the Agricultural Department and other departments, and that they will be sent out more expeditiously under this provision than they are under the present condition of things. Gentlemen have voted under a misapprehension, because I do not believe that my Democratic colleagues, or my Republican colleagues either, have any desire to put a tax upon the people of this country to perform a service worse than it can be performed for a less appropriation, and that is what the provision in this appropriation bill means, and gentlemen who have voted otherwise are misinformed and did not understand it.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAGE. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman if this provision should prevail would not there be less danger of loss in the mails than by the present circumlocution method?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; and they would be expedited in the time of their dispatch from here to the gentleman's constituents and my constituents, because they would be sent earlier than otherwise. I do not care to use any more time. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to be notified when I have one minute remaining. If I may have the attention of the committee, I want to state that nobody on the Committee on Appropriations is unfriendly to the Agriculture Department. This provision is in the bill because every man who has investigated the question has reported that public documents ought to be mailed from the Printing Office and not from the various departments.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It can make no possible difference to the farmer in Alabama or Mississippi or anywhere else whether a bulletin was mailed from the Public Printing Office or it was mailed from the Department of Agriculture. It would not seek in any way to control the publications of the Agriculture Department. The Committee on Agriculture makes the appropriations for that great department. They determine how much money they will give the department to spend. We simply ask this Committee of the Whole to vote this method of mailing public documents because the Government Printing Office is better equipped for that kind of work than any other place in this city. No business man would out of his own pocket go to all this unnecessary expense. As I said the other day, and I repeat now, we are dealing with public money. We are trustees of a public trust, and a trustee who uses improperly the money of his ward is held by courts of equity pecuniarily and personally responsible.

While there is no court before which we can be called upon to account for the improper expenditure, we ought to be honest enough with ourselves and honest enough with the American people to put in our own bosom a court of conscience before which we could try these questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used all but one minute of his time.

Mr. MANN. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. MANN. I do not want more than two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will not be agreed to. It is true the committee has adopted an amendment excepting the Department of Agriculture from the provisions of the section, but that is no reason why, if the original proposition was a good one, it ought not to be applied to the other departments of the Government. What excuse can be given for striking out the section applicable to eight departments of the Government because the Agricultural Department has been excepted from its provisions, if the provision had any validity or propriety in the first place? I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment and strike out the entire section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it was for the purpose of saying somewhat in substance what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just said that I wanted a moment's time. I appreciate and sympathize with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I realize the provocation that brought about his speech. It was a speech that ought to have been made, and I think it served his purpose. I think that so thoroughly that I agree with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] that there was much evidence of a misapprehension as to the facts. And, realizing that we will have a record vote on the amendment that has been adopted in the committee, and not desiring to confuse that vote by any further provision such as the carrying of the motion of the gentleman from New York to now strike out the entire paragraph, I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his motion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to strike out the paragraph and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That no money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used after the 1st day of October, 1912, for services in any executive department or other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., in the work of addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching any publication, except maps, weather reports, and weather cards, issued by an executive department or other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., or for the purchase of material or supplies to be used in such work; and on and after October 1, 1912, it shall be the duty of the Public Printer to perform such work at the Government Printing Office. Prior to October 1, 1912, each executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall transfer to the Public Printer such machines, equipment, and material as are used in addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching publications; and each head of such executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall furnish from time to time to the Public Printer mailing lists, in convenient form, and changes therein, or franked slips, for use in the distribution of publications issued by such department or establishment; and the Public Printer shall furnish copies of any publication only in accordance with the provisions of law or the instruction of the head of the department or establishment issuing the publication. The employment of all persons in the several executive departments and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., wholly in connection with the duties herein transferred to the Public Printer, or whose services can be dispensed with or devolved upon another because of such transfer, shall cease and determine on or before the 1st day of October, 1912, and their salaries or compensation shall lapse for the remainder of the fiscal year 1913 and be covered into the Treasury. A detailed statement of all machines, equipment, and material transferred to the Government Printing Office by operation of this provision and of all employments discontinued shall be submitted to Congress at its next session by the head of each executive department and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., in the annual estimates of appropriations."

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has closed on this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a preferential motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to make one modification. In line 4, second page, after the word "lists," insert "franked slips."

Mr. MANN. I think that ought not to come in after the word "lists" but after the word "therein."

Mr. FITZGERALD. After the word "therein."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] amending his amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to state to the committee that this is——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to rule that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is the provision as it originally appeared in the bill, with the addition of the words "franked slips," as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. If gentlemen will look at page 141, line 15, after the word "publication" there is inserted "and except maps, weather reports, and weather cards." The Hydrographic Office, the Geological Survey, the Weather Bureau, the Coast and Geodetic Survey print maps in their own establishments and issue them from there, and for the same reason that it is desired to distribute publications from the place where printed these maps should be distributed from the place where they are printed.

The weather reports and weather cards are printed daily by the Weather Bureau and sent out daily, and they should be retained for distribution at the place where they are printed. In view of the statements made by certain gentlemen that they did not understand the effect of this provision at the outset, and in view of the fact that they were inclined to believe it would affect the efficiency of the Department of Agriculture, and that they are now convinced it would not, I have submitted the provision in this form, in the hope that it will be agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. By inserting the words "franked slips," would that include the franked slips of the Members as well as of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the intention.

Mr. MANN. The department does not have franked slips.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a preferential motion to insert, on page 142, in line 5, after the word "therein," the words "or franked slips."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 142, line 5, after the word "therein," insert the words "or franked slips."

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the modification that I asked.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment has ceased by order of the committee.

Mr. MANN. That is not the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Department of Agriculture be exempted from the operation of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is not in order now. An amendment is pending. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offered a substitute; the gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the original paragraph, which is in order first. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, does the gentleman from Virginia desire to perfect the original amendment?

Mr. LAMB. Yes. I desire now to move an amendment to the effect that the Department of Agriculture be exempt from the operation of this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the substitute add the following: "Provided, That the Department of Agriculture shall be exempted from the provisions of this section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAMB. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 104.

Mr. LAMB. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] demands tellers. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fourteen gentlemen only have risen. Tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be permitted to make any changes in totals that may be necessary by reason of amendments that have been adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the totals in the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to perfect an amendment that has already been adopted. I do not think anybody will object to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24023 and had instructed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments and the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 10, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Kennebec River, Me. (H. Doc. No. 746); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting estimate of deficiency appropriation to credit accounts of certain officers of the Interior Department (H. Doc. No. 748); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of the court in the case of trustees of Roanoke Island Baptist Church (H. Doc. No. 747); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 10, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore, under the previous order of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 5060. An act to provide for the disposal of the unallotted land on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska; and

S. 6167. An act to authorize the Williamson & Pond Creek Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, Mingo County, W. Va.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen of Pine Bluff, Ark., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called employers' liability and workmen's compensation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of members of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution of the State of New York, praying that an appropriation be made to cover the expense of editing and publishing certain records relating to the Revolutionary War, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of sundry churches and of members of sundry religious societies and other organizations of Philadelphia and Reading, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a number of telegrams in the nature of memorials remonstrating against the Bourne parcel-post bill. I ask that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHURCH AND FERRY, N. DAK., May 9, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Am opposed to Bourne parcel-post bill. No demand for such measure here.

H. A. MOE.

WESTHOPE, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Fight Bourne and similar bills. Demand justice and impartial investigation.

W. A. MEDDAUGH.

CROSBY, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Very much opposed to Bourne general parcel-post bill just introduced in Senate.

JOHN KNOPP.

CARRINGTON, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Commercial Club opposes Bourne parcel bill, and we ask your influence against it.

C. S. HOLIDAY,
Vice President Commercial Club.

ROLETTE, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We urge your strongest opposition to the Bourne general parcel-post bill now in the Senate. Ninety-nine per cent of our people are absolutely ignorant of its provisions, and they have a right to fair consideration of all such legislation.

I. M. INGEBRETSON.

HENSEL, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We ask that you use all your influence in trying to defeat the Bourne general parcel-post bill now before the Senate, as it will, in our judgment, cause a great deficit and will be a detriment to the small towns and villages. Use your influence.

Yours, respectfully,

HARTJE & CONLAN BROS.

CARRINGTON, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

North Dakota hardware dealers oppose Bourne parcel-post bill and solicit your influence to defeat same.

A. J. SMITH,
President North Dakota Hardware Dealers' Association.

HUNTER, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

We are emphatically opposed to the Bourne general parcel-post bill. We believe it is not based on thorough investigation. Will create a horde of additional Government employees and an enormous deficit. Hope you will do your utmost to knock it out.

GALE, CARR & CO.
ARTHUR MERCANTILE CO.,
Arthur, N. Dak.
BLANCHARD MERCANTILE CO.,
Blanchard, N. Dak.

NAPOLEON, N. DAK., May 8, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Do all that you can to prevent Bourne parcel-post bill passing.

M. SAVAGE.

EDMORE, N. DAK., May 7, 1912.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

The Bourne general parcel-post bill will be a greater hardship on business in our North Dakota towns than several total crop failures. We implore you to stop the passage of this bill if possible.

A. E. TOOMEY.
JOHN BERG.
OLE STENDELL.
J. BRAUND.
H. ASLAKSON.
J. HAMRE.
ROBERT COX.

GACKLE, N. DAK., May 9, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Pardon us for again calling to your attention the parcel-post question, since we in the past have asked you both by petitions and letters to oppose same in any form and manner; and at this particular time wish to call to your attention the Bourne general parcel-post bill. To oppose same, if you will, according to our belief, is best for our country. Thanking you in advance for giving this matter your earnest consideration.

HAUT & MARCKEL.

Mr. GRONNA presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Churchs Ferry, N. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to permit the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Sergeant Fred Thomas Camp, No. 48, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Massachusetts, of Haverhill, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, in convention at Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation relating to the sale and purchase of cotton to be delivered on contract on the cotton exchanges, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GARDNER presented petitions of Excelsior Grange, of Poland; of Silver Lake Grange, of Wells Mills; and of Mount Etna Grange, of North Baldwin, all of the Patrons of Husbandry; of Carpenters' Local Union No. 457, of Bar Harbor; and of sundry citizens of Industry, all in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BROWN presented sundry affidavits in support of the bill (S. 6390) granting a pension to Rachael Ann Bovee, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present resolutions adopted by the Yuma County Water Users' Association, of Arizona. The resolutions are very short. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD, as I wish them for future reference, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF YUMA COUNTY WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION,
COOPERATING WITH UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Yuma, Ariz., April 30, 1912.

Hon. MARK A. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The board of governors of the Yuma County Water Users' Association, after thorough consideration, unanimously passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we emphatically disapprove of the essential features of the amendments to the reclamation law, as proposed by the Secretary of the Interior, known as H. R. 20490.

Resolved, That we deem it absolutely necessary in order to enable homesteaders under reclamation projects to obtain basis of commercial credit that they be given patent at expiration of the period of legal residence.

Yours, truly, EARL B. SMITH, President.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a petition of members of the Pima County Medical Association, of Arizona, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian Church of Carbondale, Pa., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 1149, Patrons of Husbandry, of Morrisville, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to permit the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Machinists' Local Union No. 434, of New York, N. Y., and a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, in convention at Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation relating to the sale and purchase of cotton to be delivered on contract on the cotton exchanges, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Watchemoket Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a letter which I should like to have read.

There being no objection, the letter was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

MERRILL-STEVENS CO.,
Jacksonville, Fla., April 12, 1912.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We note that the Senate committee is reported to be favorably considering a bill passed by the House limiting all Government work by contractors, etc., to eight hours per day. We do not fully understand the exact scope of this bill, but if its intent is that no work can be done for the Government in furnishing supplies, contracting for or making repairs except under the provisions of the 8-hour law, it will bar the majority of contractors and builders, such as ourselves, from doing this class of work, inasmuch as it is manifestly impossible to work on one class of work under the 8-hour law and keep the balance of our force under the 9 and 10 hour rule which prevails in practically every establishment of our kind. As to ourselves, we have a 10-hour day, and the majority of shipyards on the Atlantic coast work under the same conditions.

The particular class of work that we are interested in is work for dredges and similar vessels used by the Engineer Department on river and harbor improvements. All work heretofore done by us of this class has not been considered under the provisions of the 8-hour law as now prevailing, but if this new bill enlarges this scope so as to apply to such work of ours it will not only prevent our doing the large amount of this work which we now do, and which is of great convenience to the Government, inasmuch as our plant is the only one on the Atlantic coast south of Newport News capable of doing the class of work required, but it will also greatly increase the cost to the Government wherever such work is done. It is not a question of wages, as we pay by the hour and bid on the same basis, but of demoralization of shop arrangements if it was attempted to carry on one piece of work under the 8-hour rule while working the balance of the force its customary hours.

For these reasons we would earnestly request that you give this bill your careful consideration, and we trust you will, after such consideration, feel as we do that it is an unwise measure and ought not to pass, and use your best endeavors to prevent such action.

Yours, truly,

MERRILL-STEVENS CO.,
By A. D. STEVENS, President.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have another letter on the same subject, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD. It is rather long and I will not ask to have it read.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ALGER-SULLIVAN LUMBER CO.,
Century, Fla.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Our attention has been called to the 8-hour labor bill, H. R. 9061, recently reported out of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor by a vote of 6 to 4.

We take this means of expressing to you our protest against the passage of this bill in its present form, as we believe that it should be made less ambiguous and amended as follows:

First. By striking out the words "or permitted," wherever they occur after the words "shall be required," thus withdrawing the prohibition against overtime work for overtime pay where employees desire or voluntarily accept it without duress or fear of discharge. This, we believe, would be desired by every intelligent employee having consideration for his employer's best interests and his own.

Second. We would suggest establishing a weekly instead of a daily standard of hours, limiting the employment on Government contracts to 48 hours in one week, instead of 8 hours in one calendar day. This arrangement would make less confusion in shop organization in the handling of Government work.

Third. We believe the following proviso of section 2 should be stricken out entirely, as it is not clear and would render ambiguous practically every contract made with the Government:

"That all classes of work which have been, are now, or may hereafter be performed by the Government shall, when done by contract, by individuals, firms, or corporations for or on behalf of the United States or any of the Territories or the District of Columbia, be performed in accordance with the terms and provisions of this act."

Fourth. Emergencies due to train wrecks or other delays in the transportation of materials, injury to plant or accidents in manufacturing process otherwise than by the means stipulated in the bill as drawn, should receive consideration and relieve the unfortunate contractor of penalty due to necessary overtime work to complete contracts on time.

Fifth. It must be conceded by you, as it is by others who have given the matter consideration, that this act must very greatly increase the cost of materials and supplies contracted for under its terms.

Sixth. We believe if the bill is passed in any form it should not become effective before January 1, 1913, as all parties interested should have a reasonable time in which to conform to the radically economic change proposed.

It is very evident that by this bill Congress undertakes to exercise its policing power in a radical manner and thereby trespasses upon the police authority of the various States, to the detriment of both the employer and employee.

Trusting that you will give this matter every consideration it deserves from our point of view, and that in justice to all concerned you will make earnest effort to have the bill amended to a just and reasonable basis, and that we may hear from you as to your attitude in the matter at an early date, we are,

Yours, very truly,

THE ALGER-SULLIVAN LUMBER CO.,
EDWARD A. HAUSS, Vice President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4331) for the relief of William E. Farrell, reported it without amendment. (S. Rept. 735.)

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 731) thereon.

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I submit three adverse reports on bills which have been covered by a measure heretofore favorably reported and passed by the Senate. The bills may be postponed indefinitely.

The bills were postponed indefinitely, as follows:

S. 2309. A bill to limit the number of saloons in the District of Columbia and to confine them to business streets, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 732);

S. 6037. A bill to further regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 734); and

S. 2046. A bill to better regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 733).

Mr. CUMMINS. On behalf of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, I report back the bill (S. 5863) for the retirement of employees in the civil service, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 726) thereon. I ask that the bill with the amendments and accompanying report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar, and the bill and report will be printed under the rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5806) to correct the naval record of Franklin Pierce, submitted an adverse report (No. 727) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BROWN subsequently said: A bill to correct the naval record of Franklin Pierce was just indefinitely postponed. I ask that it may go to the calendar. I want to have an opportunity to examine the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order indefinitely postponing the bill will be reconsidered, and, on the request of the Senator from Nebraska, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WATSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 5906) to provide for the erection of a public building at Keyser, W. Va., reported it with an amendment. (S. Rept. 730.)

RETRIAL OF CADETS.

Mr. DU PONT. Having submitted yesterday the report, I should like to ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is on the calendar.

Mr. DU PONT. The joint resolution is on the calendar, and I suppose it can not be called up until we reach the calendar. It can not be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator then withholds his request for present consideration, the Chair understands.

Mr. DU PONT. Yes, sir; I do.

BILLS OF LADING.

Mr. CLAPP. I am directed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, to report it with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a report (No. 728) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. On January 22 I introduced a bill (S. 4713) relating to bills of lading in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. The bill which I introduced was one which had been prepared by the Commission on Uniform Legislation and has been adopted in nine of the leading commercial States of the Union. The bill was modified so as to contain the same provisions as applied to interstate and foreign commerce.

This matter has been somewhat considered in the committee, and in view of certain suggestions which have been made the bill has been redrafted. I will, within a day or two, present the bill as redrafted as a substitute for the bill which has been reported by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Minnesota, and at that time or later, with the permission of the Senate, I shall submit some remarks on the subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I have just come into the Chamber. I understand that the Committee on Interstate Commerce reported Senate bill 957, relating to bills of lading. I had thought that I should like to prepare and present a minority report on that bill. Will it be in order to do that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order to present minority views.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Within a few days?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sees no objection to it, unless the Senate should otherwise order. It is usual to have such liberty taken.

DISTRICT POLICEMEN'S AND FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for the police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia, and I submit a report (No. 729) thereon.

The matter is in very bad shape at the present time. The House has passed a bill, of which the Senate committee does not approve, and the committee has substituted therefor a bill which I presented to the Senate some little time ago. I should be very much gratified if the Senate would grant permission for the immediate consideration of the bill, as it is really urgent and it is very desirable to get it into conference. I present the report and ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate before the order is entered to proceed to its consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act the funds designated by law as the "policemen's fund," the "police fund," and the "firemen's relief fund" shall be designated as the "police and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia," and the said fund shall consist of all fines imposed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia upon members of the police and fire departments by way of discipline; all rewards, proceeds of gifts, and emoluments that may be received by any member of said departments for extraordinary services, except such as may be allowed to be retained by such member or members on the approval of the said commissioners; all net receipts and moneys arising from the sale of unclaimed property in the custody of the property clerk of the police department; a deduction of 1½ per cent of the monthly salary of each member of the police and fire departments; and fines and forfeitures paid into the police court of the District of Columbia, except those allowed by law to the use of the Humane Society, all of which shall be collected by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and be by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States, in the manner provided by law, to the credit of the trust fund denominated "police and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia," and be held subject to the drafts of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the purposes hereinafter set forth; all expenditures to be made according to law and to be accounted for in the manner provided by law: Provided, That should the police and firemen's relief fund at any time be insufficient to defray the expenditures hereinafter mentioned, then, and in that event, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to, and they shall, direct the collector of taxes of said District to deposit, and said collector shall thereupon deposit, in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said fund, out of receipts from all licenses other than liquor licenses, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in said fund.

SEC. 2. That whenever any officer or member of the police or fire department of the District of Columbia shall become disabled by injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty he shall, in addition to his regular salary, receive his necessary expenses during the time of such disability, to be ascertained and certified by the retiring board hereinafter provided for, whose certificate shall state an account of said expenses and the manner, cause, and condition of the injury or disease, and such necessary expenses shall, when approved by the said commissioners, be paid out of the said police and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That should any officer or member of the police or fire department become so permanently disabled through injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, or, having served not less than 15 years, shall, for any cause, become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from the service therefor, he shall be entitled to relief from the said fund in an amount, in the case of an officer or member of the fire department, as follows: Chief engineer, a sum not to exceed $150 per month; deputy chief engineer, a sum not to exceed $125 per month; battalion chief, fire marshal, and superintendent of machinery, a sum not to exceed $100 per month; deputy fire marshals and captains, a sum not to exceed $90 per month; lieutenants, a sum not to exceed $75 per month; assistant superintendent of machinery, a sum not to exceed $60 per month; engineers and drivers, a sum not to exceed $55 per month; assistant engineers and assistant drivers, a sum not to exceed $52.50 per month; inspectors and privates, a sum not to exceed $50 per month.

And in the case of an officer or member of the police department as follows: Major and superintendent, a sum not to exceed $150 per month; inspector and assistant superintendent, a sum not to exceed $125 per month; inspector, a sum not to exceed $100 per month; captain, a sum not to exceed $90 per month; lieutenant, a sum not to exceed $75 per month; sergeant, a sum not to exceed $60 per month; private, a sum not to exceed $50 per month, as may be justified, in any case of the police and fire departments, by the length of service and the nature of the injury or disease, as such disability may be determined by the retiring board hereinafter provided for; that in case of the death of any officer or member of the police or fire department before or after retirement from injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, leaving a widow, or children under 16 years of age, or a dependent father or mother, or both, such widow or such relative shall be entitled to a pension to be paid from the said relief fund, the amount thereof to be determined by the retiring board hereinafter provided for: Provided, That in no case shall the amount paid to any one family exceed the sum of $50 per month, and that upon the remarriage of any widow her pension under this act shall immediately cease, and that any pension to or for her children under 16 years of age shall cease upon their attaining such age.

SEC. 4. That any officer or member of the police or fire department of the District of Columbia who may have performed police or fire service therein for a period of 25 years shall be entitled to retirement from such department and to an allowance to be paid from the said police and firemen's relief fund in an amount equal to the maximum allowance as provided in section 3 of this act, for the respective officers and members of said departments.

SEC. 5. That a sum not to exceed $75 may be allowed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be paid from the said police and firemen's relief fund, to defray the funeral expenses of any member of the police or fire department who may die while in the service of such department.

SEC. 6. That a retiring board, to be composed of the surgeons of the police and fire departments and two officers of the police department and two officers of the fire department, not surgeons, such officers to be appointed by and to serve during the pleasure of the Commissioners of said District, shall be appointed to consider all cases for relief or for retirement or for pensions of officers and members of the police and fire departments, and all applications for pensions for widows, children, and dependent fathers or mothers; and the police and fire surgeons shall certify in writing to the said retiring board the physical condition of the officers or members of the force, if living, for whom a pension is sought for any reason provided for in this act, and whether or not said condition or death is due to injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, or that said officer or member has become so permanently disabled as to entitle him to discharge from the service therefor. The said retiring board shall give notice to any applicant for relief or pension or retirement to be present before it and give any evidence that he may desire, and the proceedings of the said board shall be reduced to writing and shall show the date of appointment of the officer or member under inquiry, his age, his record in the service, and any other information that may be pertinent to the matter of relief, pension, or retirement, and shall show what amount, if any, is awarded the applicant by way of relief or pension. The said board shall make a report of its finding to the commissioners, who shall have the power to take further testimony, if they so desire, and may approve, disapprove, or modify the findings of the said board, or remand any case for such further proceedings as may be necessary, and the decision of the said commissioners shall be final. The said commissioners are also hereby authorized and empowered to make, modify, and amend from time to time rules of procedure for the conduct of such board.

SEC. 7. That within 60 days following the 1st day of July, 1912, and every two years thereafter, the commissioners shall cause every policeman and fireman receiving a pension allowance from the police and firemen's relief fund to undergo such examination as in the judgment of the commissioners may be necessary to enable them to determine whether the pension in such case or cases shall be increased or reduced; and the commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to increase or reduce the allowance of pensioners as the result of such examination: Provided, however, That should a pensioner fail or refuse to undergo the examination prescribed by the commissioners, the allowance of such pensioner may be reduced or entirely discontinued by the commissioners: Provided, however, That the commissioners may discontinue any pension or retirement allowance upon duly certified information from a court of record that any person so pensioned or retired has been guilty of any crime involving moral turpitude or where any such person is found by the retiring board, after notice and trial, to be an habitual drunkard or guilty of lewd or lascivious conduct: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to give the widow of any officer or member of the police or fire department any right to a pension upon her remarriage, or to give any child or children of any officer or member of said police or fire department the right to a pension after becoming 16 years of age.

SEC. 8. That any such pensioned or retired officer or member of the police or fire department in time of flood, riot, great fires, during extraordinary assemblages or unusual emergencies, may be called by the head of the respective department into the service of the District police or fire force for such duty as his disabilities will permit of his performing, as ascertained and certified by the retiring board, without compensation therefor.

SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will not object, but its consideration will take some time.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, from hearing the bill read, it seems that the retired pay for some of these officers is $150 a month. What is their salary?

Mr. GALLINGER. Those are the higher officials.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now before the Senate is, Will the Senate give unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. Has the bill been printed?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been printed for a good while. The House has passed a bill on this subject, and the Senate has substituted therefor a bill which I introduced a few days ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that the substitute which was read?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. How is the fund created to pay these retired officers and men?

Mr. GALLINGER. The fund is created from fines and penalties of various kinds and by a contribution of 1½ per cent from the salaries of these men.

Mr. BRISTOW. So that it is not derived from taxation in any way?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not directly. The fines hereafter collected, according to my bill, are to be put into the Treasury and then paid out to meet these conditions. The present system is to have certain fines go to this fund, but those fines have been so insufficient that to-day there is absolute wretchedness in this District on the part of widows and orphans because the fund is not sufficient. This bill provides that those moneys shall be put into the Treasury and that 1½ per cent of the salaries of the firemen and policemen shall also be put into the Treasury, and then, when the pensions become due, the money is drawn out, and the obligation is met in that way.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is this fund segregated so that only the money so put in is paid out?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely so.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call attention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair assumes that unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call attention, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas, to the fact that it is provided that where there is a deficiency, it may be made up out of the general moneys. He will find that at the bottom of page 2.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, Mr. President, I want an opportunity to be heard against any proposition to take money out of the Public Treasury for pensions to any civil employees. If it is purely a fund that is created from assessments on the salaries of the employees and becomes a mutual insurance fund, it is entirely different from taxing the general public to pay these retired officers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, Mr. President; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I merely ask if the bill is yet before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted the question whether unanimous consent should be given for the present consideration of the bill, and, without any objection having been interposed, the debate proceeded, and the Chair assumed that unanimous consent had been given.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, notwithstanding that, I am going to be generous enough, inasmuch as certain Senators desire to look at the bill more carefully, to ask that it go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FOSTER:

A bill (S. 6772) authorizing the Secretary of War to return to the governor of Louisiana certain bonds of the State of Louisiana and city of New Orleans; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FALL:

A bill (S. 6773) directing the Secretary of the Interior to turn over to the treasurer of New Mexico certain sums of money; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 6774) granting an increase of pension to Mahala E. Warmoth (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 6775) to grant an honorable discharge to David Steers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 6776) for the relief of the Apache Indians held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation in Oklahoma, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of South Carolina:

A bill (S. 6777) to authorize the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., to construct a bridge across Kingston Lake at Conway, S. C.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 6778) granting an increase of pension to Edward Brown (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GUGGENHEIM:

A bill (S. 6779) making appropriation for the resurvey of certain lands in the State of Colorado; to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CRAWFORD submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the messenger to the Committee on Commerce from $900 per annum to $1,440 per annum, intended to be proposed to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted an amendment proposing to change one clerk in the Division of Publications, Agriculture Department, from class 2 to class 3, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 18960), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. GORE (by request) submitted an amendment authorizing the removal to and establishment on the Mescalero Apache Reservation, in New Mexico, all persons now held as Apache prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation in Oklahoma who may desire to go to the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JAMES YOUNG.

On motion of Mr. GORE, it was Ordered, That James Young, a private in Company K, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, Civil War, be allowed to withdraw from the Senate Committee on Pensions the papers accompanying S. 4925, Sixty-first Congress, submitted to said committee in regard to his bill for pension, no adverse report having been made on said bill.

THE NAVY.

Mr. GORE. I submit a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 309) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to inform the Senate as follows:

First. The maximum capacity of the United States Academy for the accommodation of Navy cadets.

Second. The number of cadets in attendance during each of the last five scholastic years.

Third. The number of cadets examined at each examination preparatory to the admission of cadets to the academy during the last five years.

Fourth. The number of cadets passing and the number failing to pass at each of such entrance examinations.

Fifth. The number of cadets failing to pass examinations subsequent to admission to the academy and the number of cadets so failing that are reinstated.

Sixth. The number of officers on the active list of the United States Navy at the present time and the number allowed under existing law on the Navy list. Also the number of active officers that the maximum efficiency of the Navy would require.

Seventh. The Secretary of the Navy is further directed to report as to whether, in his opinion, the minimum and maximum ages for the admission of cadets to the academy should be increased or whether the standard of the examinations should be materially reduced, and to recommend such changes in the present method of examinations as will tend to keep the number of cadets in attendance more nearly up to the maximum capacity of the institution.

Eighth. The Secretary of the Navy is also directed to submit with his report a copy of the questions used in the last three examinations for admission to the academy.

Mr. GORE. I ask that a clipping from the Washington Post of May 3 relating to this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the clipping was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SLUMP AT ANNAPOLIS.

[From the Washington Post, May 3, 1912.]

The mentality of the highest average of American youth is too low to give the Navy anything like a full quota of competent officers. If the requirements for admission to the Annapolis Academy are not unduly severe, the results of the recent mental examinations are disheartening. That only 43 out of every 100 candidates were successful indicates that the 300 or 400 vacancies caused by graduation next month will only be half filled by newcomers, which is about the poorest showing the corps has yet made.

The announcement of the poor results of the examinations is not accompanied by any explanatory statements, nor is anything vouchsafed as to any special effort to fill the gaps in the ranks. With a shortage now of 2,000 officers in the Navy and four new Dreadnoughts to be manned in the near future, the poor prospect of the academy meeting the demand behooves Congress to devote its close attention to a solution of the difficulty. Either the militant element among our youth is fast deteriorating or the ordeal they must face is too much for their years.

In either case the alternative is the same. The mental test must comport with the material, else the object of the school at Annapolis comes to naught. As reports coming from other military schools, West Point excepted, fail to show such a deplorable lack of mentality as the naval school examiners encounter, perhaps better results would be had by basing examinations on the normal capacity of boyhood rather than on the tables got up by the stop-watch theorists.

NAVAL SITUATION OF FOREIGN POWERS (S. DOC. NO. 656).

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an article from the London Times of March 11, 1912, giving an analysis of the naval situation of the various foreign powers. It is a very valuable article and a very brief one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the paper will be printed as a Senate document. It is so ordered.

UNALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the Senate bill.

MOSES E. CLAPP,
P. J. MCCUMBER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
SCOTT FERRIS,
C. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEORGE RAUCH,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

STATISTICS RELATIVE TO CORPORATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 655).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and on motion of Mr. HEYBURN was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of April 30, 1912, requesting the President, "if not incompatible with public interest, to transmit to the Senate any information in possession of the Government relating to the number, name, and business of all corporations heretofore organized by the authority of or under the laws of the United States," I transmit herewith letters from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, together with the accompanying papers on the subject.

LAWS RELATING TO PATENTS (H. DOC. NO. 749).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The present patent laws of the United States were enacted in practically their present condition in 1870, before the development of the industrial conditions which obtain to-day. The wisdom of the framers of the Constitution in providing that Congress shall have the power to promote the progress of science and the useful arts by securing for limited time to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries has been demonstrated by the fact that the industrial progress and development of the United States has been due largely to the stimulus to invention given by the protection afforded by the patent laws.

In recent years, however, combinations based upon patents have been formed which have succeeded in controlling very largely the output of particular industries, and this control has been extended by contracts based upon the patents, requiring the users of patented machines to buy from the corporations owning the patents or from firms under their control supplies or other articles to be used in connection with the patented machines. Some of the circuit courts of appeal have held that such contracts, based upon patents, were valid, and that those who violated the terms of such contracts were liable as contributory infringers. The correctness of such decisions has recently received the approval of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Sidney Henry et al. v. A. B. Dick Co., by the vote of four justices of the seven who heard the case. An application for a rehearing of that case by the full bench was made and denied, so that the construction put upon the existing law in that case must be regarded as conclusive. Several bills have been introduced into Congress, as I am informed, to obviate the effect of this decision so as to prevent a patentee from extending by contract the monopoly secured to him under the patent law. This question calls for careful consideration.

Again, large corporations, by absorbing patents relating to particular arts, have succeeded in dominating entire industries, and the only market to which an inventor of improvements upon such machines may offer his patents for sale is to such corporations. In many instances it is charged corporations buy patents for improvements, and, although the inventions covered thereby constitute a distinct improvement in the art, their manufacture is suppressed and the public never receives the benefit of such inventions during the life of the patent.

Some other countries have discouraged the shelving of inventions in this manner by laws requiring that the owner of a patent shall manufacture the invention covered by his patent within a certain period or that his patent shall be declared forfeited. Other countries provide that the owner of a patent who does not manufacture the invention in the country granting it within a reasonable time may be compelled to grant a license to anyone who may apply to manufacture and sell the invention upon such terms as may be determined to be reasonable by a public officer or by a court of competent authority. It is worthy of careful consideration whether or not legislation on some such lines should be enacted to prevent our patent laws from being made the basis of unjust monopoly, extending beyond the legitimate protection to inventors required to promote science and the useful arts or the means of stifling improvement and progress of the arts.

It is also claimed by some that legislation is necessary to enable an applicant to more speedily obtain his patent and also to prevent the holding of applications for patent in the United States Patent Office for a long period of time until the particular art to which the patent relates has grown up.

Certain amendments to the patent laws are required to make effective the provisions of the Convention of the International Union for the Protection of Industrial Property held at Washington and signed June 2, 1911.

Much complaint has been made that patents granted by the United States are not deemed prima facie valid by the courts and that preliminary injunctions are granted only upon patents which have been adjudicated to be valid by the courts or those whose validity has been prima facie established by public acquiescence for a considerable period of time. It is urged that the laws should be revised in such a manner that the issuance of a patent by the United States will carry with it the prima facie force and effect of a valid patent, and the burden placed upon him who would infringe that patent to establish its invalidity, rather than, as at the present time, to require the patentee to establish the validity of his patent before obtaining a preliminary injunction or securing an award of damages for the intentional infringement of his patented invention.

Great care should be taken in any revision of the statutes relating to patents and patent rights not unduly to interfere with vested interests which have been properly created under the existing laws, or to impair the efficiency of a system from which so much benefit has been derived by the country. I am of the opinion that a careful study of the patent laws should be made by a commission of qualified persons appointed for that purpose with instructions to report such revision of those laws as may be necessary to harmonize them with the best thought and needs of our time; and I therefore recommend the enactment of a statute authorizing the President to appoint a commission to investigate the present state of the patent law and to report what, if any, changes or amendments should be made to conform that law with modern conditions and acquirements.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 10, 1912.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 21477).

Mr. PERCY. I ask permission of the Senate to insert in my remarks of yesterday on the river and harbor bill a statement made by me before the Commerce Committee of the Senate in 1904 and a message of President Arthur, on the Mississippi River, in 1882, both of which have just been called to my attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. SMOOT. I could not hear the Senator from Mississippi, and I inquire what was the request?

Mr. PERCY. The request was to insert in my remarks of yesterday a statement I made in 1904 before the Senate Commerce Committee and a message of President Arthur.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission will be granted, without objection.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with calendar No. 590.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with the number indicated by him.

Mr. SMOOT. No. 590.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2151) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

PUBLIC INDEBTEDNESS OF PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT.

The bill (S. 4762) to amend an act approved February 6, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 8, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled 'An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' and to provide for the more efficient administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope the Senate will take up this matter for consideration. The bill has been read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we had better have the bill read again.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection to the bill being read, but I simply wanted it understood that it had been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as it had been heretofore amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress approved February 6, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 8, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled

'An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' and to provide for the more efficient administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of providing funds to construct port and harbor works, bridges, roads, buildings for provincial and municipal schools, courthouses, penal institutions, and other public improvements for the development of the Philippine Islands by the general Government thereof, the said Government is authorized from time to time to incur indebtedness, borrow money, and to issue and sell therefor (at not less than par value in gold coin of the United States) registered or coupon bonds of such denominations and payable at such time or times, not later than 40 years after the approval of this act, as may be determined by said Government, with interest thereon not to exceed 4½ per cent per annum: Provided, That the entire indebtedness of said Government created by the authority conferred by this section shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $10,000,000 in addition to such indebtedness as may have been heretofore authorized for the purposes enumerated in this section; nor shall a greater amount of indebtedness under this act than $1,500,000 be incurred in any single year: And provided further, That the law of said Government creating the indebtedness and authorizing the issue of the bonds under this section shall be approved by the President of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was called in its order on the calendar, and no unanimous consent was necessary. It is now in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would an objection carry it over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have an opportunity to look into the bill before we consider it, and I ask that it be carried over.

Mr. HEYBURN. This bill has been read twice, and has gone over once because of the absence of a Senator who is now present and on another occasion by objection on the part of a Senator who has since withdrawn his objection.

It deals with the affairs of the Philippine Islands under their own authorized management. The delay in passing it delays public work under construction and contemplated, and a very strong request comes from the executive and administrative branch of the Government that this measure shall receive consideration as promptly as is possible, in order that the work may go on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether its passage will not result in a public indebtedness in the Philippine Islands upon the Government there?

Mr. HEYBURN. It would be an indebtedness of the Philippine Government for the purpose of carrying on the public works of the Philippine Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. It can not possibly incur any indebtedness for which the Government of the United States is responsible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I know that.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it provides that the work can be done by the Philippine Government only with the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but it would result in the establishment of a rather large public debt—a Philippine public debt, I mean—to be paid after a while by the Filipino people.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Philippine Government has no considerable public debt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I say, will not this bill result in a considerable public debt?

Mr. HEYBURN. This authorizes the expenditure of so much a year, a limited sum. It is just like a continuing appropriation for work already under contract in our own domestic affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am trying right now to arrive at the details of the bill as well as I can. How much per annum is authorized?

Mr. HEYBURN. The limitation under existing law is $5,000,000. Of course that was great at a time when the affairs of the Philippine Government were on a less extensive scale than now, and when they had less revenue than now. This bill merely provides for a limit of $10,000,000, with a limitation within that limit of the expenditure of $1,500,000 per year. They could not construct or carry out the existing plans for the construction of public works in those islands with this general limitation, and there is no reason for not giving them the increased limitation, because their present prosperity justifies it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the increased limitation?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the amount of the limitation as increased by this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Ten million dollars, but not in a lump sum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; so much per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the amendment which has been agreed to limits it to $1,500,000 a year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will find a very thorough report accompanying the bill, which I think will answer any inquiry which might arise in his mind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Idaho inadvertently stated the figures of the total debt erroneously. The present limit for public works is $5,000,000. The bill proposes to increase it to $15,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. We reported it at $10,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the total will be $15,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Nebraska is quite right. After this additional money is available the total debt limit will be $15,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the cumulative debt.

Mr. LODGE. Under the bill as originally drawn it would have been $20,000,000. We have reduced it to $15,000,000. So the total amount they can incur in the next five or six years will not go beyond $15,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. It did not occur to me that my language was susceptible of that construction. I merely intended to say that in addition to the $5,000,000 now authorized we authorize ten million.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not speaking of the aggregates, but of the details.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the question of the Senator from Mississippi was as to what the total would be after this authorization.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Mississippi was speaking in an undertone, and I did not catch his question, perhaps. But I thought I made myself plain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. It is proper that the Chair should state that this bill has previously been before the Senate, when an amendment was adopted; and the bill as read by the Secretary was read as it had been amended.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether there should not be a correction in the last line or two. The concluding sentence of the bill is as follows:

That the law of said Government creating the indebtedness and authorizing the issue of bonds under this section shall be approved by the President of the United States.

Should not that be "shall be subject to the approval of the President of the United States?"

Mr. HEYBURN. If there is any difference, it is merely a transposition of words. I think the meaning would be the same.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If there is no objection, then I move that the words "shall be approved" be changed to read "shall be subject to the approval of."

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no objection to that. I think it makes no difference in meaning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. On page 2, line 25, I move to strike out "approval of this act" and insert "date of issue."

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire how far this amendment extends the indebtedness. It seems to me like a radical change in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It would enable the Philippine Government to make the bonds mature 40 years from the date of issue of the bonds. It does not seem to me that there is any objection to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. The only objection was that the point was made that it might make the bonds more difficult to sell with the amendment proposed adopted.

Mr. WATSON. I think a bond with a uniform period would be the more readily salable. Possibly seven years from now bonds might be issued, and they would run only 33 years. I think it is better to make all the bonds of a uniform period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the bill still open to objection to its further consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not to its further consideration? It was taken up in its order on the calendar. If its further consideration is open to objection, I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule is that the bill is open to objection at any time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did the Senator from Georgia object?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I move that the Senate further proceed with the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate proceed with the further consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am opposed to this indebtedness. It ties us up that much more with the Philippines. While we are not directly responsible for the debt, indirectly the Government becomes responsible, and I do not think we ought to authorize the indebtedness. I had not supposed that the bill would be brought up at this time, not having been pressed during the past few weeks during which it has been upon the calendar. I merely desire to express that objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on important business. I understand that he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. As already stated, I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote, as I observe that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], with whom I have a general pair, is not in the Chamber.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea.".

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to be informed whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I then withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. If he were here, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair for this week with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to ask if the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—45.

So the bill was passed.

CLAIMS OF SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The bill (S. 459) to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians was announced as next in order on the calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert other words in lieu thereof. That amendment has been twice read heretofore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection which has been interposed. Does the Senator from Missouri rise to the motion?

Mr. LODGE. It is not debatable.

Mr. STONE. I did not mean to object, but——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah made the objection. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and read to line 18, on page 4.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to offer an amendment there, to which I will call the attention of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. Just where?

Mr. WILLIAMS. After the words "District of Columbia," in line 14, page 4. I offer as an amendment these words:

And who can read and write and shall have paid all taxes due by them to the city of Washington or District of Columbia on or before the first Monday of February of the year preceding the primary election, and who have not been convicted of any felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to have the amendment acted on now or does he give notice of the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to have it pending.

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill has not been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will give notice of the amendment that the amendment may be pending, to be voted upon at the proper time. If it is not out of order I should like to say a few words that the Senate may know the character of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not proper that the bill should be read first?

Mr. BRISTOW. The bill has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the bill must be read first for the information of the Senate before any action is taken on it.

Mr. BRISTOW. The bill has been read. It is being read now for amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Any Senator can call for the reading of the bill as in Committee of the Whole at any time. This is not one of the three readings. This is the reading in committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. The formal reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not in order for consideration until the formal reading has been completed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I merely give notice——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The formal reading of the bill was dispensed with when it was before the Senate on a former occasion.

Mr. HEYBURN. On what day?

Mr. BRISTOW. The RECORD will show.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, however, that in the opinion of the Chair when the bill was laid aside without any action, that that not having been in the nature of a formal unanimous-consent agreement, the bill is before the Senate in its original presentation, and if it is desired that the formal reading of the bill shall be dispensed with present action of the Senate in that respect is required. It is a question of convenience simply whether the bill shall be first read, or whether amendments shall be offered pending the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand that every time a bill is taken up the formal reading of the bill must be dispensed with? The bill was once before the Senate, and the formal reading was dispensed with. Now, does that action have to be repeated every time the bill is brought before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the Senate considered the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill has never been read for amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is now being read for amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is now being read for amendment, then I am in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the Senate is entitled to have the bill read if it is so desired.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that all the Senate did before was to vote to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

Mr. BRISTOW. No. The Senator from New Hampshire will remember that he himself consented to the consideration of the bill upon a statement made by myself that I would only ask that the bill be taken up. The formal reading was then dispensed with, and the bill was afterwards laid aside. The RECORD will show that I am right.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would have to be done by a vote.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; not by a vote. The Senator is mistaken, because I remember distinctly what occurred, and the RECORD will bear out my statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the indorsement upon the bill is that on April 20, 1912, the formal reading of the bill was dispensed with, the bill to be read for amendment; but the indorsement does not show that the bill was then read for any purpose.

Mr. LODGE. What was the date of that indorsement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. April 20.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair is that when the formal reading of a bill is dispensed with upon its consideration on one day that is a nullity and that the next day that action does not stand as to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that if the RECORD showed that the Senate had proceeded with the execution of that order, that order would stand; but the RECORD does not show that the Senate did proceed with the consideration of the bill for amendment or that anything was done under that order. The matter is altogether in the disposition of the Senate. If they desire the bill read for amendment, it may now be easily ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the further opinion that even if that had been done it would be competent for the Senate now to order the bill to be read, if it saw fit to do so, the reading not having been dispensed with by formal unanimous consent. The informal dispensing with the formal reading of a bill does not amount to unanimous consent.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not question the authority of the Senate to order the bill to be read; but when the Senate has once dispensed with the formal reading and ordered the bill to be read for amendment, and then it is laid aside——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Shall the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and the bill be read for amendment? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Surely the Senator from Kansas does not want this bill put through without an opportunity to amend it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, and that is, Does it not require unanimous consent to dispense with the performance of an act required by the Constitution? It requires unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not require unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of a bill in the form that the Senate binds itself by unanimous consent, but it is within the control of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there seems to be a little misunderstanding as to what is the motion before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There seems to be a little misunderstanding as to what is the motion actually before the Senate. I understood it to be a motion to dispense with the formal reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again state the motion. In view of the discussion which was had, in order to bring the matter to a conclusion, the Chair submitted the question to the Senate, whether the formal reading of the bill should be dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I thought; and a vote "yea" would be a vote to dispense with the formal reading of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And a vote "nay" would force the bill to be read for amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senators around me misunderstood the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is that a matter——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order to clear up the situation, I move that the bill be now read for amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. But, Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, which is in order, I presume. Can a question of that kind be submitted by the Chair to the Senate? It is not a question of order. It requires unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of a bill. It can not be done by a vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to call attention very briefly to what the RECORD shows as to the proceedings on this particular bill on April 20. The question was debated, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] said:

> I think if the Senator—
>
> Referring to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]— > would get an order to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and then let it go over——
>
> Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly willing to do that.
>
> Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator to make that request.
>
> Mr. BRISTOW. If the bill is before the Senate, I would be glad to make that request. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that the bill is not yet before the Senate.
>
> Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that it be laid before the Senate.
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill will be laid before the Senate.
> There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.
>
> Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.
> Mr. BRISTOW. I ask now that the further consideration of the bill be laid aside, and I give notice that after the passage of the bill which is the special order for Monday, I shall ask the Senate to take up this bill for its consideration.
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Kansas is agreed to.
> Mr. BACON. What request of the Senator from Kansas is agreed to?
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the bill be temporarily laid aside.
> Mr. BACON. How can it be temporarily laid aside if it is not a special order nor the unfinished business?
>
> Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Kansas did not quite put it in that form. He simply gave notice that on Monday, after the special order is disposed of, he will ask the Senate to consider this bill.
> Mr. BACON. That is all right. It is perfectly in order to give such a notice.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the continuation of the history of that bill on the following Monday has a decided bearing on the question. On the following Monday the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] moved to proceed to the consideration of that bill, and the Senate declined to consider it by a vote of 31 to 25. That I consider vacates the original order, because the Senate refused to consider the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That only amounted, Mr. President, I should think, to a refusal to consider the bill at that particular time.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator from Massachusetts claim that that vacates the order of the Senate dispensing with the formal reading of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do; most certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then, if the Senate should decline to take up a bill because of some other pressing business, it vacates the previous proceeding had on that bill, does it?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; not if the Senate have taken a bill up and begun to consider it and to amend it; but all that was done with this bill was to consent to dispensing with its formal reading and to open the bill to amendment. Then, under that order, the Senate was asked to take up the bill and declined its consideration.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now the bill is before the Senate to be read for amendment because the Senate has now voted to take it up.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so, for a refusal to consider it has intervened. I think that puts it back where it was before the consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. It goes to the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is possible to dispense with the reading without unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would prefer that the Senate should decide the question; and the Chair will state that the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that that particular direction be given to it with a view to its being the rule in the future action of the Senate would change somewhat the view the Chair had in regard to it. There was a distinct proposition made by the Senator from New Hampshire that the bill be taken up; and the order was entered for dispensing with the formal reading of the bill, with a view to its then going over, evidently contemplating future action. The Chair will so submit it to the Senate; and it is better that the Senate should decide for itself what it desires. Of course, the Chair recognizes that the matter is within the complete control of the Senate; and the Senator from Mississippi, as the Chair understands, makes the motion that the bill be now taken up and read for amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask a ruling upon my parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. The motion that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill has been agreed to. The bill is now before the Senate. The formal reading of the bill is called for; and the point is made that it had been dispensed with on a previous day.

Mr. SMOOT. By a vote of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Then consideration was refused under that order by a vote of the Senate, and the question now is whether the formal reading can be dispensed with.

Mr. HEYBURN. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. The formal reading——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely want to call the attention of the Senate to Rule XIV, subdivision 2, which provides that—

> Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings previous to its passage, which readings shall be on three different days, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise; and the presiding officer shall give notice at each reading whether it be the first, second, or third.

Mr. LODGE. I will call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that those three readings do not include the reading of the bill in Committee of the Whole. Those are the three readings necessary to the passage of every bill. Two of them occur before the bill is referred. By unanimous consent and long practice those readings are not insisted on, and a bill is considered as read twice when referred to a committee. The third reading of a bill takes place after it has come out of committee and has gone into the Senate. The reading of a bill in Committee of the Whole for the information of the Senate can be called for by any Senator; it can not be dispensed with except by unanimous consent; but it is not one of the readings essential to the passage of a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that two readings of the bill have already been had.

Mr. LODGE. They have already been had, and the third reading can not take place until the bill has passed out of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts for information: If the Senate by unanimous consent dispenses with the formal reading of a bill in Committee of the Whole it does not require, then, unanimous consent to vacate that action; or, if it can be done even by unanimous consent?

Mr. LODGE. If the bill is formally read, it does not have to be read for amendment. Amendments may be offered at any point at any time. When a bill has once been formally read the only thing gained by the reading for amendment is that amendments can be offered during the reading of the bill, whereas during the formal reading they can not be offered, and that is the reason the formal reading is dispensed with, but to dispense with the formal reading does not dispense with the reading of the bill. If the bill has to be read for amendment, that is a reading of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not object to the reading of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is not the question, Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, if you please, and then I will yield the floor and the Senator can have his opportunity. My parliamentary inquiry is whether or not the Chair can submit to the Senate any question that requires unanimous consent, because one Senator balances all the others in a question of unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator, that the reading of the bill, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, is something that must be had. The only question is whether, in the prosecution of the reading, an amendment can be offered or whether it must wait until the reading is concluded. That is the sole question, and that is not a constitutional question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not raising one.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he will lose nothing by having the bill read, because, if it is read in the usual course, the amendments will be offered from the floor and no time will be lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill must be read, in any event.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no objection at all to the reading of the bill for amendment, and if any Senator does not desire to offer amendments at the time the bill is being read, I am perfectly willing that it shall be first read, and that then the amendments be offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right. The Senator will lose nothing by that course.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not trying to prevent the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill must be read. The sole question is whether the amendments shall be offered during the reading or after the reading.

Mr. LODGE. That is the sole question involved.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. I do not propose to have the question raised by me undisposed of. I have suggested a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair, as to whether or not it is proper for the Chair to submit to a vote of the Senate a question that is decided under the unanimous-consent rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that it requires unanimous consent in order that an amendment may be offered pending the reading of a bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not the question to which I direct my remarks—neither that nor a constitutional question. The question now is, Shall the reading of the bill that is called for be dispensed with?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senator does not understand the Chair. The Chair has not submitted the proposition to dispense with the reading of the bill at all. The only question that the Chair submitted was whether the bill should be read formally through before an amendment was offered, or whether, pending the reading of the bill, an amendment could be offered. That is the sole question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, it may be the question now, but it was not the question at the time I made the parliamentary inquiry. The Chair was about to put the question as to whether or not the formal reading of the bill as in Committee of the Whole should be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that if he understood the Chair to mean that the bill should not be read, the Chair did not express himself felicitously.

Mr. HEYBURN. I took the position that a single objection would prevent the dispensing with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no question about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is the amendment which I have offered considered now pending, to be brought up later, or shall it be voted upon now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the direction given by the Chair, the amendment will not be in order until the bill has been read. The Senate can order otherwise if it desires to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I then ask that it be considered as pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the end of section 27.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 18642.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Lea	Sanders
Bacon	Cummins	Lippitt	Simmons
Borah	Curtis	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Bourne	Dillingham	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	du Pont	Myers	Smoot
Brandegee	Fall	Newlands	Sutherland
Bristow	Fletcher	Nixon	Swanson
Brown	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Tillman
Catron	Gronna	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Percy	Warren
Clapp	Heyburn	Perkins	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Rayner	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Reed	Works
Crawford	Jones	Root

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] has been called from the Chamber on important business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can understand, Mr. President, why so few of my Democratic friends are present at this moment. The question that I am discussing is not material to them, inasmuch as they do not propose tariff duties with reference to the cost of production here and abroad or with reference to the protection of our own industries. It is a little difficult for me to understand, however, why more of my Republican associates are not willing to hear the truth with regard to this subject. I would be glad to assume that they knew what the cost of production here and abroad is, but I am bound to believe that most of them do not know, and I think they ought to embrace every reasonable opportunity to be informed upon that subject. They have promised the people of the United States that they will reduce the duties of our schedules to the point of difference between the cost here and abroad. That promise is a continuing one, and it was never more imperative, I think, than now.

I am sorry for the party of which I am a member because so few of its representatives are willing to study this most important, if not interesting, matter. However, I will go forward, hoping that at some time or other the Senators will be willing to discover for themselves in some way what the difference is between the cost of producing the various forms of iron and steel in our country and abroad, for I can not conceive that a single one of them will be willing to vote upon the amendment that I have proposed without informing himself upon the subject.

A few days ago I discussed at very considerable length——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator passes to another proposition, as the Senator's speech will doubtless have wide circulation, is it not proper, I will ask the Senator, to somewhat modify his statement as to what the Republican platform has promised? Will not the Senator add, "and a fair profit to the domestic producer"?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be very glad to do that. I read the Republican platform a day or two ago at length, and of course in using the paraphrase that I did this afternoon, I intended it to be understood that it embraces the whole of the declaration made in Chicago in 1908.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right, then. I thank the Senator from Iowa for permitting me to say what I did.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I regret with the Senator that not more of our Republican Senators are present at all times during the discussion of the subject which the Senator handles so ably. I think I ought to state, and it ought to go into the RECORD with other statements, that at this time in the session, with the differences that have naturally arisen between the House and the Senate on legislation, especially on the appropriation bills, which have to be constructed and reconstructed, matters of conference are going on, and so a great many Senators are necessarily absent who would be very glad to be here all the time. I do not say that this applies to all the Senators, but it is one of the palliating circumstances, I think, that ought to be noted as we go along.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know, Mr. President, how many of the Senators are compelled to be absent in committee work, but I do know that somewhere before a vote is taken upon this subject Senators who have not examined the matter carefully ought to do it. I fear that they will not do it. I do not think their failure to do it is attributable to the reason suggested by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mark you, I am not complaining of any personal discourtesy in the matter; not in the least. I am complaining of a disposition upon the part of the Republican Members of the Senate to do nothing upon the tariff, especially upon this schedule. I do not impute that indifference to any Senator here, because their mere presence indicates that they are interested in it; but we have, unfortunately, fallen into the belief that we ought not to attempt to revise this schedule at the present session. I am complaining of that disposition, a disposition which, in my opinion, works great harm to the country and even greater harm to the party of which we are members.

I want, if I can, to impress Senators with the gravity of the matter. I know there will be differences of opinion with regard to the cost here and abroad and profit here and profit abroad.

I look for that. It nearly always happens with free and independent men. But if we sit here assuming in advance as a party that we intend to vote down every proposition that is made with respect to the amendment of this schedule simply because we have had no report of a Tariff Board upon it, or for some other reason that does not relate to its merits, I think we will fail in the duty that we owe both the country and our party. I want, if possible, to stimulate a sentiment that will bring us to the consideration of this schedule with fair minds.

If my brother Senators will point out specifically wherein I have erred in collecting this information and applying it to the subject, I will be the first to confess the error. I do not want a single duty imposed here or reduced here that will imperil a single fairly and efficiently conducted industry in the United States. But I deplore the fact that Senators seem to accept in advance that whatever is proposed and whatever evidence is brought forward to sustain what is proposed we are to vote down the amendment simply because it has not received the approval either of the President of the United States or the Tariff Board he has appointed.

Mr. McCUMBER rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator will remember the very long and arduous debate we had on the steel schedule and every other schedule three years ago. I think he will also remember that there was a great divergence of opinion as expressed in the arguments in the Senate at that time as to what really constituted the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. It was because of that and because of the inability to get Senators themselves to agree upon what was the actual cost of production in this country and in the foreign country that we create this board with the idea that the board would get before us certain data that we could all rely upon.

I for one, as a member of the Committee on Finance, stand ready to amend every schedule in accordance with the facts that we can agree upon that will constitute the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

I simply want to call the Senator's attention now to this fact. We have taken testimony before the Committee on Finance. We have got our data from that source. I am perfectly willing to go to work to-day and formulate a tariff bill based upon the evidence that we have taken and the evidence which is before us, most of which was before us three years ago. But the Senator will find that there will be a disagreement. Therefore we preferred, I for one agreeing with the others—and I ask the Senator just to yield to me for that expression—we preferred to take up the schedules that had been passed upon by the Tariff Board, and then, taking the record that is given us by the committee on investigation, conform our tariff to it upon the protective principle. But if we are bound to have this measure before us, then it is simply a question as to whether we shall act upon the testimony that is printed and conform our tariffs as to what evidence we have or wait until we can get evidence that the Senate and the American people will have confidence in.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not remember the controversy of 1909 as the Senator from North Dakota remembers it. I think that a large part of the Republican membership of the Senate at that time was opposed to any Tariff Board and was opposed to the creation of any body of men as experts to examine the matter. The Finance Committee finally brought in a report, or put in the report an expression authorizing the President to appoint members of a board to help apply the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff law. No man can take what was there reported and give it any other construction than the construction that the then Senator from Maine gave it when he was inquired of in the Senate.

After we had failed in our effort, I grant you that the Senate, progressive in that instance as I hope it always will be, came to the conclusion that such a board would be valuable, and therefore enlarged its authority as well as increased its appropriation. But there was never a time when those who wanted really to make our tariff duties correspond to the difference in conditions here and abroad expected to wait indefinitely until we could have the report of such a board.

I said the other day that I agree with the proposition that if we could have done it it would have been far better to have brought in the wool bill first, and we could have passed upon it; but we have not the wool bill before us. We have the metal bill before us, and we must now either vote it up or vote it down. If we vote it down the opportunity for any amendment of the metal schedule will pass, and I do not think it will open again for a long time, because, in my judgment, there will be no appropriation for the work of the present Tariff Board.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. What the Senator from Iowa has been saying about the tendency to delay may be in a sense a criticism of my unexpressed views upon that subject, because I am thoroughly in favor of the establishment of a permanent Tariff Board. I think, just as far as possible, the question of the settlement of the tariff should be taken out of politics and it should be submitted to an impartial board, as far as that kind of a board can be established. I am in favor of fixing the tariff in some such way as that.

Now, if I believed that we could have a Tariff Board of that sort within a reasonable time, I should be opposed to passing upon this schedule at present; but I see no prospect of any such result as that, and therefore I am ready to receive such information as I can get, and I am glad to receive it from the Senator from Iowa or anyone else, in order to inform my mind on that subject, so that I may act as intelligently as possible.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from California holds exactly, as it seems to me, the right position with respect to this subject.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to ask the Senator upon what he bases his opinion that there will be no further appropriation for the Tariff Board?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not——

Mr. CURTIS. My recollection is that we have appropriated $475,000 up to date, but I do not know that the Committee on Appropriations has refused to make any recommendation.

Mr. CUMMINS. If I may be allowed in answering the Senator from Kansas to refer to the other branch of Congress, my understanding is that those who constitute its majority do not believe that a Tariff Board is necessary; they believe that it can accomplish no good purpose in framing a tariff for revenue only, and I understand that they have announced as a policy that they will not continue to support a Tariff Board. I may be in error about that, but I think the Senator from Kansas will discover the sentiment in the House, if he inquires.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there is nothing to prevent the Senate from amending the bill so as to provide an appropriation, and the Senate can insist upon the House agreeing to it. In that way——

Mr. CUMMINS. They may insist forever, but the Tariff Board would have no appropriation with which to do its work. Aside from that, as I said the other day, with regard to the greater part of the metal schedule at least, we do not need the report of the Tariff Board, whether a board belonging to the President or whether a board belonging to Congress. The information with regard to the subject is accessible to every Senator. The subject has been explored to its utmost depth and greatest breadth. No Senator need to go astray with regard to the cost of producing the heavier forms of iron and steel in this country and the cost of producing them abroad.

I do not impugn the sincerity or the good faith of any Senator who makes a suggestion of delay, but I believe that it will come only from those who do not want to reduce the duties upon the metal schedule. They may have good reason for not wanting to do it; I do not question the honesty of a man's judgment at all; but when we have the information, and Senators refuse to use it and say we must wait until it comes from another particular source, no matter what they are intending to do, the effect of what they do will be to postpone indefinitely the revision of the metal schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize the fact that the information has been gathered as to the cost of producing iron and steel products in this country, but I have studied and gathered all the information I can possibly get to find out what it would cost to produce these articles in foreign countries.

I have failed to get a report that anyone has made showing from the books of the concerns what these articles cost abroad. The reports are made up on prices that are quoted, statements that are made public by men interested in the manufacture of those articles, but there is no man that I know of in all of the United States that has made a report where he has stated that he has gone into the cost of producing those articles from the books of the companies themselves. If the Senator knows of such a report, I should like to have him refer me to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. If my memory serves me rightly, in 1909 a special session of Congress was called for the express purpose of legislating upon the tariff question. There was then no Tariff Board, and the President and the majority Members of Congress at that time had wisdom enough to deal with this subject; otherwise they would not have dealt with it. Now, will our friends on the other side explain how it is that they have lost so much of that wisdom that they now need the advice of a Tariff Board before they can legislate?

Again, the Tariff Board has been in existence studying this question for more than two years, and still no report upon this particular schedule has been made. How much longer are we to wait when there is this constant complaint as to the character and extent of these tariff duties?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, what the Senator from Ohio has just said is in a way what I said a few days ago. We have all the information that we ever had, we have all the knowledge that we had when we put these duties upon these articles, and the people are bearing the burdens, whatever they may be. If that same knowledge, supplemented with what we have since discovered, leads us to believe that the duties are too high, we ought to reduce them, even though at some future time we may have better and more accurate information from a tariff board.

I am as heartily in favor of a tariff commission—not the sort of board that we now have, but a tariff commission—as I ever was; but I repeat that we have all the knowledge on this subject that a tariff commission could get.

Answering the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I say that we have more information and a better report with regard to the foreign cost of producing the heavy forms of iron and steel than the Tariff Board was able to give us with regard to the foreign cost of producing wool. It is not possible, of course, for an American board to inquire into the hidden secrets of foreign manufacture, and it could no more be accomplished with a board than it was accomplished by Mr. Pepper, who went there armed with all the authority which the United States could give him.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator from Iowa recognize the principle which at least is applicable to stand-pat Republicans, that it takes a great deal more information to reduce a tax than it does to increase one?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not intend to enter into any discussion of the relative merits of the standpatter and the progressive. I am appealing to the Republicans as a whole to stand by their doctrine, and when they see that it has been misapplied, to join in the effort to correct the error.

I want to say, however, that, as we go through this schedule, if anyone here can show that in my amendment I have either unwittingly or wittingly placed too low a duty upon any article, that I shall be the first to consider everything that is to be put before the Senate with regard to it, and I shall be the first to raise it to the proper point.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question, of course, as to whether or not the Senator from Iowa has placed too great or too low a duty upon an article depends entirely upon the cost of the foreign product. The Committee on Finance has had only a few weeks that it could give to the consideration of the metal schedule. The Senator from Iowa will agree with me that, in all probability, the committee would not be as likely to get all the accurate information upon that schedule in the few weeks that it was investigating it that a commission might get in a year or 18 months.

The whole question between us comes right down to the one proposition of what is the foreign cost of production. We had certain evidence before the committee. The Senator from Iowa does not agree with the testimony that was taken before the committee. For instance, we will take the testimony of Mr. Butler, of Youngstown, Ohio. He agrees with the Senator from Iowa upon the cost of production of pig iron at $14.01 in the United States on an average, but he claims that, for instance, in the Cleveland district, in England, the cost is only $9.48, and in the Luxemburg and Lorraine districts, in Germany, it is but $8.71 per ton. If that is correct as to the foreign cost of production, then it goes without a great deal of calculation that the rate which is fixed by the Senator is necessarily too low, and will in no possible way measure the difference of cost. If the Senator has different figures, then there is a question of discussion between us. I do not know that the public will be satisfied with either proposition that we take, but I believe that it will be satisfied with the report of a commission upon the subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, we have the report of the best commission that ever was organized under the laws of the United States, so far as our own production is concerned, and we have a commission appointed by the United States to examine into the subject abroad. Mr. Butler is an interested witness.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. Butler, not intentionally I think, deceived the committee; at least, he did not make the discrimination before the committee that he ought to have made.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will assume that he is interested——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. There is a quality of pig iron abroad which costs substantially what Mr. Butler says pig iron costs, but it is the same quality of pig iron that in our country costs only $8.50 to $9.50 a ton. It is not the kind of pig iron that in our country costs $14 a ton. That sort of material costs abroad $14 a ton, or substantially that, as everybody knows. I have but to turn to the prices of pig iron abroad. The quality of pig iron that is represented by the total of $14.01 has for years commanded abroad a price of about $16 a ton. Nobody disputes that. Anyone who looks into the subject understands it. Mr. Butler has simply compared the low-priced pig iron, or, rather, the low-cost pig iron abroad with the high-cost pig iron at home. Therefore he reaches a conclusion which no man, and least of all the Senator from North Dakota, will accept.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, of course, agrees with me that, in order to get expert testimony upon this subject, ordinarily the Finance Committee must get that testimony from those who are interested. As a rule it is only those who are interested who can give the expert testimony upon a subject. That is one reason that I may accept this testimony with some suspicion, because it is given by persons who are interested in retaining high protective duties. For that reason I should like to have the testimony of a board composed of those who will make such an investigation that they will give us something which both the Senator from Iowa and I will say is approximately correct and that we shall both agree upon. When we do that I think we shall agree what would be adequate protection.

After all, it gets back to that proposition. I say we have not yet got the foreign cost clearly before us. We have in this same testimony a statement that the same foreign product is put into our own markets, delivered at Philadelphia and New York, for only about $14 per ton.

Mr. CUMMINS. So it is; even less than that. The low-cost pig iron made at Birmingham has a freight rate in reaching New York and Philadelphia of something like $4.20 a ton. If it costs $8.50 or $9.50 in Birmingham, by the time the pig iron reaches Philadelphia it costs $13.50 to $14 a ton.

The pig iron manufactured in England can reach Philadelphia at a freight rate of about $2 a ton; and, of course, the foreign manufacturer can get some of that pig iron into the United States; and he always will be able to get it in unless we are willing to extend the doctrine of protection so that it will cover these great disparities in the cost of transportation; and I do not think the Senator from North Dakota will be willing to so extend it.

Now, let me answer another point that the Senator made, for I see that we are drawing closer together all the while. If we were to wait until this commission, for which we have stood so long and so heartily, and the commission were about to ascertain the cost abroad——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Iowa include me in "we"?

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; I accept the suggestion—that commission would be compelled to employ an expert; it would not go abroad itself, or at least more than one of its members would not; it would employ some expert, some man in whom it had confidence, to go to England, to Germany, and to France in order to examine into the costs.

That is precisely what I said a few moments ago was the best commission we have ever created, and by that I meant the Department of Commerce and Labor. I think it has given to the people of this country more valuable information, more helpful information, than any other department we have ever organized. The Department of Commerce and Labor selected a man who is in the highest degree competent—just such a man as a tariff commission, if it were in existence, would select—and he was sent abroad for the purpose of getting this knowledge and bringing it home to the American Congress. He did get it and he did bring it home. The trouble is that the Finance Committee, in its tremendous pressure of business, did not regard Mr. Pepper's report, but accepted the statements of men like Mr. Butler, who were speaking not only in their own behalf—and I do not criticise that attitude—but who did not, as it seems to me, quite understand the case nor lay it fairly before the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. As a member of the Finance Committee, I will state that I have studied, very carefully, Mr. Charles M. Pepper's report on the iron and steel industry in England and Germany. I do not want to take the time of the Senator now to do it, but I am going to call the attention of the Senate to that report. I am going to use it in my speech, and I am going to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, while I will assume that the figures he gives upon the cost of producing iron and steel in England are correct, yet I can not for the life of me arrive at the same conclusion which the Senator has reached. I think it is due to the Senate, while we are considering this report, to call attention to the system they have in Germany in relation to bounties.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator will not do that just now, I hope.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I am going to do so later. I am simply mentioning the fact that when I speak on the subject I am going to show what Germany pays her manufacturers in the way of bounties and will take the facts from the report of Mr. Pepper.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; and we will then come to the question of whether we are going to levy a protective duty to cover bounties that may be bestowed by foreign nations. At some time you will reach a point where the protective doctrine will break down if you endeavor to cover bounties as well as the disparities in transportation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I hope the Senator from Utah will allow me to proceed. I am very glad he has made the statement that he has. It has given me more reassurance than anything that has happened since I began this debate. All that I want is consideration; all that I want is that the Senator from Utah and the Senator from North Dakota shall debate this matter; and all that I want is that they shall take the information that is before us, that lies about on every hand, bring it here and debate it, and let us all pass upon the facts and reach a just conclusion. When that is done, everything that a reasonable man can ask will have been done. The thing that I protest against is a sullen silence and an indifference to the subject which refuses to recognize the facts that are everywhere about us. That has seemed to me to indicate that my Republican friends were determined to vote against any reduction in this schedule simply because it was a reduction and because there has been no report of the Tariff Board upon it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. REED. In regard to the subject the Senator was discussing, the Tariff Board has been in existence for something like two years and it has not yet given the benefit of its information or conclusions to the Senate. In the meantime we are informed that the cost of production has so fluctuated in this country—we were so informed by the Senator from Utah the other day—that the cost of production in this country has so fluctuated that there was a difference now of several dollars per ton in certain classes of steel and iron from the cost at the time the testimony was taken two years ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want that statement to go into the RECORD without some denial, because I have never claimed that to be a fact. I have stated here that Mr. Schwab's testimony in 1909 showed that pig iron cost $14 a ton instead of $14.01, as shown by the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations.

Mr. REED. The Senator is correct. My attention is called to the fact that it was the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] who made the statement instead of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement could not have been made by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. REED. The statement was made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, who ought to be as well informed as the Senator from Utah upon the cost of iron and steel, because he comes from one of the great iron and steel producing States of the country. The statement was to the effect that the testimony two years ago was now utterly unreliable, because the cost has changed in the two years so greatly that the testimony of two years ago could no longer be used as a basis for determining to-day the difference between the cost of production abroad and the cost of production at home. Now, what I am asking is this: If the cost of production here and abroad fluctuates so rapidly that in two years' time facts that were valuable two years ago have ceased to be valuable, how will we ever get any information from a board that is two years behind the times with its reports? If this board has taken two years to investigate and has not yet given us a report, and if the prices so fluctuate within two years' time that the evidence of two years ago is valueless, is it not a fact that prices are very much more rapid in their fluctuation than this board in making its reports, and that it will always be so far behind the facts that the reports will be of no value to us?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Tariff Board has been very diligent in the work that it has attempted. It was especially directed to investigate the wool schedule, and it has done so; it has investigated the cotton schedule; and, as I said a few days ago, I believe that the board has worked not only faithfully but intelligently; and I have no doubt that, if it is supported, it will ultimately reach the metal schedule. But we ought not to wait until the board reaches the metal schedule to reduce duties which are obviously too high.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am exceedingly glad to hear the Senator come to the defense of the commission. That was the purpose for which I primarily rose. As the Senator has so well said, the board has not only given us good information, but it has worked diligently; it has worked first, in accordance with the request of the President, upon the schedules against which the greatest assault was made. Now, can the Senator tell us, in view of the fact that this board was created by the votes of both Democrats and Republicans, that it has proceeded with its work, and that it has given us a report upon both the woolen and the cotton schedules, how it is that those schedules upon which we have had the information furnished by the board are to be the last schedules to come before the Senate?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know; I am not authorized to speak for the Democrats; but I can imagine a Democrat saying this: "I propose to levy a duty for revenue alone, a duty which is determined by a consideration of the least burden and the most revenue." If I were attempting to reach a conclusion of that sort, the cost at home and abroad would be of but little concern with me. I would want to study markets and prices rather than costs if I were endeavoring to ascertain what volume of commerce would flow to the United States under a particular duty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why should such a Democrat vote for the Tariff Board?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no sympathy with that proposition, but I can imagine the Democratic Party assuming that position, and therefore being unwilling to pay any attention whatever to the report of this board.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can not the Senator go a little further in his imagination and imagine that after receiving the testimony and the facts from that commission they were so at variance with what the Democrats claimed before the commission found the facts that they did not care about continuing any further investigation?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh Mr. President, I will not impute any such thing as that to the Democrats. I do not know how they feel about the report of the Tariff Board.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, while he is imagining things and putting himself in our place in order that he may imagine them, which he has done very fairly, can he also imagine that in the mind of a Democrat and from a Democratic point of view the greater the difference in the cost of production the less justification for a duty?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can easily imagine that, Mr. President. If I were a Democrat and were adhering to the doctrine of tariff for revenue only, I would consider it to be my duty to levy taxes only upon those things which we do not produce in our own country. That I believe to be the essence of the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only, as it is the best statement of the doctrine of free trade.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me one moment, as an abstract proposition applied to all countries, what the Senator has just said is true; but when you come to apply it to the United States of America, it is such a vast country, stretching from so far north to so far south and so far east and west, and has such an immense diversity of production that it would be impossible to raise a revenue by levying duties solely upon noncompetitive articles, because there is nothing that I know of that America does not raise except a few—and we even raise them in our possessions—a few tropical fruits and certain furs of Arctic fur-bearing animals. There is absolutely nothing else. So that in selecting articles we can not select noncompeting articles, but are compelled to levy duties upon a great many competing articles, and are compelled to some extent ourselves to bring about this disagreeable condition of things that exists in protection countries where you can not either raise or lower taxes without disturbing business. To a certain extent that is the misfortune of the American situation in dealing with the tariff from our standpoint.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, who was on his feet a moment ago.

Mr. GORE. I want to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] where the wool bill is now?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not a member of the Finance Committee, Mr. President, but I suppose that it is before the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I was propounding the question to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I will inform the Senator from Oklahoma that the wool bill will be reported to the Senate just as soon as there is any likelihood of its being considered. We have now on the calendar the metal bill; we also have the chemical bill; and the other tariff bills will be reported from the Finance Committee just as soon as there is any possibility of their being considered by the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I propounded the question because of the Senator's suggestion that the Democrats were insisting upon considering the steel bill first. That is a matter for which they are not entirely responsible.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to state to the Senator from Oklahoma that the reason, and the only reason, so far as I know, why the metal schedule is here before the wool schedule is because the House sent to the Senate the metal schedule first.

The Finance Committee naturally took up that schedule first and acted upon it, and within a very short time after their report was made the bill was made the unfinished business of the Senate.

If the Senator will indulge me a minute further, I will say that the Finance Committee expects—so I am advised by the Members of the majority, and I know that is in accordance with the wish of the minority—to act upon the wool schedule within a very short time. My understanding is there will be no demand for hearings on that schedule and probably it will be reported out at the next executive meeting of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there has been a demand, but the probabilities are that no hearings will be had.

Mr. SIMMONS. When I used the word "demand" I meant in the sense that there would not be any demand from the majority of the committee for hearings upon the wool schedule. I have every assurance that the committee will be ready to report the wool bill to the Senate before the bill which is now the unfinished business is out of the way. The same statement is true as to the House bill with reference to the duties on sugar and the income-tax bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi. I am anxious to go forward, not with the speech, but with the demonstration that I expect to make, and I therefore hope that this general exchange of views on general subjects may be as brief as possible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am almost as anxious that the Senator from Iowa should not be interrupted as he is, and for that reason I have been listening very intently and not interrupting him.

But upon this particular point, as to how the metal schedule appeared first instead of the wool schedule I think gentlemen upon the other side should know. The Senator from North Carolina has stated that it was because it came from the House first, but back of that the interrogation might arise as to how it happened to come from the House first. Everybody ought to know why.

It was because the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee has a personal interest in steel and iron products, and because men were trying to tear his character down and accuse him of not wanting to bring out a bill on the metal schedule that he purposely postponed the wool schedule, whereupon he used all his influence with the committee to bring in this bill and get it out of the way, so that there might be no question of his own purpose and motives. I think everybody knows that.

Mr. CUMMINS. At any rate, the steel schedule is here, and it is surrounded with all the information that any reasonable man can desire to reach a just conclusion upon it.

I recur now to the point at which I suspended two or three days ago. I had demonstrated, I think, that the general cost of producing pig iron in this country is not only not greater than in foreign countries but that it is less than in foreign countries. I believe that the evidence which I produced would satisfy any jury empaneled in this country, even thought it was subjected to the tests of the criminal law. I have proved it beyond a reasonable doubt, and I intend to begin this afternoon with the assumption that so far as pig iron is concerned the manufacturers of iron and steel are not at a disadvantage as compared with their rivals abroad.

But I omitted one thing. I omitted to state that since the proof which I gathered together and submitted here was prepared, since these examinations were made, since the investigations took place, there has been a very material reduction in the freight rates from the mining regions of Lake Superior to the blast furnaces of Pennsylvania, of Illinois, and of Ohio. As I remember it, when Mr. Smith, or his Bureau of Corporations, made these investigations the rate on iron ore from the mines to the Lake Superior embarking ports was 80 cents per ton. Either voluntarily or through the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission—and I do not remember which—the ore-carrying railroad owned by the United States Steel Corporation reduced its rate from 80 cents to 60 cents per ton. It is probably still 20 cents higher than it ought to be, but it has been reduced 20 cents per ton. There are a little more than 2 tons of iron ore in a ton of pig iron, and therefore the reduction which I have suggested reduces the cost of pig iron in the United States 40 cents per ton.

I am going to ask the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON], who is very familiar with this whole subject, to state whether there has been any other reduction in the rate of transportation upon iron ore recently.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, the water rate on ore this year is 25 cents against 60 cents in the previous year, and that would make a difference of 50 per cent more or a dollar a ton at the mill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. So if you will add the 40 cents saved by the cheapening of transportation north of the lake to the mines or from the lake to the mine, and a dollar a ton on the subsequent transportation, iron ore is now being converted into pig iron for about $1.25 a ton, less than when these tables and these investigations were made.

Therefore, my whole argument has increased proof behind it, and my conclusion is beyond any controversy whatsoever. I do not believe my friend the Senator from Utah or my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania, both of whom are skilled in this subject, will be able to show to the Senate that it costs more now to manufacture pig iron in our country than it does abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if I caught the figures aright, it might make a difference of a dollar to the Senator from West Virginia, but it certainly does not make a difference of a dollar a ton.

Mr. WATSON. It makes a difference of 70 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. I have noticed statements that 30 cents a ton does not cut any figure at all. That may do to talk about, but you take it out of the profits of the business. I know, what the Senator from West Virginia should know, what it means. Thirty cents a ton is a great deal.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what I am saying—that it is a great deal. I am trying to emphasize that.

Mr. WATSON. Seventy cents a ton. That ought to be plain enough even for the Senator from Utah to understand.

In addition to that the mill owners have a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for a reduction of the rail rate to the mill, a lower rate than the railroads now give.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not include that in my calculation, but I have no doubt the rate which the Senator from Pennsylvania said was indefensibly high should be reduced; but the reduction of 35 cents on lake transportation and a reduction of 20 cents from the ore bed to the lake means a difference in the cost of producing pig iron in this country of $1.10. Therefore, had I the opportunity, I should expect to prove to any tribunal appointed for the purpose of trying a fact that we produce pig iron at from $1 to $2 per ton less than the average cost abroad.

I have trespassed upon the time of the Senate at length to prove this one thing, which I have regarded as the beginning of the whole inquiry, because in passing along in order to know what duty we should put upon the merchantable products of our steel mills I have shown that pig iron, the basic material, is cheaper; and now I ask you to come with me as I take the next step in steel production.

I disregard for the present that line of industry which is concerned with castings made directly from pig iron and turn my thought to the rolled steel, which is the great bulk of the iron and steel production in this country.

The next form after the pig is the ingot. Now, an ingot——

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator leaves that part of his speech—he was discussing the cost of pig iron in this country as compared with other countries—I should like to call his attention to an editorial in a North Carolina newspaper, published in the city of Wilmington, stating that there is a large foreign steamer now at that port being loaded with pig iron for shipment to Chile and to Peru, and that this pig iron is being hauled across four States from Birmingham to the city of Wilmington on its way to Chile and Peru.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am much obliged to the Senator from North Carolina. What he instances is proof of what I have already said. We export pig iron, of course, but not in large quantities.

But I now come to the ingot. Of course an ingot may be of any size. "Ingot" simply means a mold or cast into which any metal may be poured, but the ingot of commerce is a very large body of steel. It is substantially incapable of transportation. We do not import ingots nor is the ingot often bought. It is nearly always produced by the company or the concern that rolls it into some other form. I take it up, however, because it is a necessary step in the process, and I want to show you by the next table I have here just what the ingot is composed of.

This is the result of the investigation of the Commissioner of Corporations made at the same time that he investigated the pig-iron product. It is called the "cost of steel ingots," and I want you all to observe that it includes all the intermediate profits—all the profits of the ore company, of the transportation company, of the coal company and the coke companies, and all the wages that were paid out in the production of these various things. You will notice the extent of the investigation. Of Bessemer rail ingots the investigation covers 19,486,978 tons. Of Bessemer billet ingots, 29,099,783 tons; and may I pause here to explain, what I assume everyone knows, that with the heavy steel rails the process is continuous from the ingot into the rail? The ingot is not rolled into the billet, but is rolled directly into the steel rail.

The second column, headed "Bessemer billet ingots," means those rolled into billets, with the operation stopping at that point until taken up for another purpose.

The third column includes 24,731,706 tons of basic open-hearth ingots. There is no difference between the two, except that one is made in the open-hearth furnace and the other in the Bessemer converter. Here [indicating on table] is the pig iron and scrap; that is, scrap iron and steel. Pig iron and scrap for the Bessemer rail ingot cost $14.84. You will remember what that item includes. As I said before, it includes all the profits charged up for transferring these materials from one company and one process to another, and, as I showed a day or two ago, it includes nearly $2 of profit without including the transportation charges—to be exact, $1.79, which must be deducted, but I am not deducting it at this time.

The next item is material—manganese, ferromanganese—and there I must say to my Democratic friends that I think they have made a very serious mistake in the composition of their bill. Ferromanganese is in a sense pig iron and is worth in this country about $38 or $40 a ton. There is at present a duty on it of $2.50 a ton. It bears the same duty as does pig iron. In the House bill there is an ad valorem duty put upon ferromanganese of 15 per cent, and that raises the duty on ferromanganese from $2.50 a ton to $6 or thereabouts per ton.

Now, as a revenue proposition that might be defensible, but it must be remembered that we make no ferromanganese in this country for sale. There is no mangenese made, except that which is made by the United States Steel Corporation, and it is made by that corporation solely for its own use. Therefore I have put in the amendment I have proposed a duty on ferromanganese of $1 a ton, just the same as upon pig iron.

But the value of the manganese in this ton of ingots that I am pursuing now is 82 cents. Now, at the very most that manganese did not cost more in this country than abroad in excess of 6 or 7 cents. So if you want a duty to measure the additional cost of manganese in the United States as compared with abroad, you could not assume that it was more than 6 or 7 or 8 cents.

The next item is labor. Mark that, my Republican friends, whose political faith requires that there shall be a duty placed upon products that will protect the labor of the United States. The labor connected with turning a ton of pig iron or whatever amount more than a ton is required into a ton of ingots is 61 cents in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me pass through this, and then I will stop and allow the Senator from Utah to make the inquiry he now wants to make.

The labor connected with the conversion amounts to 61 cents for turning the pig iron into a ton of ingots. The fuel is 18 cents, which is less in this country than abroad. Everybody understands and agrees that the fuel costs less in America than in England or Germany, either for that matter. The other operating expenses, and by that is meant the whole overhead charges attributable to the making of the ingots, is 70 cents per ton.

Now you will observe that with the Bessemer rail ingots the total of these various items is $17.15. There is added to that what is known in the same report of Mr. Herbert Knox Smith as additional cost, which I explained the other day, and which means the general expenses of the whole company and the depreciation of the works themselves. But the entire cost is $18.20 for the ingot. For the billet of course there is a little less cost, because there are a little less manganese, a little less labor, a little less operating expenses, and substantially the same additional cost, and so the total is $17.56 for the billet ingots and $18.20 for the open-hearth ingots.

Now, before I analyze this table any further I want to compare it with the table submitted by Mr. Pepper upon his return after the examination abroad with regard to steel ingots. He says in the table I have before me that the cost of steel ingots is $18.49. That cost is higher in England than either of the kinds of steel ingots that I have put before you and that are embraced in Mr. Smith's report.

Now, will you tell me what basis is presented there for a duty that is intended to cover the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad? We will come to profits shortly, and I will consider that subject, but the truth is that the ingot in the United States costs nearly $2 a ton less than abroad. First because we carry on our operations with greater magnitude than abroad, and second because our converters are equipped with better facilities than they are abroad. The only item in all that table concerning which there could be the least doubt is the item of 61 cents per ton.

Mr. REED. For labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Sixty-one cents per ton, the labor item. I am willing in the consideration of this subject always to assume that labor at home has no greater efficiency than labor abroad. I am willing to assume that the wages abroad are one-half the wages here. Now, suppose we make that assumption. Upon that hypothesis the steel factory abroad would use only 31 cents of labor in converting its pig iron into a ton of ingots; and the difference between the labor cost there and the labor cost here is, therefore, 31 cents per ton.

Only one other item which can by any possibility be greater here than abroad is the general operating expense—70 cents a ton. We have already seen by reference to the table with regard to pig iron that that item is as great in the English factory as in the American factory, but I am willing to double that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator doubtless understands that the ferromanganese that is manufactured by the Steel Trust, to use that term, is confined to their use, and they refuse to supply it to any other furnaces. It is made from imported pig iron. The Steel Trust rely upon foreign ore or iron in whatever shape it comes, as the basis of their ferromanganese. Those outside—the independents—can not buy from the Steel Trust. They must buy in the foreign market.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that. I stated that practically before the Senator came into the Chamber.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was merely directing attention to the fact that they had the iron and a monopoly of the ferromanganese that they manufacture, and there is no other establishment in the United States, because they could not afford to import the ore to build an establishment with sufficient capacity and manufacture it in this country. Therefore they are entirely at the mercy of the importation of ferromanganese.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I made the same remark before the Senator came into the Chamber, and the further remark that the duty on ferromanganese under the Payne-Aldrich law is $2.50 a ton.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator propose that ferromanganese shall come in free?

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to have it come in free, but I have not proposed that it shall come in free. My proposition is that it shall be classified precisely as it is in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law with pig iron and pay the same duty as pig iron.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then the trust has the advantage of free iron ore, if iron ore is to be free, as a basis from which to manufacture their ferromanganese, and the independents have not.

Mr. CUMMINS. The independents must import the manganese, and therefore it ought to be free.

Mr. HEYBURN. Ought iron to be free?

Mr. CUMMINS. But I hope the Senator will not magnify the importance of it, because in the tons of ingots that I have been illustrating here the domestic value of the manganese is but 82 cents in the ton of ingots, and at the present time, as I said, the duty is $2.50 a ton upon it. Therefore, if it is increased in value by the amount of the duty, the ferromanganese being worth from $38 to $40 a ton in the United States, the increased cost of manganese in this country that enters into a ton of ingots is not more than 6 or 7 cents.

Mr. HEYBURN. My objection was directed to free iron ore, from which the trust makes the ferromanganese, while the independents must pay a duty on the ferromanganese imported from abroad. So I object to free iron ore.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the Senator does, and if there were no other thing involved in free iron ore except the manganese, I think there would be much force in the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho. But I do not believe that it is fair to the independent manufacturers along the coast of the United States to impose a duty on iron ore when if they are excluded from the foreign ore they would be compelled to pay transportation from the Lake regions to the coast upon the domestic ore.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa, if he will pardon me, I think there is one point that he has pretermitted. If I understand the table and if I understand the Pepper table giving the cost abroad, this table gives as a part of its sum total the cost of depreciation and the Pepper tables do not. So there is a difference which the Senator has not thus far explained.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not reached that yet. This table, as I showed the other day, includes all the intermediate or inter-company profits, and they are at least $1.79 a ton. This table includes the depreciation and the Pepper table does not.

But I should like to know now, Senators, on that showing, if that table is true, how much more does it cost to produce steel ingots in the United States than abroad? I do not believe it costs as much, but nevertheless, for the same purpose that I indicated the other day, I have in my amendment attached a duty of $1.60 a ton upon ingots. Of course there never will be in the whole history of the United States a single ton of ingots imported from anywhere, and there would not be if there was no duty on ingots, because if they could import at all they would rather import in some other form.

Mr. President, the table to which I have just referred I ask may be inserted as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, without objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Average book cost per gross ton of specified kinds of steel ingots, showing works cost, as given in the cost sheets (including intermediate profits), together with additional costs (derived from the profit and loss accounts), 1902–1906.

Items.	Bessemer rail ingots.	Bessemer billet ingots	Basic open hearth ingots.
Tons produced	19,486,978	29,099,783	24,731,706
Pig iron and scrap	$14.84	$14.88	$14.13
Manganese	.82	.31	.34
Labor	.61	.57	.92
Fuel	.18	.24	.70
Other operating	.70	.64	1.10
Rebuilding fund			.22
Works cost	17.15	16.64	17.41
Additional cost	1.05	.92	.79
Total cost	18.20	17.56	18.20

Mr. CUMMINS. I pass now from the ingots to some other forms of iron and steel, and again I am using the investigation of the Commissioner of Corporations and a table taken from his report. I will first call your attention to the steel rails mentioned in the first line, called Bessemer heavy rails, from ingots. The number of tons examined was 14,000,000. The raw material, and that was the ingot for the ton of steel rails, is put down as costing $18.29. The labor of converting a ton of ingots into a ton of steel rails is $1.25. That is all; and that is the basis upon which I remarked the other day, when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was speaking, that we have 61 cents on labor from the pig iron into the ingot, and $1.25 on labor from the ingot into the steel rail, making, in all, $1.86 per ton.

Now, suppose again that it costs twice as much here per man as it costs there, half of $1.86 is 93 cents. Therefore, upon that assumption the labor abroad costs 93 cents a ton less than the labor at home; and that is all the possible protection that can be demanded by the facts and by our platform.

Of course, that is neutralized by the fact that there is in this raw material a great volume of profits. There is in the raw material costing less and a deduction for depreciation, which is not in the comparative table abroad. But yet I am willing for the time being to disregard these items and assume that it costs twice as much in labor here, although I know it does not cost any more, and we reach the conclusion that the duty on steel rails ought to be 93 cents a ton. What is it per ton under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law? It is $3.92 per ton. I would like to know how we can defend upon this information a duty of $3.92 upon steel rails.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. What does the Senator give as the foreign cost of the production of steel rails?

Mr. CUMMINS. The foreign cost of production in steel rails is $23.35. I have not come to that yet.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to this point. I notice that his estimate of the cost of production agrees substantially with the estimate given by Mr. Schwab, so far as the cost of production in this country is concerned. The cost of production given by Mr. Schwab was that it cost in this country to manufacture steel rails from $22 to $23 per ton; but he also states in the same testimony that it costs in Germany from $18 to $19 per ton, and he follows it on and gives the items making the cost, showing a difference of $4 per ton.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I know what Mr. Schwab said before your committee. I simply do not believe, in the first place, that he knows what it costs in Germany. He has never examined the cost in Germany. Mr. Schwab has not been making steel rails for several years. I agree that he is one of the greatest experts in steel in the world, and one of the ablest men in the industry. I was not present before the Finance Committee, and therefore I do not know how thoroughly he was cross-examined and how fully the truth was developed; but I know that when the United States sends a man abroad it expects him to examine all sides of the subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. He makes this clear statement that I quote from the testimony. It agrees so well with the Senator's statement as to the matter of the cost of production, I assume that possibly it may be accurate with reference to the foreign cost. I just want to quote——

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course it is perfectly clear even from contemporaneous history that Mr. Schwab is not right in his statement. Steel rails are worth $28 a ton, or at least that is the market value of them in America. Steel rails are worth $28 a ton in Europe. The United States meets Germany and France and England in all the neutral markets of the world, and it sells in those neutral markets more steel rails than any other country on earth, and almost as many steel rails as all other countries on earth combined.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would be subject to an explanation, and I want to call the Senator's attention——

Mr. CUMMINS. I merely mention that as indicating that his cost was not right.

Mr. McCUMBER. But on this one proposition he says:

Mr. SCHWAB. The cheapest pig iron made in Germany is made at Luxemburg. They make pig iron there at, I know—

Stating his own personal knowledge—

$8.50 and $9 a ton, and I know that can be converted into rails at $10 more. That is the way I arrive at what the cost is there.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; and there is a sense in which Mr. Schwab may be right. I can take that testimony and produce the same results. You must remember that in the cost of $22.23 for Bessemer heavy rails there is about $3.90 of what is known here as intercompany profits. Steel rails cost only about $18 in the United States, as I shall presently show you.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I was taking the table itself, and I will analyze it later.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the Senator has examined the testimony which was taken before the Ways and Means Committee of the House in 1909. He will find a statement of what it costs in a foreign country to make a ton of steel rails and it shows——

Mr. CUMMINS. From whom? I have read a good deal of the testimony.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Schwab testifies, and also other manufacturers of this country testify. I see that my friend, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], smiles because of the fact that Mr. Schwab is a manufacturer, and——

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; not because he is a manufacturer, but——

Mr. SMOOT. He accepts the testimony of a foreign manufacturer, but——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will explain why I smiled, if the Senator will permit me. I was smiling at the credibility of this man Schwab, because I happened to remember, while the Senator was talking, that he is the same man who testified before the Committee on Finance of the Senate that the cost of producing steel had increased from 1899 down to now. That was rather to his credibility.

Mr. CUMMINS. That was to explain why he changed his view in regard to the cost of producing steel rails, which he said then could be produced at $12 a ton.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At $12 a ton. I myself asked him the question, thinking that maybe he would make some explanation. I said, "This is what you uttered then. Was it true?" He said, "Oh, yes; it was true then, Mr. WILLIAMS, but not now."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one second. Then I said, "Of course I did not mean to ask you to admit that you had made this statement this year, but you made it in 1899." He answered, "Yes." "It was true then, was it?" I asked. He said it was. Then I said, "Does it cost any more or any less to make steel now?" He said it costs more.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no brief to defend Mr. Schwab, but I ask Senators here to read the testimony and to read the explanation of Mr. Schwab when speaking of $12 a ton. It was a letter written to Mr. Frick, giving simply the cost of the labor, with no interest added to the price.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree that he could not make steel rails then for $12 a ton.

Mr. SMOOT. It was with no overhead charges, with no depreciation. The letter was written simply to show that the mere manual labor connected with the mill and the cost of the material that goes into a ton of rails amounted to $12.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what he said and what he testified to, and that is what the letter will show.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator from Utah remember that Mr. Schwab expressly said, in answer to my question, that it costs more to produce steel in America now than it did it 1899?

Mr. SMOOT. He said that the labor cost was higher than it was in 1899.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. Does not the Senator remember that, in direct answer to that question, he made that direct reply?

Now, I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Iowa, but if the Senator does not remember that we will look it up later and see who is right. I remember it, because I asked the question and he answered it.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember that he said all the labor, speaking of $12 per ton, was higher to-day than it was then, and so it is. There is no question about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is higher?

Mr. SMOOT. Labor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was not a question about labor. I was asking only about the cost of making a ton of steel rails. I was cross-examining him on his letter of 1899, and that was his reply.

Mr. SMOOT. Taking everything relating to mere cost into consideration, I do not think it costs any more now in this country than it did then; but the cost that Mr. Schwab was speaking of—$12 a ton—was the mere work, without any overhead charges, without any depreciation, without anything at all in connection with it outside of the mere labor. I think that part of it costs more to-day than it did at that time, and I think the Senator from Iowa will admit that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I feel rather embarrassed to stand here between my friends on the left and my friends on the right. I am in sympathy with my friends on the left with respect to reducing these duties, but at the same time I am deeply interested in maintaining the integrity of the protective doctrine. Therefore, I believe that I can be more just and impartial than either my brother from Utah or my brother from Mississippi. The real truth is, that when Mr. Schwab wrote this letter, back a few years ago, he was interested in making people believe we could produce iron and steel in this country cheaper than in any other country on earth. When he delivered his testimony later, and especially the other day, he was interested in making people believe that it costs us more than any other people on earth. Being an advocate in both cases he omitted some things that he ought to have put in in 1899, and he included some things that he ought to have left out in 1912. Therefore, the truth lies somewhere between the statement that he made then and now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator certainly will admit that the testimony of Mr. Schwab to-day, as far as the cost of pig iron and as far as the cost of steel rails are concerned, corresponds closely with the testimony of Herbert Knox Smith.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pause for a moment, he will see that they do not agree at all. Herbert Knox Smith, after presenting the table which I have exhibited, and which shows upon its face that it includes a great amount of profits which ought not to be included in the cost, explains these profits and subsequently deducts them from this tabular cost, as I have shown repeatedly here. Therefore, it is not true that he arrives at the same result as does Mr. Schwab in his testimony before the Finance Committee, because Mr. Schwab at no time deducts those things.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take the exact figures here of Herbert Knox Smith and I take the detailed statement here of Mr. Schwab as to what the cost is of producing steel rails and every item, and Herbert Knox Smith's price is higher than Mr. Schwab's.

Now, in relation to the question of steel rails being worth $28 here and steel rails being worth $28 in Germany, that is the local price in Germany. That is not the export price of Germany.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not the export price in Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that——

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the trouble. It is the domestic price here and there. Both the manufacturers of Germany and of the United States seem to be willing to sacrifice their own people for the advantage of foreign people.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask this question of the Senator and see if he agrees with me upon the proposition: Supposing that the American manufacturers of steel rails did not ship a pound to a foreign country of steel rails or manufactures of iron and steel of any kind, does the Senator believe that it could be made as cheaply in this country as it is made to-day?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do, assuming that the volume of production would be the same.

Mr. SMOOT. That is impossible to be——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not complaining about shipping abroad. I am glad the United States Steel Corporation ships 20 per cent of all its product abroad. If it can have the influence to maintain a tariff upon those same products in the United States that will enable it to get a higher price here than it can get abroad I feel its power—that is, I admire that sort of power—but I do not think the Senator from Utah ought to be willing to allow it to hold that power.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that if the Steel Trust or any great manufacturer can get cost out of goods by exporting them the balance of the goods can be made in this country for less money, and not only that but the money that is saved by so doing goes to the laboring men of this country. I know the Senator agrees with that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not object to it at all. All that I want is that there shall be a fair and even rivalry. If the United States Steel Corporation after being dethroned, after destroying its monopolistic power and after subjecting it to the competition of Europe upon a fair basis, can in the natural way and according to the usual laws of trade and commerce make the people of the United States pay more than it sells its products abroad for, or if it can supplement its works by adding capacity in order to supply the foreign market, I say well and good; I am not criticising it; but we in the United States Senate have no right to interpose our power and prevent the natural laws of trade from governing and controlling such a corporation as the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. SMOOT. No one is intending to do that, as I understand. It is certainly far from my thought. I have no intention whatever of doing it. The United States Steel Corporation can exist where independent manufacturers can not.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that. I know the Senator from Utah believes it. It may here and there be true, but I do not believe that the United States Steel Corporation can, if it be shorn of its extraordinary extrinsic power, manufacture products from iron ore into pig iron and pig iron into steel rails more cheaply than other large companies. But when we give it the power—and this, of course, compels me to digress from the tariff—when we permit it to take a billion and a half of capital and draw to itself a series of great powerful banks that can terrorize every other industry in the country, that can grant credit or withhold credit from everyone who desires to enter into competition with it—when you give it all these powers, then, of course, it can produce cheaper than some of its competitors. But I know that if the Senator from Utah were in a free field with sufficient capital to utilize the economies of the trade he could meet all the efficiency of the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. But that has nothing to do with the tariff. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice the Senator from Iowa made no response to the statement made by the Senator from Utah that by exporting 20 per cent of its products the Steel Trust was able to give so much more to labor. I should like to call his attention to the fact that in the same report which he quoted from, Herbert Knox Smith states that the Steel Trust is requiring 50,000 of its men to work 12 hours a day and 7 days a week; and the figures, as given by the Senator from Iowa, show that only about one-twentieth part of the amount represented in the cost of a ton of steel ingots is paid to labor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the question of 12 hours a day was thrashed out here the other day. That applies only to men who are working in the furnaces and upon a manufacture that requires a continuous process of——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. Wait until I get through.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is not correct, according to the report.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not allow this discussion to pass to other ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa declines to yield further.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to confine it to the tariff.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me to read an extract from the report to show that the Senator from Utah is in error where he says that it is confined to those cases where the metallurgical necessity requires them to work 12 hours a day?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, and it was so testified before the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Department of Commerce and Labor says specifically that that is not true.

Mr. SMOOT. Every manufacturer says it is true. Not only that, but we had the laboring men before the committee, who testified to the same thing; they testified that it was upon their request that they work 12 hours a day, and that out of the 12 hours many times they did not have to work over 3 hours and would be watching the other 9.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me read what Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, who has just been quoted by the Senator from Utah, says:

> The evil of seven-day work was particularly accentuated by the fact developed in the investigation that the seven-day working week was not confined to the blast-furnace department, where there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation, and in which department 88 per cent of the employees worked seven days a week, but it was also found that, to a considerable extent, in other departments, where no such metallurgical necessity can be claimed, productive work was carried on on Sunday just as on other days of the week. For example, in some establishments the Bessemer converters, the open-hearth furnaces, and blooming, rail, and structural mills were found operating seven days a week for commercial reasons only.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, Mr. President, I am very glad to yield, but what the Senator from Nebraska has just read and what the Senator from Utah has just said have nothing whatever to do with the point I am discussing. I have shown what amount is paid. It does not make any difference whether it is paid for men who work 7 days a week 12 hours a day or 1 day a week 1 hour per day. I ought to say, however, that what is true of the United States Steel Corporation is true also of every other large producer of iron and steel with regard to the length of the day's work; and it is entirely inhumane and ought not to be permitted, no matter if the men are willing to work that length of time.

But before I resume this table I think I ought, in justice to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], to read what was referred to a few moments ago from the testimony of Mr. Schwab before the Finance Committee:

> Senator WILLIAMS. Has the price of manufacturing rails increased or decreased, then?
> Mr. SCHWAB. Very greatly increased.
> Senator WILLIAMS. The price of manufacturing rails has increased?
> Mr. SCHWAB. Very much increased.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment——

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah merely allow me to take one step——

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but in explanation of that statement I want to say that that follows the statement which was made by Mr. Schwab giving an explanation of his letter wherein it was stated that the cost was $12. It is right at the close of his testimony.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore it is just as I said. It referred to the $12 a ton, and there is no question about it; I do not deny it; it is exactly what I said to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Utah does not deny it, it is all agreed upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I produced it merely as going to the credibility of the witness, that is all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I recur, after this excursion into what I think a somewhat irrelevant field, but nevertheless an instructive one, to my proposition that even upon the table unanalyzed, with the cost of steel rails at $22.23, it is not greater than the cost abroad, and the labor cost, from the pig iron at $14 a ton to the steel rails with a market price of $28 a ton—the wages of the men who work with their hands—first, at the furnace, and, next, at the converter and the rolling mill, amount to $1.86 per ton. The material has increased in value from $14 a ton to $28 a ton, and labor, in the proper sense of that term, receives of that great advance the munificent reward of $1.86.

Now, Senators, we can not any longer deceive ourselves or deceive the people with respect to the cost that is to be protected by the import duty. I have shown that nothing is required for the raw material; on the contrary, we must take away at least $2 a ton from the raw material in order to denude it of the profits that are there and that ought not to be considered when we are considering cost. Then comes the labor, then come the other operating expenses, with the mill cost of $20.87 and the total cost of $22.23.

I believe that I have now made a case with respect to steel rails. I have, in my amendment, put a duty of $2.50 per ton upon steel rails. That is more than is required, because with respect to one thing, at least, the Senator from Utah will agree with me, and that is, if there were no duty at all there could never be a ton of foreign rails get as far east as 50 miles from our seashore. I do not believe that there could ever be a ton of steel rails loaded upon a car upon our eastern seacoast if there were no duty at all, for it would cost $2 a ton at least to bring them to the shore; then they must be loaded into cars and sent west; and you all agree with me that there could not be any steel rails imported into the United States as against the barricade of the transportation alone. I have, however, put a duty upon steel rails of $2.50 a ton, in order to cover these vicissitudes of the markets as well as to cover what I know ought to be covered, and that is the additional profit that American manufacturers should have as compared with their rivals across the sea. That profit is just as much entitled to protection at our hands as are the wages of the laboring men; but there is not a Senator here who will suggest that more than 50 cents a ton, taking our products generally, would be required for that purpose.

Now, I pass to the next item, and I shall be very brief with regard to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator from Iowa passes to his next subject, I wish to say that I do not feel that the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], in which he read the testimony of Mr. Schwab, ought to be left where he left it. The Senator from Iowa had just stated that the cost of producing steel rails in this country was about $22. The Senator from North Dakota read from Mr. Schwab's testimony to show his estimate of the cost in Germany at $18. As I recall, that statement was made before the Finance Committee; but clearly it was made by Mr. Schwab without knowledge on his part as to the cost in Germany. His statement bears evidence of the fact that he was giving his estimate of the foreign cost not from his own knowledge. Let me read, if the Senator will permit me for just one moment, what Mr. Schwab said about that matter:

> The cheapest pig iron made in Germany is made at Luxemburg. They make pig iron there at, I know, $8.50 and $9 a ton, and I know that can be converted into rails at $10 more.

So his estimate of $18 was based upon his assumption that pig iron could be made in the Luxemburg district of Germany for $8.50 and $9 a ton. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Mr. Pepper, in the report from which he has read, gives an estimate of the cost of making pig iron in the Luxemburg district of Germany, and he states as follows:

> Luxemburg: One ton basic pig iron with 1½ per cent of manganese, 52–53 marks, equal $12.38–$12.61.

Which, added to the $10 which Mr. Schwab says is the necessary expense of conversion, would make the cost in that country the same, or substantially the same, as the Senator said the cost in this country was. The radical infirmity in Mr. Schwab's statement is in the assumption that pig iron could be made at Luxemburg at $8.50 or $9 a ton, when, as a matter of fact, according to the report of Mr. Pepper, it costs from $12.38 up to $12.61.

Mr. CUMMINS. Again, Mr. President, I think the confusion arose because sufficient attention was not given to the different kinds of pig iron. The Bessemer pig iron or the basic pig iron, that is fit for making steel rails, can not be made for $8 a ton or for $8.50 a ton anywhere on earth; and the pig iron that can be converted economically into steel rails costs—well, I do not know, but I have never seen a lower cost than $11.50 or $12 or $13, somewhere along in that locality. However, I will not return to that subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Pepper's statement is based upon the cost of basic pig iron, not Bessemer.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me, Senators, that I have submitted enough proof to show that it is an offense against our principle and against the welfare of the people to retain $3.92 a ton upon steel rails. If there is a Senator here who at some subsequent time can show that we need, to answer our doctrine, $3.92 a ton upon this product, then I will be the first to yield; but there will be no Senator make any such attempt. It is known everywhere that it can not be done.

I will pass the question of billets. I shall introduce this table into my remarks, and it is not very necessary for me to discuss every one of these processes. When once you know what the cost of the material is and the general place which the article has in the processes of manufacture you can not go very far wrong with regard to the duty that is required. Steel rails, as we have shown, with its profits, cost about $22 a ton in this country. Any other product that only costs $22 a ton ought not to have any more duty than should steel rails. If it costs $26 a ton, that shows that some additional labor has been put upon it, and so on, and so on. Therefore, I pass the question of billets, because billets are only sold as between manufacturers; no one ever buys a billet for the purpose of using it.

I will come down to Bessemer sheet bars. That also is a manufacturer's article. As a usual thing, it is not sold. It will be noticed that the raw material in it costs $16.45; the labor in it, taking it from the ingot into the sheet bar, is 57 cents; and the other operating expenses are $1.12.

I pass from the sheet bars to what is known as black sheets—the black, common sheet iron. This iron is rerolled from what is known as the sheet bars. Now, you will observe there is only 57 cents of labor added from the ingot to the sheet bar.

In order to roll it into black sheets—ordinary iron sheets—the labor involved is $10.39. I use that now for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that we come finally to a product in which there is considerable labor.

Assuming that it costs twice as much abroad to go through these processes as it does here, tell me what should be the duty on an article in which there is first 57 cents of labor from the ingot into the bar, and $10.39 labor from the bar into the sheet. How can you defend a law which, in some instances, puts $15 or $20 or $30 a ton upon that product? I can not imagine why such a fact does not make you pause and think about the subject.

Now, upon the black sheets, which do constitute a great article of commerce, adding the 57 cents to the $10.39 we have $10.96. That is the labor cost. There is not anything else connected with it that costs or could cost anything more in this country than it costs abroad. Assuming that the labor here is paid twice as much—and I hope we shall always be willing to levy duties upon the hypothesis of giving our labor twice as much as similar labor receives abroad—what ought the duty to be? If I am correct in my hypothesis, the cost of doing those same things abroad would be $5.48 and the difference would be $5.48. Then, tell me why you insist on a duty of $10 to $20 a ton. I can not understand it; I have never been able to understand it; and I do not believe there is anyone here who will ever be able to explain it.

I pass now to structural steel. Structural steel has become one of the greatest products of the country. It is rapidly rising to the same position that has long been held by steel rails, and its growth, I think, has just begun. Structural steel is either rolled from ingots or from billets, usually from ingots, for structural steel is of a heavy character. Now, let us see what it costs from ingots. The material cost is $20.21; the labor cost, $2.15. From billets the material cost is $20.88 and the labor cost $2.54. Mark you, we have seen that the ingot cost of labor is, according to my recollection, 61 cents; so that all the labor there is in turning the pig iron into structural iron and steel is 61 cents plus $2.15. Two dollars and seventy-six cents is all that is paid to labor in that process, and yet what are we doing in the case of structural iron and steel? We are levying a duty on it under the Payne-Aldrich law which begins with $8 a ton and ends with about $20 a ton.

I do not believe, Senators, that you will be willing to perpetuate duties of that character. There ought not under any circumstances to be a duty on plain structural iron and steel that is neither punched nor fitted nor assembled of more than $4 a ton. It is utterly impossible even for the highest protectionist to defend more than that; and all that I ask in my amendment is that it be reduced to $4 a ton upon the character of iron and steel which I have just described and to $6 a ton upon that which is punched, fitted, or assembled.

Let us now pass hurriedly to merchant bars. That is another great item of merchantable steel. In the case of merchant bars the material costs $21.41; the labor cost from the billet into the merchant bar is $3.06 a ton. If you will add to that the cost from the pig iron into the ingot, 61 cents, the ingot into the billet, 66 cents, you will find that the maximum difference upon the hypothesis already made is $2.17. I have put a duty upon merchant bars of $3.50 a ton to $4.50. This duty not only covers the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, but it is double the difference.

I will not pursue this analysis further at this time, because if I have established the premises with regard to these basic forms of iron and steel, then you have but to examine the prices which these forms hold in the market compared with other forms in order to tell what additional duties ought to be laid so as to cover the additional labor that is expended upon them.

Before we close the debate I will take up other paragraphs of the proposed amendment. Just now I will do no more than to suggest that the table, which I have been using, covers also plate steel, wire rods, coarse wire, black plate, and tin plate, and gives the same information with respect to them that I have commented upon with respect to rails, structural steel, and bars. The table will be printed so that the information will be more readily accessible than it now is. I have also used in the course of my remarks a table showing the duties of the existing law and the duties of the proposed amendment upon the commodities I have discussed. It will also be printed for more ready reference.

I have now finished, Mr. President, my general review of the heavy forms of iron and steel, and I challenge successful contradiction of a single material fact which I have stated. If the facts be admitted or established, the conclusion inevitably follows. At some other time, if the debate shall continue long, I shall take up some of the other and more finely organized forms of steel and give the Senate such information as I may have with respect to them; but it seems to me, Senators—and I am now speaking to this side of the Chamber—that as to this part of the metal schedule I have made at least a prima facie case, and the burden of maintaining the present duties is upon those who believe that I have not correctly recited the facts respecting this industry. I court inquiry, and I hope the Senators who believe in holding the duties as they are will unfold to the country as well as to the Senate the reasons for the faith that is in them.

Mr. President, I ask leave to insert as part of my remarks the two tables to which I have recently referred and the table showing the cost in England of various steel products.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

The tables referred to are as follows:

In connection with the estimate of the cost of production of pig iron, Mr. Jeans furnished the following as the elements of ultimate cost of British steel in Bessemer works having auxiliary blast furnaces:

Cost of pig iron	$13.50
Cost of steel ingots	18.49
Cost of steel rails	23.35
Difference between pig and ingots	4.36
Difference between ingots and rails	4.74
Wages per ton of pig iron	1.06
Wages per ton of ingots	.69
Wages per ton of rails	1.66
Fixed charges per ton of pig	.36
Fixed charges per ton of rails	.36
Stores and sundries per ton of pig	1.46
Stores and sundries per ton of ingots	1.46
Stores and sundries per ton of rails	.69

Average book costs per gross ton[1] of specified products, showing mill costs as given in cost sheets (without deduction of intermediate profits), together with additional costs (derived from the profit and loss accounts), 1902–1906.

Products.	Tons produced.	Raw material.	Labor.	Other operating.	Total.	Mill cost.	Additional cost.	Total cost.
Bessemer heavy rails (from ingots)	14,020,303	$18.29	$1.25	$1.43	$2.68	$20.97	$1.26	$22.23
Large Bessemer billets (from ingots)	17,908,033	17.72	.55	.82	1.37	19.09	1.09	20.18
Large basic open-hearth billets (from ingots)	13,422,740	18.45	.55	.97	1.52	19.97	.90	20.87
Small Bessemer billets (from ingots)	2,686,706	16.88	.66	1.16	1.82	18.70	.98	19.68
Bessemer sheet bars (from ingots)	4,808,673	16.45	.57	1.12	1.69	18.14	.84	18.98
Sheared plates (from slabs)	3,317,232	21.55	2.36	2.19	4.55	26.10	1.39	27.49

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Senate bill 2234, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WILLIAMS to the bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, etc., on page 4, line 15, after the word "Columbia," insert the following words:

"And who can read and write and shall have paid all taxes due by them to the city of Washington or District of Columbia on or before the first Monday of February of the year preceding the primary election, and who have not been convicted of any felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude."

WASHINGTON IMPROVEMENT & DEVELOPMENT CO.

Mr. CULLOM obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to have a brief executive session, but will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 142. It is local in character and is rather an urgent matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 142) to declare and make certain the authority of the Attorney General to begin and maintain and of any court of competent jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit or suits for the purpose of having judicially declared a forfeiture of the rights granted by the act entitled "An act granting to the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the matter recommended by the committee as a substitute was not entirely satisfactory to all parties interested, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who reported the joint resolution, myself, and the parties interested have agreed upon another substitute, which I desire to offer as an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Great Northern Railway Co., whose right of way in the San Poil River Valley, Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, as filed and located by the Washington Improvement & Development Co. and approved under the act entitled "An act granting to the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898, and thereafter acquired by the Great Northern Railway Co.; and the Spokane & British Columbia Railway Co., whose right of way along said San Poil River Valley, said Colville Indian Reservation, as filed and located by the said company, and approved under the act entitled "An act granting to railways a right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, and under the act entitled "An act to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by a railway company through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1899, and which rights of way are overlapping in and in conflict for a considerable distance, shall proceed, within three months after the passage and approval of this resolution, to ascertain and determine the points of overlapping and conflict of their said respective locations, and shall proceed to readjust the same at all points of overlapping and conflict in such a way as to allow both companies an equal right of way through said valley with as little added expense or loss to either of them as possible, and in such manner that equal justice will be done to each, and each to bear whatever additional expense it may be put to by reason of any relocation or readjustment of its line in pursuance of this act, but the relocation or readjustment herein provided for shall be so made that the expense incurred thereby to either shall be as nearly equal as practicable; and when such relocation or readjustment has been completed the same shall be filed with and shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, whereupon either of said companies may proceed with the building of its respective road through the said valley and on the lines as readjusted, and the pending suit of the Government be dismissed. The rights of way so adjusted shall be in lieu of the rights of way heretofore granted and approved to the said companies respectively under the aforesaid acts of Congress: Provided, That if the said companies shall fail to agree and file such readjustment of said rights of way with the Secretary of the Interior within the time as herein provided, the said companies shall on or before 60 days from and after the expiration of the aforesaid time for filing the said readjustment present their matters of difference to the Secretary of the Interior, and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary to give said companies a hearing, and the Secretary shall thereupon readjust the said rights of way at all points of overlapping and conflict in such a way as to allow both companies an equal right of way through said valley with as little added expense or loss to either of them as possible, and in such manner that equal justice will be done to each, and each to bear whatever additional expense it may be put to by reason of the readjustment of its line by the Secretary in pursuance of this act, such readjustment to be so made that the expense incurred by either company shall be as nearly equal as practicable. And when such readjustment has been completed by the Secretary of the Interior and the said companies notified thereof by the Secretary either of said companies may proceed with the building of its respective road through the said valley and on the line as readjusted by the Secretary and upon the completion of such readjustment by the Secretary the pending suit of the Government shall be dismissed. The rights of way so adjusted by the Secretary shall be in lieu of the rights of way heretofore granted and approved to the said companies respectively under the aforesaid acts of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask, Does that include the right of way of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it in any way connected with the grant——

Mr. JONES. No; it is entirely separate and distinct.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or the Northern Pacific Railway Co. Is neither interested in this adjustment?

Mr. JONES. Not at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where does this case differ from Railway Co. v. Alling, leaving it to be settled in the courts? Does it involve any different principle from that? That is the Rio Grande Canyon suit.

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. HEYBURN. The reason I asked is that I desire that any measure of legislation that is passed by the Congress touching in any way the old Northern Pacific Railroad grant shall contain this proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be taken as a recognition by Congress of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. as the successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.

Mr. JONES. This does not affect that at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to know the fact. I was not here when the reading of the bill was commenced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to authorize and direct the Great Northern Railway Co. and the Spokane & British Columbia Railway Co. in the matter of their conflicting claims or rights of way across the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, in the San Poil River Valley, to readjust their respective locations of rights of way at points of conflict in such manner as to allow each company an equal right of way through said valley; and in case of their failure so to do to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to readjust said rights of way."

The committee reported an amendment, to strike out the preamble, which was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL CHOCTAW TREATY OF 1830.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to have put upon its passage now the bill (S. 5141) to correct an error in the record of the supplemental treaty of September 28, 1830, made with the Choctaw Indians, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, to strike out the word "said," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the reservation of section 8 and the west half of section 9, in township 19 north, range 16 east, Choctaw meridian, Mississippi, to Thomas Wall, and the sale thereof by him to Anthony Winston, made on December 11, 1833, be, and the same are hereby, approved, and the title thereto confirmed in the said Thomas Wall and his vendee, the said Anthony Winston; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to cause the proper entries to be made upon the land records of the land office at Jackson, Miss., and of the General Land Office, showing that said land was reserved to the said Thomas Wall.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee recommended an amendment to strike out the preamble, which was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill at the point at which he left off.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the reading of the bill having been finished, I have an amendment pending. I think possibly it may be accepted. It is rather late, and, after our intense attention to the exhaustive reading of the bill in detail, of course I shall not go into any oratorical achievements this evening. But I want to say this in behalf of the amendment I have introduced: Like ancient Gaul, it is divided into three parts. The first part of it disfranchises the illiterates, the ignorant, and I know the Senator from Kansas does not want ignorant people to rule his primaries or mine.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that there is a provision in the bill now doing that very thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute. Then it will not hurt it to put it in here, where a description is given of the qualifications of the electors.

The second part of the amendment, Mr. President, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Kansas because it is to his conscience and judgment that I am now appealing—the second part of the amendment cuts out the tax-dodging class. It provides that those shall not vote who have not paid taxes due by them to the city of Washington on or before the first Monday of the February preceding the election. I know that the Senator from Kansas does not desire his party or mine to be ruled in its primaries by tax dodgers, a very reprehensible class.

Then, the third proposition disfranchises those who have been convicted of felony or of misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. Notwithstanding some recent rather reckless accusations by Republicans against one another, I do not believe that the Senator from Kansas wants his party primary, and I know I do not want ours, controlled by the criminal classes.

In other words, the amendment just cuts off ignorance, tax dodging, and criminality, and I hope it will be accepted by the Senator from Kansas and will become a part of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am satisfied we can not conclude the bill to-night and if the Senator from Mississippi will have his amendment printed and let it be the pending amendment, I will be glad to consider it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That has been ordered done. We have finished the reading of the bill and the amendment has to be brought before the Senate in some way. This is all that is left to be done with the bill now. I believe everybody else has found it perfect except me. I am the only one who has offered an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 11, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 10, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, without whom nothing is pure, nothing is strong, nothing enduring, be with us that we may think right and do right as it is thus given us to see the right, in all that pertains to the duties of this day that we may honor ourselves, our country, and our God; in Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file the views of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs to accompany House Document No. 619, relative to the relief of The Adjutant General of the Army from the duties of his office. (H. Rept. 508, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to file the views of the minority on the document named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAM ACROSS CLINCH RIVER, TENN.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 23571) authorizing and permitting Clinch River Power Co., its successors and assigns, to build and maintain a dam and a water-power development in and across Clinch River, in Anderson County, State of Tennessee, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change of reference will be made.

The was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and the previous question has been ordered on the bill and the amendments to the final passage. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote—

On the amendment, on page 20, line 2, increasing the pay of Members' clerks from $1,500 to $2,000 per annum.

On the amendment, on page 62, lines 13 to 21, inclusive, abolishing certain mints and assay offices, and inserting appropriations for such mints and assay offices.

On the amendment, on page 139, striking out the last two provisos to section 5.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment, on page 31, lines 17 and 18, striking out the appropriation for the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, and on the amendment, on page 32, striking out the paragraph headed "Advancement of commercial and other interests as provided in the act approved August 5, 1909, and March 4, 1911." As I have no desire to occupy the time of the House unnecessarily, and as these two amendments are practically united, I ask unanimous consent that they be considered together.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I could not hear whether a separate vote was demanded on the amendment providing for an increase of compensation of clerks to Members.

The SPEAKER. Yes; a separate vote was asked upon that. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment striking out the item on page 16, line 19, "department messenger, $2,000."

The SPEAKER. The vote will first be taken on the other amendments on which a separate vote is not demanded.

The question being taken, the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the amendment on which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] demanded a separate vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words: "Department messenger, to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority, $2,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact—I did it several times before in the committee—that the words "to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority" were taken out on a point of order, and are not in the amendment at all. The amendment should be correctly stated at the desk. It is to strike out the words "department messenger, $2,000."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 19, strike out the words "department messenger, $2,000."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were—ayes 110, noes 19.

Acordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 2, strike out "fifteen hundred" and insert "two thousand."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 64, noes 97.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this and the next amendment be voted on together.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand, these are the two amendments relating to the new department.

Mr. BURLESON. We have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, strike out all of lines 11 to 25, inclusive, and on page 33, lines 1 to 23, inclusive.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the committee there was a separate vote asked for and given on the proposition to strike out on page 32 from line 11 down to the bottom of the page and to line 4 on page 33. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to have that connected with the former amendment and does not desire to have the balance included.

I ask for a division of the amendment, so that we may vote on the amendment, on page 31, in reference to the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, and striking out the matter on page 32, line 11, to the bottom of the page, and to line 4, on page 33. No one opposes the balance of that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, let us first adopt the balance of the amendment, on page 33, commencing at line 5 and ending on line 23. There is no opposition to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the balance of the amendment referred to by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, strike out all from line 5 to line 23, inclusive.

Mr. MANN. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The vote should now be taken on the two amendments referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, on page 31, and the balance of the amendment that has not been adopted, on pages 32 and 33.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, on page 31, and also on pages 32 and 33, barring the part which has just been agreed to.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOPER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. There are Members in this vicinity who do not understand what is the amendment to be voted upon.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the language which is proposed to be stricken out read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 31, line 17, by striking out the words "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500."

And strike out, on pages 32 and 33, the following language:

Advancement of commercial and other interests as provided in the act approved August 5, 1909, and March 4, 1911: Director of the Consular Service, $4,500; counselor for the Department of State, and resident diplomatic officer, each at $7,500, and to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909; 8 officers to aid in important drafting work, 4 at $4,500 each and 4 at $3,000 each, to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the act approved August 5, 1909, and to be employed upon tariff, treaty, and trade relations and negotiations, any one of whom may be employed as chief of division of far eastern, Latin, American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations; assistant solicitor, $3,000; law clerk, $2,500; clerks—1 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 2 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each; 3 assistant messengers; in all, $69,160."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 172, nays 121, answered "present" 7, not voting 92, as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KAHN. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. To vote "aye" means a vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. A vote of "no" sustains the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 115, answered "present" 9, not voting 91, as follow:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 139, strike out the provisos beginning in line 16, as follows: "And provided further, That no person separated from the classified service under this provision shall directly or indirectly solicit indorsement for reappointment through any member of the legislative department, and any person violating this provision shall be denied reappointment: And provided further, That no head of an executive department shall receive or consider from any member of the legislative department any request for the reappointment of any person seeking employment in the classified service, and it shall be considered a violation of law for any member of the legislative department to submit to any executive officer a request for the reappointment of any person in said classified service."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FINLEY. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 61.

Mr. FINLEY. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] demands tellers. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-seven gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I object. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. A vote in the affirmative, I understand, will be in favor of striking that provision from the bill. Is that correct, sir?

Mr. SHERLEY. That was not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows as much about the amendment at present as the Chair does.

Mr. BUTLER. The "gentleman from Pennsylvania" would not assume to know as much.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not inform the gentleman at present.

Mr. BUTLER. We ought to know.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the motion is to strike out.

Mr. BUTLER. Thank you. We were some time in getting the information, but it is all right when it comes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I withdraw the objection which I made.

Mr. HELM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask what is before the House. Back here we could not tell.

The SPEAKER The question is not debatable. Those who are in favor of the amendment will, as their names are called, answer "aye," those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 239, nays 35, answered "present" 7, not voting 111, as follows:

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. PARRAN, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland. I voted "yea." I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENTS (H. DOC. NO. 749).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The present patent laws of the United States were enacted in practically their present condition in 1870, before the development of the industrial conditions which obtain to-day. The wisdom of the framers of the Constitution in providing that Congress shall have the power to promote the progress of science and the useful arts by securing for limited time to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries has been demonstrated by the fact that the industrial progress and development of the United States has been due largely to the stimulus to invention given by the protection afforded by the patent laws.

In recent years, however, combinations based upon patents have been formed which have succeeded in controlling very largely the output of particular industries, and this control has been extended by contracts based upon the patents, requiring the users of patented machines to buy from the corporations owning the patents or from firms under their control supplies or other articles to be used in connection with the patented machines. Some of the circuit courts of appeal have held that such contracts, based upon patents, were valid, and that those who violated the terms of such contracts were liable as contributory infringers. The correctness of such decisions has recently received the approval of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Sidney Henry et al. v. A. B. Dick Co., by the vote of four justices of the seven who heard the case. An application for a rehearing of that case by the full bench was made and denied, so that the construction put upon the existing law in that case must be regarded as conclusive. Several bills have been introduced into Congress, as I am informed, to obviate the effect of this decision so as to prevent a patentee from extending by contract the monopoly secured to him under the patent law. This question calls for careful consideration.

Again, large corporations, by absorbing patents relating to particular arts, have succeeded in dominating entire industries, and the only market to which an inventor of improvements upon such machines may offer his patents for sale is to such corporations. In many instances it is charged corporations buy patents for improvements, and, although the inventions covered thereby constitute a distinct improvement in the art, their manufacture is suppressed and the public never receives the benefit of such inventions during the life of the patent.

Some other countries have discouraged the shelving of inventions in this manner by laws requiring that the owner of a patent shall manufacture the invention covered by his patent within a certain period or that his patent shall be declared forfeited. Other countries provide that the owner of a patent who does not manufacture the invention in the country granting it within a reasonable time may be compelled to grant a license to anyone who may apply to manufacture and sell the invention upon such terms as may be determined to be reasonable by a public officer or by a court of competent authority. It is worthy of careful consideration whether or not legislation on some such lines should be enacted to prevent our patent laws from being made the basis of unjust monopoly, extending beyond the legitimate protection to inventors required to promote science and the useful arts or the means of stifling improvement and progress of the arts.

It is also claimed by some that legislation is necessary to enable an applicant to more speedily obtain his patent and also to prevent the holding of applications for patent in the United States Patent Office for a long period of time until the particular art to which the patent relates has grown up.

Certain amendments to the patent laws are required to make effective the provisions of the Convention of the International Union for the Protection of Industrial Property held at Washington and signed June 2, 1911.

Much complaint has been made that patents granted by the United States are not deemed prima facie valid by the courts and that preliminary injunctions are granted only upon patents which have been adjudicated to be valid by the courts or those whose validity has been prima facie established by public acquiescence for a considerable period of time. It is urged that the laws should be revised in such a manner that the issuance of a patent by the United States will carry with it the prima facie force and effect of a valid patent, and the burden placed upon him who would infringe that patent to establish its invalidity, rather than, as at the present time, to require the patentee to establish the validity of his patent before obtaining a preliminary injuncion or securing an award of damages for the intentional infringement of his patented invention.

Great care should be taken in any revision of the statutes relating to patents and patent rights not unduly to interfere with vested interests which have been properly created under the existing laws, or to impair the efficiency of a system from which so much benefit has been derived by the country. I am of the opinion that a careful study of the patent laws should be made by a commission of qualified persons, appointed for that purpose, with instructions to report such revision of those laws as may be necessary to harmonize them with the best thought and needs of our time; and I therefore recommend the enactment of a statute authorizing the President to appoint a commission to investigate the present state of the patent law and to report what, if any, changes or amendments should be made to conform that law with modern conditions and acquirements.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 10, 1912.

MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain remarks on the flood in the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the Mississippi River floods. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the experts in the Department of Agriculture have very kindly furnished me with some data which they think will be of interest to the farmers in the sections of the Mississippi Valley which have been overflowed by the recent flood, and I would like to have permission to print them in the RECORD so that I may circulate it among my constituents. The department, through Mr. Knapp's office, has made very careful inquiry into the subjects mentioned, and the suggestions contained in the data which I offer are based upon the experience of very many planters who have tried the experiments and have been successful in growing the crops indicated after previous floods.

The department, through its agents, has been busily engaged for the past few weeks both in ascertaining the best methods of growing crops after an overflow and also in locating the firms and individuals who are able to furnish the seed required, and a list of these has also been furnished, which will be found at the end of the manuscript which I ask leave to print.

The data referred to are as follows:

COTTON.

Cotton may be planted on overflowed land up to June 15 with the expectation of producing a fair crop with a normal season. Plant only quick-maturing varieties, such as King's, Toole's, Simpkins's, Money Maker, Bank Account, or some similar type. No more cotton should be planted than can be worked intensively and picked over once a week for weevil and punctured squares, if necessary. Cotton should be planted, if possible, on land that had been bedded before the overflow, taking the first land from which the water recedes. Follow up the water closely each day, planting as fast as the land is uncovered so that the cotton may have time to come up before the surface bakes. Seed for each day's planting should be wet and rolled in dirt or ashes the evening previous and put in piles over night to swell. Plant the next day by throwing the seed in the mud on top of the bed. Throw hard so the seed will be buried in the mud. In planting walk by the side of the bed. Do not trample the top of the bed or press in the seed with the foot, a hoe, or in any other manner. Prepared and planted in this way the seed should germinate and cotton be up in two or three days. Cultivate as soon as the surface is dry enough to permit with harrows or cultivators to break the crust and kill the weeds and grass. Thin to a stand as quickly as possible, then continue the usual cultivation.

BOLL WEEVIL.

If the boll weevil appear on the cotton in the flooded area, a prompt and persistent fight must be made to exterminate them. The infestation will probably be light, but must not on that account be overlooked. If there are any weevil they will appear on the young cotton almost as soon as it is up. They must be carefully picked by hand from the bud of the young cotton, and later on punctured squares must be picked and destroyed weekly. The weevil first appearing are old weevil that will soon die, and if they and the squares punctured by them are all destroyed the overflowed territory may be kept practically free of the weevil until late in the season. Wherever there was land above the overflow on which cotton was planted at about the usual time extra care must be used to locate such tracts and to see that all weevil and punctured squares are destroyed thereon. If this is neglected, such isolated fields may breed enough weevil to seriously threaten the crop on the overflowed land. Upland farmers everywhere should also make a close, persistent fight on the weevil by picking the adult weevil and infected squares. This will minimize possible damage to their own crop and reduce the number of weevil to migrate in the fall.

CORN.

If the water recedes in time to permit it, at least 10 days or two weeks should be allowed to intervene before planting corn and the ground should first be thoroughly prepared. Experience in overflowed districts has shown that this is necessary to prevent insect damage. It will also make subsequent cultivation easier and increase the chances of a good crop. Early maturing varieties of corn may be planted as late as June 10, and Mexican June corn possibly as late as July 25. Where the land was bedded before the overflow, sufficient preparation can be made by running cultivators over the beds twice. If the land was not bedded before the overflow, break shallow and harrow thoroughly before planting. Dwarf varieties of the Mexican June corn are usually the safest crop for late planting. If it can not be obtained, plant other early varieties such as Improved Leaming, Iowa Silver Mine, or other reliable seed of similar type. Cultivation should begin as soon as the corn is up and continue once a week until laid by.

SOY BEANS.

Soy beans can be planted as late as July 20 and mature seed. They make excellent food for man and stock and will grow on wetter soils and stand more cold than cowpeas and are also a surer crop for producing grain. For these reasons a more general use of them should be encouraged.

Where the land was plowed before the overflow the beds can be put in condition by harrows or cultivators. Where the land has not been broken plow shallow and harrow thoroughly before planting, as a good seed bed is very essential in securing a stand.

Drill the seed 1 to 2 inches deep, at the rate of one-third to one-half a bushel per acre. Mammoth yellow or Hollybrook are the two best varieties for southern conditions. With normal conditions and good cultivation the yield should be from 10 to 15 bushels of grain and a ton of straw per acre, if planted before July 5.

COWPEAS FOR SEED.

Cowpeas grown for seed can be planted as late as July 20, when such early maturing varieties as Whippoorwill and New Era are used. They should be planted in rows and cultivated to insure crop seed. Seed bed should be prepared before planting. When the land was plowed before the overflow, use harrow or cultivator. When not plowed break shallow and harrow thoroughly.

Plant in drill at the rate of one-third or one-half bushel per acre. Three or four cultivations with cultivators should be sufficient to keep down weeds and promote rapid growth.

A yield of from 8 to 15 bushels of grain and one-half to 1 ton of hay per acre may be expected under normal conditions.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House bill No. 1, granting service pensions to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and War with Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] calls up the conference report on House bill No. 1. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. ADAIR. I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is not very long. I think we had better have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 647).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $14 per month; 1½ years, $14.50 per month; 2 years, $15 per month; 2½ years, $15.50 per month; 3 years or over, $16 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $15 per month; 6 months, $15.50 per month; 1 year, $16 per month; 1½ years, $16.50 per month; 2 years, $17 per month; 2½ years, $18 per month; 3 years or over, $19 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $18 per month; 6 months, $19 per month; 1 year, $20 per month; 1½ years, $21.50 per month; 2 years, $23 per month; 2½ years, $24 per month; 3 years or over, $25 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $21 per month; 6 months, $22.50 per month; 1 year, $24 per month; 1½ years, $27 per month; 2 years or over, $30 per month. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month, without regard to length of service or age.

"That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico and has been honorably discharged therefrom, shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month.

"All of the aforesaid pensions shall commence from the date of filing of the applications in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension, under any other general or special law, than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

"SEC. 2. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

"SEC. 3. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions, or securing any pension, under this act, except in applications for original pension by persons who have not heretofore received a pension.

"SEC. 4. That the benefits of this act shall include any person who served during the late Civil War, or in the War with Mexico, and who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 7, 1897.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions, as each application for pension under this act is adjudicated, to cause to be kept a record showing the name and length of service of each claimant, the monthly rate of payment granted to or received by him, and the county and State of his residence; and shall at the end of the fiscal year 1914 tabulate the record so obtained by States and counties, and shall furnish certified copies thereof upon demand and the payment of such fee therefor as is provided by law for certified copies of records in the executive departments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico."

STATEMENT.

The bill as it passed the House proposed to grant pensions for 90 days' or more service in the Civil War or 60 days' in the War with Mexico and less than 6 months, $15 per month; for 6 months' service and less than 9 months, $20; for 9 months and less than 1 year, $25 per month; and for 1 year or more, $30 per month.

The bill was amended by the Senate by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a provision to amend the existing law, known as the act of February 6, 1907, so that pensions allowed under that law would be granted at the following rates and under the following conditions: When a man had reached the age of 62 years and had served 90 days in the Civil War he should receive $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50; 1 year, $14; 1½ years, $14.50; 2 years, $15; 2½ years, $15.50; 3 years and over, $16 per month. When such person had reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $15 per month; 6 months, $15.50; 1 year, $16; 1½ years, $16.50; 2 years, $17; 2½ years, $17.50; 3 years and over, $18. When such person had reached the age of 70 years and had served 90 days, $18; 6 months, $19; 1 year, $20; 1½ years, $21; 2 years, $22; 2½ years, $23; 3 years or over, $24 per month. When such person had reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days he should receive $21 per month; 6 months, $22.50; 1 year, $24; 1½ years, $25.50; 2 years, $27; 2½ years, $28.50; and 3 years and over, $30 per month.

It also provided that the Commissioner of Pensions should make a separate report for each county, State, Territory, or district, showing names and lengths of service, rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners in the United States.

It also provided that any person who was in receipt of an income of $2,400 per year should not be eligible to pension under this act.

Your conferees, after a full conference, reported an agreement to the effect that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment.

This amendment does not amend the existing law, but makes this a new act.

It provides rates differing from the rates in the Senate amendment as follows: When a person has served in the Civil War or War with Mexico and reached the age of 66 years and had a service of two and a half years he should receive $18 instead of $17 per month; three years' service, $19 instead of $18 per month. In case such person had reached the age of 70 years and served one and a half years, $21.50 per month instead of $21; two years, $23 per month instead of $22; two and a half years, $24 instead of $23 per month; three years and over, $25 per month instead of $24. And in case such person had reached the age of 75 years and served one and a half years, $27 instead of $25.50; two years, $30 per month instead of $27; two and a half years, $30 per month instead of $28.50; and three years, $30, as provided in the Senate amendment.

Your committee also recommended another amendment which provides that certain classes who are provided for in certain acts and joint resolutions of Congress and are now receiving pensions under existing laws should be entitled to the benefits of this act.

It also changes the provision in the matter of the Commissioner of Pensions publishing the names of the pensioners. It provides that he shall keep a record of the pensions which are allowed under this act, and at the end of the fiscal year 1914 should tabulate the same and give them to those who desire them upon the payment of fees for certified copies.

It also eliminates that feature of the Senate amendment providing that those who have an income of $2,400 should not be pensionable under this act.

Your committee also found it necessary to amend the title because of the fact that in view of the combination of age and service it could not be construed to be a service act. They therefore amended the title in accordance with the amendment adopted by your conference.

The amendment recommended by your conferees increases the amount as carried by the Senate amendment about $1,685,000.

Respectfully submitted.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOHN A. M. ADAIR,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, on the 8th day of December, 1911, this House took up the Sherwood dollar-a-day pension bill, and after four days of debate passed it by an overwhelming majority. The bill as it passed the House would have increased the pension roll about $52,000,000, and would have placed practically all soldiers on the rolls at one dollar per day, and the few remaining ones would have received large increases. The bill as it passed the House was indorsed by thousands of Grand Army posts all over the country, and it was universally agreed that it was not only the most liberal, but that it was the most equitable bill ever passed in the history of the country. I had a special pride in the Sherwood bill, as I was placed in charge of it on the floor of the House, and after its passage I felt that I had really accomplished much for the benefit of those who sacrificed home, health, and everything for the preservation of the Union. I was gratified, too, because of the fact that it passed a Democratic House, after the charge had been made that should a Democratic House be elected no pension legislation could be expected. The bill went over to the Senate on the 12th of December, and while the old soldiers were dying at the rate of over 3,000 each month, no action was taken by the Senate until March 28, at which time it voted down the Sherwood dollar-a-day bill, and passed the Smoot 50-cent bill, cutting the rates carried in the Sherwood bill more than twice in two. Against this action, protests came from all over the country, denouncing the action of the Senate, and insisting that a Republican Senate should be as liberal with the old soldiers as was this Democratic House. When the Senate bill came over to the House, I moved that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. My motion prevailed, and the Speaker appointed Messrs. SHERWOOD, ADAIR, and SULLOWAY as conferees on the part of the House, and the Senate named Messrs. MCCUMBER, BURNHAM, and GORE as conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the conference committee met time and time again during the past five weeks, and your conferees, representing the House, held out for more than a month, insisting on the House bill, but the conferees representing the Senate declined and refused to agree to the dollar-a-day bill, but finally agreed to an increase of $1,685,000 over the Smoot substitute. While the bill agreed upon was not satisfactory to the House conferees, it was the best we could get from the Senate, and we were compelled to accept it or get nothing. Section 1 of the bill agreed upon provides rates as follows:

SECTION 1. That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $14 per month; 1½ years, $14.50 per month; 2 years, $15 per month; 2½ years, $15.50 per month; 3 years or over, $16 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $15 per month; 6 months, $15.50 per month; 1 year, $16 per month; 1½ years, $16.50 per month; 2 years, $17 per month; 2½ years, $18 per month; 3 years or over, $19 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $18 per month; 6 months, $19 per month; 1 year, $20 per month; 1½ years, $21.50 per month; 2 years, $23 per month; 2½ years, $24 per month; 3 years or over, $25 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $21 per month; 6 months, $22.50 per month; 1 year, $24 per month; 1½ years, $27 per month; 2 years or over, $30 per month. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month, without regard to length of service or age.

It is believed a large number of soldiers who rendered short service will receive $30 per month under the provision fixing that rate for those who were wounded in battle or who incurred disabilities in service and as a result of such wounds or disabilities are now incapacitated from the performance of manual labor. The following table shows the increases under this bill and the number of soldiers benefited:

Age.	Length of service.	Number of pensioners.	Present rate.	Proposed rate.	Annual increase per pensioner.	Total increase per annum.

	Total	420,965				25,797,502.00

Now, Mr. Speaker, while I regret very much the refusal of the Senate to agree to the Sherwood dollar-a-day bill, I am nevertheless pleased over the fact that the House has, at least, forced that body to pass a bill which will distribute about $26,000,000 annually among needy and deserving soldiers in addition to what they are now drawing. For five years a few of us have led the fight in the House for a dollar-a-day pension bill, and while we have not succeeded in getting all we wanted, the passage of this bill shows our work has not been in vain. During the first four years of my service I was not a member of the Invalid Pension Committee, but at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress, because of my continuous and persistent effort on behalf of the old soldiers, I was placed on that committee, since which time I have been in a position to render them more valuable service than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill does not end pension legislation. While I know further legislation is impossible with the present membership of the Senate, I believe the election in November will retire to private life a number of Senators, whose services the country can well get along without, and place in their seats men who appreciate the services rendered by those who fought the battles of the Union, and who are willing to show their appreciation by voting adequate pensions to needy and deserving soldiers. I ask that this conference report be adopted, and serve notice now that I am going to be reelected in November, and during the Sixty-third Congress will continue the fight for more liberal pensions until all soldiers are placed on the rolls at $1 a day.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Gen. SHERWOOD] [Applause.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy only a few moments, because I am very anxious to get this bill to the White House this afternoon, so that the President can sign it before he goes to Ohio to enter that titanic combat with the ferocious lion tamer of the African jungles. [Laughter and applause.]

The bill has already been read. I want to say here and now and repeat what I have said heretofore, that I am opposed to an age-pension bill. I believe that all pensions should be for service, and that the pension roll should be a roll of honor. Since this bill went into conference I have heard from about 30,000 soldiers of the Civil War. I have had over 7,000 letters, besides resolutions from Grand Army posts, and about two to one say "take what you can get from the Senate conferees." The balance say that rather than have this substitute they would rather have nothing. That is the situation.

To show you that it is simply impossible to prepare a pension bill based upon both age and service, let me read you from this bill. Under this bill a soldier 75 years old who served 90 days gets $21 per month—a soldier called out in 1864, who received from $500 to $800 bounty and was probably never in battle. A soldier 69 years old who served two and a half years and was probably in 20 or 30 battles gets $18 a month.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Can the gentleman tell the House about how many soldiers there are now on the pension rolls who were never at the front and never left their own State?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I never have looked that up, and it would involve great labor to look it up. But Fox in his Regimental Losses, a book that you will find in the Congressional Library, says that there were 300 regiments that never sustained any fatalities. These were troops called out in 1864 and were not mustered in and equipped until the autumn of that year.

There is one feature of this bill that I want to call attention to. It is a service and age pension bill combined. This is the first time in the history of pension legislation that service has been recognized. This bill recognizes service. Now, my colleague, Mr. ADAIR, stated that under the estimates made by the Pension Office this bill is supposed to take about $25,000,000. That is a mistake. Not Mr. ADAIR'S mistake, but a mistake in the Pension Bureau. It will not take any such sum. I have here in my hand an estimate made in the Pension Office, certified to by the Department of the Interior, under date of February 2, 1912, and this was an estimate made upon the Smoot substitute, which passed the Senate, and there are only a few increases, which are marked in red letters, increasing the Smoot substitute, which increases the amount to about $1,675,000.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Has the gentleman any assurance that the President will sign this bill?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I think I have. I said in a public statement that the President would sign a bill carrying not over $18,000,000, and I am going to make that good.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman think it is in accord with the proprieties for the President to say what bill he will sign or what bill he will veto? I trust that President Taft, who always observes the proprieties of his office, has not done that.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I did not say I was speaking for the President. I said I had promised that he would do it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am glad I asked the gentleman the question, for I would not like to have the impression go out that the President would be guilty of that.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Now, to show you how utterly valueless the estimates of the Pension Office are, I am going to give you the facts. I am sorry the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not in his seat, because when the bill passed the House, on December 12, 1911, he used the figures of the Secretary of the Interior that my dollar a day bill would cost $75,000,000.

And that statement was wired by the Associated Press, and all the soldier-hating newspapers and magazines used this false and dishonest estimate in order to defeat the bill. I have the documents now in my possession that that bill as it passed the House would take approximately $41,000,000 and no more; I went through the records of the War Office, and I have the official roster of the War Office of every call made by Abraham Lincoln, the muster in and muster out of every regiment that went to the front from 1861 to 1865. I went over the estimates with Gen. Ainsworth, under whose auspices this roster was prepared in 1905, and the bill as reported by the Invalid Pensions Committee to this House would only take $34,000,000, as I stated at the time the bill was under consideration. It will be remembered that the House added some seven millions to the cost of the bill by amendments. Now, let me show you something that is absolutely convincing. Here is a table, including 30 different propositions, certified to by the Secretary of the Interior, Walter L. Fisher, making an estimate of about $25,000,000 on the bill under consideration.

Here is a very elaborate table giving length of service and the number of soldiers who served three years or over who are now 62 years old. The estimate is 27,921. This is certified by the Secretary of the Interior as accurate. Only 26 per cent of the soldiers enlisted in 1861 to 1865 are alive to-day. That would indicate that there were 100,000 of those soldiers enlisted during the war. Let me call your attention to another fact conceded in the War Office. Of the 600,000 soldiers called out by President Lincoln in 1862 not a single regiment served the full three years. It took nearly three months to recruit, muster in, and equip a regiment and send it to the front. The first muster under the calls of 1862 was in August, and the war closed on the 26th of April, 1865. My regiment, the One hundred and eleventh Ohio, was one of the last mustered out, because we were ordered to Salisbury, N. C., pending the establishment of law and order in that State. It was mustered out the 15th of July, 1865. The longest that any of these regiments served was about 2 years and 11 months, so that there was not a soldier who enlisted in 1862 who served three years or over. The official roster of the War Office justifies this statement.

There was not a single soldier, then, who served three years and over except those enlisting in 1861. How old must a soldier have been when he enlisted in 1861 to be only 62 years of age now? Eleven years old. There are only two men that have been heard from—one Josiah Williams, of Indiana, and a drummer boy in Colorado—who were 11 years old when they went into the service and who are alive to-day. Here you have a table from the Pension Office, certified to by the Secretary of the Interior, that there are alive to-day 27,921 soldiers who served over three years in the Civil War. This shows conclusively that this table is absolutely false and fraudulent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes additional to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that Mr. Julius W. Pell, of Grantsville, W. Va., is alive, who enlisted at the age of 11 years, or perhaps a few weeks younger.

Mr. SHERWOOD. That is another. That makes three.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. He was the youngest soldier of the Civil War and resides in my town, and is one of its best citizens.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Here is this statement certified to by the Secretary of the Interior of the soldiers now 62 years old who are alive to-day, and he estimates the number, not 3 but 27,921. And the Secretary of the Interior certifies to the estimate of the Pension Bureau that it will cost $1,340,280 to pay these soldiers who enlisted in 1861 and who are now only 62 years old. I have some other documents here to show you——

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. If they will give me a little more time I will answer all questions, but I can not do it in the short time I have.

Mr. STERLING. Has the gentleman the figures here showing the number of soldiers now drawing pensions who served more than two years? How many served more than two years who are now drawing a pension?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I have not the statistics with me for over two years. I estimate the number of survivors who served one year and over at 255,000.

I want to call attention to this statement which I hold in my hand, from the Pension Office, made on the 23d of April, 1912—a regular report from the Pension Office, certified to by the Secretary of the Interior. How came that report to be made? The conferees on the part of the House submitted a bill, of which this table I hold in my hand is a synopsis. I prepared it myself and made an estimate. I spent three days and part of three nights in making the estimate, and the conferees made a motion that it be submitted to the Pension Office for a report. They made this report, I think, in about four days, and it is a very elaborate report and I want to call attention to it, especially on the first and third pages. It says:

> This is based upon a careful estimate made by the Commissioner of Pensions on every item, age, length of service, of the whole 400,000 soldiers now on the pension roll.

Here is another statement:

> In each case the reports of the War Department were accepted as showing the date of enlistment and the date of discharge and the length of service, so it was entirely upon the official reports of that department in the cases examined.

It is a very elaborate report. Now, I turn to the last page, and I call attention to it. It was a very important document:

> It is confidently believed that the data used by the Bureau of Pensions in making the various estimates is accurate, absolutely trustworthy, and beyond successful contradiction. The compilation of the War Department in regard to the troops furnished by the different States, etc., does not in any way conflict with the average length of service compiled by the Bureau of Pensions.

That is dated on the 23d of April, 1912.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I wish the gentleman would put this statement in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERWOOD. All right. Here is another report from the department reported by the Secretary of the Interior, an estimate made by the same officers and experts of the Pension Office. How came this to be made? This is evidently not a public document. It was made in order to help the conferees to eliminate the provisions of the Senate bill which required the Commissioner of Pensions to prepare a list of all the soldiers with lengths of service, and so forth, and print it in his annual report. Now, there are only 11 days' difference in these two reports. I want to read, for your information, some vital extracts from this report. I quote:

> I have the honor to acknowledge, etc., a request containing statement or table, giving names and length of service of all the pensioners of the United States. The Commissioner of Pensions advises me that it is probable that more than 400,000 claims will be filed under this bill should it become a law, etc.

The commissioner further advises me that to furnish the list of pensioners with the data asked for in this section at the time of submitting his next annual report would require the services of nearly the entire available force of the Bureau of Pensions for two or three months in its preparation. What does that mean? It means that the Pension Bureau has no reliable data, just as I said on the floor of the House before, and as I said before the Senate Committee on Pensions in a hearing they gave me on the 22d of January. They have not the data at all from which to make any reliable estimate. The commissioner states it will be necessary to withdraw from the files of the bureau the papers of 400,000 individual pension cases and make a careful examination of the reports of the War and Navy Departments in order to determine the length of service, and so forth.

Here is another statement:

However, if the requirements of the length of service be omitted, all the other data might be obtained from the records of the Pension Office.

Again I quote from this remarkable document:

Omitting the length of service, it is believed the other data could be obtained from the pension agencies.

This report also came from the Pension Bureau through the Secretary of the Interior.

I need not repeat here, what I have claimed from the start, that the hand-me-down estimates of the Pension Office are mere guesses and the estimates of $75,000,000 as the cost of the original House bill No. 1 were padded to the amount of over $28,000,000. They were deliberately padded and the fraudulent figures telegraphed to the country in order to defeat a just and liberal pension law. These two reports, both from the same bureau and made only 11 days apart, one claiming their estimates are absolutely correct and from official records and the other admitting that they have no data upon which to estimate the length of service of the surviving soldiers, are sufficient evidence to condemn the methods of this bureau without further comment. One report was made to discredit a fairly liberal pension bill, and the second report was made to help eliminate the provisions in the Senate pension bill requiring the publication of names and length of service of all the pensioners. In one report they claimed they had all the records necessary to estimate the cost of a pension bill; in the other report they say it would require the services of the entire available force of the Pension Bureau for two months to secure the records of age, length of service, and so forth, of the surviving soldiers.

My good friends, I am not in temper to talk about this matter. In order to fittingly criticize this fraud upon the old soldiers of the country I should have to use some unparliamentary language, which I have never yet used on the floor of this House. [Applause.]. I have no complaint to make of the Secretary of the Interior. He signed these two conflicting reports only 11 days apart. He signed whatever was sent from the Pension Office. I do claim, however, that he ought to know what he is signing when he approves an official paper of such vital import; but he is young and new in the queerish business of modern statecraft. He was born in 1862, the second year of the war. No doubt he was a very sweet and promising baby, and he probably knew as much about pensions in 1862 as he does to-day. [Applause.]

I am for this bill, not because it provides an equitable distribution of benefits to the most worthy and meritorious, but because it will alleviate distress in tens of thousands of soldier homes. I am for this bill, not that it is the best we should have, but because it is the best we could get. I am for this bill, not because it does ample justice to the bronzed and grizzled veterans, staggering to a nearby grave, but because it will alleviate the urgent needs of tens of thousands of my comrades, and will inspire a sense of gratitude in many a lonesome soldier's heart that this great Government, in the hour of its strength and prosperity has not been unmindful of the heroic men who saved it in the hour of its desperation and despair. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want this conference report to be adopted and this bill to become a law without indicating my approval of the measure and my willingness to vote therefor.

I do not mean by this that I prefer this bill to the so-called Sulloway bill passed by this House during the Sixty-first Congress, or to the Sherwood bill—H. R. 1—as it passed this House last December. Personally I would have preferred that Congress should have passed a bill similar to the Sulloway bill. But if such a measure could not have become a law, then I would have preferred the Sherwood bill as it passed the House rather than the bill that is presented in the conference report and as we have it before us now. But as I can not get such a measure as I want, I will gladly vote for what I can get. I will vote for this bill, not because it is what it should be, but because it is better than the present law. I will vote for it, not because it gives the ex-Union soldiers all they deserve, but because the bill gives them, in part, that to which they are justly entitled. I will vote for this bill, not because I believe the measure does full justice to the old veterans, but because it is in the direction of justice. I will vote for this bill, not because in enacting this law we give complete recognition to these men, these old soldiers, for the service they rendered this country, but because the bill goes one step farther toward such recognition. I will vote for this bill, not because the Nation by enacting this law shows a just appreciation of what these men did in the interests of humanity and for human liberty, but because it shows we have some appreciation thereof. I will vote for this bill, not because I think the pensions therein granted measure the debt of gratitude we owe the soldiers of 1861 to 1865, but because the pensions herein granted, inadequate as they are, still show that we honor these brave men who endured all the hardships, privations, and dangers of war that the Union might be preserved. I vote for this bill, not because I think the provisions entirely equitable, just, and right, but because, on the whole, hundreds of thousands of old soldiers, constituting a grand army of our most worthy and patriotic citizens, will receive substantial material aid thereunder.

Finally, I vote for this bill because many hundreds of my own constituents and their families under its provisions will be largely benefited.

Of all the many duties which I have had to perform as a Representative in Congress I have responded to no call so cheerfully as I have to every request from an old soldier for assistance. I have done nothing that afforded me more pleasure than the aid and assistance which I have rendered the old soldiers, their widows, and orphans, in securing proper adjustment of their pension matters. And nothing has given me so much mental anguish as my inability to secure the enactment of special acts of Congress for the relief of worthy and needy old soldiers. It is therefore to me a real joy and delight to cast a vote for a single law, which will help thousands within my own district and hundreds of thousands throughout the Nation.

When this bill shall have become a law we will be a stronger and greater Nation. The recognition we give to the men who saved this Nation is an act of the National Government that will inspire our citizenship with greater patriotism. Any nation that neglects the men who have fought its battles thereby exhibits an ingratitude unworthy a great, generous, patriotic people.

We know not what the future may bring forth. May peace ever reign in this beloved country. May war clouds never again rise above our national horizon. May civil strife never again be the unhappy lot of this Republic. But, whatever may come, our pension laws should reflect the highest gratitude a great and free people can show to the men who risked all for the life of the Nation and the honor of the flag. Let the pension laws enacted by the people's Representatives in the Congress of the United States teach the boys of to-day and the boys of to-morrow that the highest service a citizen can render his country is to fight its battles in the dark hour of danger and distress. May the people of this great Nation never become so engrossed and absorbed in other matters that they shall begrudge the pensions paid to the soldiers of the Republic. May the spirit of patriotism among the people never diminish to such an extent that we shall cease to appreciate in the highest degree the everlasting debt of gratitude, which all the world owes to the men who saved the Government "of the people, by the people, for the people" from dissolution and death.

The committee estimates that this bill will add an average of $22,000,000 a year, for the next five years, to the amount the National Government will pay in pensions to the veterans of the Civil War. This will make the amount we pay annually for pensions something near $175,000,000. The total annual payment seems large. But the amount is insignificant compared with the great service these men rendered. Besides, the Nation is rich. Our national wealth exceeds $130,000,000,000. At the outbreak of the Civil War our national wealth was but $16,000,000,000. The value of the products of our farms in 1860 was one and a half billions of dollars. Last year the products of our farms were worth $9,000,000,000. At the time these soldiers were fighting the battles of the Union the annual products of all our manufacturing establishments were worth less than $2,000,000,000. Last year our mills and factories and manufacturing establishments produced merchandise worth $20,000,000,000. At the time our Civil War was in progress we had a population of 31,000,000. Our population now exceeds 92,000,000. We are the richest Nation on earth. Our people are the best clothed, best housed, and best fed Nation on earth. We have poverty in this country it is true. But with all of our poverty we are nevertheless a great, rich, prosperous people. In the amount of our wealth we lead all other nations. Our people have an abundance of all things that will contribute to their health and happiness. Our people enjoy greater freedom and have within their reach more to contribute to their welfare and happiness than have the people of any other country in the world.

So we behold our country to-day. With all its wealth and all its prestige among nations, with all its power for good in the world, with all its hundred millions of happy, contented, and prosperous people, and we wonder what it would have been had it not been for the service rendered by the soldiers of the Union Army. We realize, then, that the amount we have paid and will pay as pensions to these old soldiers is insignificant compared to the wealth that has been made possible through the sacrifices they made and the deeds they performed.

This is not all. The influence of their deeds will not end to-day, to-morrow, next week, or next year. These men are rapidly passing away. Every year scores of thousands of the Boys in Blue answer the last roll call on earth. Their ranks are swiftly depleting. All the soldiers of the Republic who fought the battles of the great Civil War will soon have gone from us, but the influence of their work will go on and on. The benefits of their deeds will be enjoyed by generations to come. The country which they saved will remain—the home of millions of the happiest people on earth. The flag for which they fought will continue to be the emblem of liberty and freedom, and millions from every nation on earth will continue to seek refuge under the protection of its beneficent folds. The beneficiaries of the act which we are passing to-day will soon pass away, but the Union will live, our free institutions will endure, the Stars and Stripes will still wave, and the good which these brave men did will abide with our people until our institutions shall crumble and the Republic shall be no more. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this conference report, whether I am allowed to speak or not. I voted against the bill before the House for reasons that I stated then, and also against the Sulloway bill. I thought it was too great a drain upon the Treasury of the United States. But this bill does not call for the amount of money that either of those bills did, but for only a small portion—less than a third—of the amount. I think that this more nearly covers the ideas which I expressed upon the Sulloway bill, about the proper legislation in reference to pensions, than if I had drawn a bill myself. I very cheerfully join with the friends of this measure in voting to sustain this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAIR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, Gen. SHERWOOD, for succeeding at last in being able to write upon the statute books another general pension bill. While we have voted and will continue to vote large sums of money out of the National Treasury, no money will do so much good as the money carried in this bill. [Applause.] We could not, if we would, fully recompense in dollars and cents the men who saved the Union. We owe it to them, we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to our common country that no man who defended the flag and helped preserve the Union shall ever be compelled to find refuge in a poorhouse.

Had the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] had his way these pensions would have been larger. They could not be too large if we attempted to pay in full the great debt that we owe to the men who followed Grant, Sherman, Thomas, and Sheridan. And may that brave and gallant old soldier, Gen. SHERWOOD, continue to represent the Toledo (Ohio) district in this great body. [Applause.]. If I was commissioned to give that side of the House advice, I would say, "Gentlemen, you could not do a wiser thing than place him on your ticket as a running mate with the honored Speaker of this House." [Applause.]

For the grand old soldiers of the district I represent I wish to extend to Gen. SHERWOOD, for his unremitting and unceasing efforts in their behalf, their most grateful thanks and appreciation. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] is unavoidably absent, and at his request I want to ask unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] may have unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY].

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement on this bill is a matter of considerable gratification to me, although it fails to entirely conform to my notions of justice. My father was a Confederate soldier. He served three years and nine months in the Confederate Army, and has two wounds received in service that he will carry with him to his grave. It gives me extreme pleasure at this time to know that a Democratic House has realized the responsibility and obligation our people owe to the men who helped make the existence of this Government possible, and has attempted to repay that obligation by compensating them, as far as we are able, for their sacrifices and sufferings.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the admirable service-pension bill introduced by Gen. SHERWOOD and passed by this Democratic House has been so amended in the Senate as to reduce the monetary recognition by this country of the patriotic services of its defenders. No recognition of those who suffered in defense of the Union can ever be too great by this Republic. Through their heroic actions and self-sacrifice treason was suppressed and the Union was maintained. It is the easiest thing in the world for men who never participated in that great conflict to poke fun and ridicule at the veterans for being identified with pension legislation; these critics represent the defenders of the Union as mendicants devoid of honor. Let us remember that no legislation can ever fully compensate these heroes for the great sacrifice they made and the hardships they endured. At every banquet board we hear unlimited praise for the greatness of our Nation; its magnificent attainments, and the unbounded future that lies before it are held up for our admiring approbation and applause; its united citizenship is extolled, and its marvelous industrial development is paraded as one of the wonders of the age. The conditions which we constantly praise would not exist were it not for the men who answered the summons of Lincoln. This Government should not retreat from its consideration of the claims of patriotic worth and endeavor. It would be the acme of cruelty to turn our backs upon these deserving men when most of them are within the pale of death itself. They are fast disappearing. The death roll of these veterans is 100 a day, or about 40,000 a year. If there ever was a time when gratitude should manifest itself, it is in the period of their old age. I have introduced many private pension bills, and I recognize full well that most of them can not pass, unless my term of service should be extended over many years, owing to the fact that but a limited number of bills are passed for a Member of this House during each session. Most of these cases I have examined personally. I have spoken to the bowed and bent veterans who have not many days to live. Many of the cases have been pathetic in the extreme, and all of them have been deserving of the kindliest consideration. Most of these men for whom I have introduced pensions must, as a matter of course, be denied the beneficent help which special legislation affords. This is unfair to the remainder, whose cases are as deserving, and for that reason, among many others, I voted for the Sherwood pension bill, in order, that the same dispensation of justice might be given to all.

My colleague, Mr. ADAIR, in his speech in this House, succinctly stated a proposition which should be engraved in the minds of the American people when he said:

> I have heretofore stated on the floor of the House, and I will state it again, that the old soldier was never paid in money worth a hundred cents on the dollar, but the bondholder has been paid in full and in gold. By an act in 1869, known as "An act to strengthen the public credit," Congress made these same bonds payable in gold, and millions of dollars of money went into the pockets of men who loved their money more than they loved their country, while the men who sacrificed health, home, and everything, and who loved their country better than their money, and who were willing to give up all God had given them for the preservation of the States are still unpaid. We have therefore by national legislation declared that money is more sacred than manhood; that lucre is more valuable than patriotism; that greed shall be recognized in national legislation above and beyond the blood of martyrs shed in a sacred cause. If the Union soldiers had been paid in money worth a hundred cents on the dollar, they would have received in excess of what was paid them the sum of $51,061,222. In other words, this was the depreciation on their monthly pay, and has been withheld from them for a period of 48 years. The interest on this vast sum of money for 48 years, not compounded, but simple interest at 6 per cent, would be $147,056,319; now add to this the principal and you have the sum of $198,117,541 honestly due and, as a matter of justice and right, should be paid. This vast sum of money, together with what could be saved by discontinuing the 17 unnecessary pension agencies and what could be saved by making examinations unnecessary, as this bill will do, would go a long way toward paying pensions for some time to come.

I am glad to recognize in my reasoning upon the pension legislation this great argument of Mr. ADAIR, so capably expressed. It has also occurred to me that the great question of the high cost of living which agitates the public mind should enter into the solution of this question. We all recognize that the purchasing power of the dollar has depreciated.

If this is so, and no one doubts it, why should not the Government advance the rate of pension to the most deserving class of all, namely, the men who made possible the perpetuation of the Union with its attendant blessings and liberties? Half of them have been receiving but $12 per month for many years. Those $12 will not buy to-day what they would have bought when originally granted to them. As a matter of simple justice they are entitled to be compensated now at a rate which will provide them with a sum of money equal in purchasing power to that which was originally given them. I will not enlarge at this time upon the reasons for the proper recognition of the honest claims of these men. I rose principally to say that there had been criticism in some quarters not only of the veterans, but of those who recognized the justice of their cause. For that reason I am particularly anxious to say that I have no apology to offer for my vote in favor of the Sherwood pension bill. [Applause.]

For the benefit of those who are interested in this legislation I will here incorporate the Sherwood bill as amended in the Senate and in conference and destined in a day or two to become law:

An act (H. R. 1) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; one year, $14 per month: one and a half years, $14.50 per month; two years, $15 per month; two and a half years, $15.50 per month; three years or over, $16 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $15 per month; six months, $15.50 per month; one year, $16 per month; one and a half years, $16.50 per month; two years, $17 per month; two and a half years, $18 per month; three years or over, $19 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $18 per month; six months, $19 per month; one year, $20 per month; one and a half years, $21.50 per month; two years, $23 per month; two and a half years, $24 per month; 3 years or over, $25 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $21 per month; six months, $22.50 per month; one year, $24 per month; one and a half years, $27 per month; two years or over, $30 per month. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month, without regard to length of service or age.

That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico and has been honorably discharged therefrom, shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month.

All of the aforesaid pensions shall commence from the date of filing of the applications in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension, under any other general or special law, than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

SEC. 2. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

SEC. 3. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions, or securing any pension, under this act, except in applications for original pension by persons who have not heretofore received a pension.

SEC. 4. That the benefits of this act shall include any person who served during the late Civil War, or in the War with Mexico, and who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions, as each application for pension under this act is adjudicated, to cause to be kept a record showing the name and length of service of each claimant, the monthly rate of payment granted to or received by him, and the county and State of his residence; and shall at the end of the fiscal year 1914 tabulate the record so obtained by States and counties, and shall furnish certified copies thereof upon demand and the payment of such fee therefor as is provided by law for certified copies of records in the executive departments.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. THISTLEWOOD].

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. From Illinois. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THISTLEWOOD] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it would be no discredit to me if I were a citizen of Missouri [laughter and applause], but coming from the great State of Illinois, I could not allow a slip of that kind to pass without correction. [Applause.] And before I proceed, Mr. Speaker, I want to get it before your minds where I actually reside. The gentleman from Indiana locates me in Missouri, and the Speaker locates me in Illinois, where I actually reside. I think, however, I am the only Member of this House who can justly lay claim to represent a part of two States. I feel that I belong in Illinois—am a thorough Illinoisian—yet it is a fact that a portion of my district lies in the State of Missouri. Within my district is the old town of Kaskaskia. It was the first capital of the State of Illinois, the first metropolis of all the great western country—the largest city west of the Allegheny Mountains 150 years ago, and the first settlement made on the soil of Illinois was at Kaskaskia; and yet the forces of nature—the Mississippi River—have placed this town on the west bank of that stream. A few years ago that mighty stream proceeded to cut for itself a new channel and left Kaskaskia in Missouri, yet the people of the island, though attached to Missouri, do their voting in Illinois, pay their taxes—except on the part of the town that was washed away—in Illinois. The grant of the French Government of the land upon which Kaskaskia was built was made to the people in common and held by them jointly, but within the past two years the governor of Illinois has caused the land to be platted and sold, making satisfactory arrangements with the squatters or residents who were living on the land. It was here that Gen. George Roger Clarke, in 1778, made his famous march across southern Illinois from Fort Massac, captured Fort Gage and its garrison, with Kaskaskia and all that great country extending north and west of the Ohio River, and then marched in the wintertime across Illinois and captured Vincennes. Thus, through the foresight and courage of Gen. Clarke, this country became a part of Virginia, and was forever afterwards held as American territory. There is one entire precinct of Illinois that lies on Kaskaskia Island and on Missouri soil, yet to all intents and purposes they are citizens of Illinois. I take great pride in representing in this Congress perhaps the oldest settled part of Illinois. It was held by the French up to 1765, captured by England, and held until Gen. Clarke captured it in 1778.

I do not rise to make any extended argument in behalf of this bill, Mr. Speaker, because I think every Member of this House knows what I favor. I am very glad to see the pension bill where I believe it will ultimately pass and become a law. I know people are inclined to complain about pensions, but I know that this pension legislation has been promised by both the great political parties in every national convention for 10 years, and in many of the State conventions as well, and this money paid out for pensions is the most evenly distributed money, perhaps, that goes from the National Treasury. To show that it is no burden on the Nation, I want to quote from a distinguished son of Tennessee, from a speech delivered by him, or in a colloquy between himself and Congressman RODDENBERY, of Georgia. I refer to Representative MOON. He said:

I want to ask this question: Is the gentleman aware of the fact that under the policy of the Federal Government internal revenue is raised for the purpose of defraying the expenses of war and pensions? Is the gentleman further advised of the fact that all the States that participated in the Confederacy in the last fiscal year paid of internal revenue into the Government of the United States less than $28,000,000, and that the States that stood for the Union paid of internal revenue about $293,000,000? [Applause.] Let me continue my question. Is the gentleman further aware that the Southern States are getting back in pensions distributed in its borders in the aggregate more money than goes out from those States in payment of pensions?

Is the gentleman not further aware that the late Confederate States are drawing from the United States Treasury in benefits by way of river and harbor and other internal improvements and by way of pensions and other sources nearly $2, if not more, where it pays into the Federal Treasury $1 from all ascertained sources of revenue? [Applause.] I want to say as a Democrat and as a southern man I am tired of this contemptible sectional rot. [Loud applause.]

I want to thank each and all. I want to thank the Democratic majority, and I want to thank each and every Member who is going to support this bill for their influence and their support in its passage. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want an opportunity to vote for the adoption of this report, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I extended some of my remarks in the RECORD before; that is, I got leave and prepared some remarks, but never put them in. I now want to ask leave to renew my attempt, and extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THISTLEWOOD] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] moves the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RODDENBERY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERY. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, when a bill and conference report is called up, and one Member obtains the floor and parcels out the time to the friends of the bill, that no Member opposed to the bill shall have an opportunity to be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman what the rule is. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] had an hour to do what he pleased with. He could have used it all himself in making a speech or parceled it out to others to suit himself. If he had not moved the previous question, the next gentleman who addressed the Chair would have had an hour, and so on ad infinitum. He moves the previous question.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The point of order is that it is not in order for the Speaker to entertain the motion for the previous question made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] when the gentleman from Indiana had been recognized for the purpose of general debate, and that the gentleman from Indiana, while still so recognized and within his time, makes a motion for the previous question, denying to a Member opposed to the bill the right or opportunity to address the Chair and be heard in opposition to the passage of the bill. Being opposed to this legislation, I desire to oppose the measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain that part of the situation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] had an absolute right to do what he pleased with his hour, provided he observed the rules of the House. He could make any motion that he pleased. He could make it at the beginning of his hour, or he could make it in the middle of his hour, or he could make it at the end of his hour. The question is on agreeing to the motion for the previous question.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state, in justice to myself, that I yielded time to every Member of the House who asked for it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not need to make any explanation of his conduct. The question is on agreeing to the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-six gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The doors will be closed, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed, "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 57, answered "present" 9, not voting 150, as follows:

PRINTING COPIES OF HOUSE BILL NO. 1.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be 30,000 copies of the law print of this bill which has just passed. (Public, No. 155.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] asks unanimous consent that there be 30,000 copies of the law print of this bill.

Mr. MANN. It is called the public-act print.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, how does the gentleman propose to have the copies distributed?

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Through the document room, as usual.

Mr. MANN. I think, undoubtedly, more copies will be required. It costs very little to have them printed. Thirty thousand copies will be enough to go to the document room, and then more can be printed later.

Mr. RODDENBERY. As I understand, the request is that 30,000 copies of the law be printed?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The custom heretofore has been that the President occasionally signs these bills before they become laws. I do not know what engagements may prevent that now, and until he does sign it I shall object. I have no objection to printing the law, but to ask unanimous consent for the printing of 30,000 copies of a law before it has gone to the President and received Executive approval is a little premature.

Mr. MANN. It will not be printed unless it becomes a law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he learned aliunde that the President signed the bill shortly after it passed. The Chair does not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois is that the request be modified to so many copies to be published of the act.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. That is the request I made.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Ohio is that if the bill is signed by the President, 30,000 copies be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how many pages are there of the bill?

Mr. MANN. There will not be more than two sides of one sheet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSIONS.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 24016) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24016) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldier and sailors of said war.

The name of Samuel Fulks, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David W. Dalrymple, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Seborn J. Mullins, late of Company B, First Regiment Georgia Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eliza Crall, widow of William Crall, late of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William B. Whitney, late of Company G, First Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander Hastings, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard J. Burges, late of Company A, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Ingraham, late of Company B, Nineteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Maurice Hennessy, late of Company I, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Anthony, late of Company D, Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joshua M. Moore, late of Company A, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Flack, late of Company D, Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John G. Price, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi J. Sliver, late of Company E, Thirty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Lutz, late of Company F, Sixty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elliott A. Clarke, late of Company A, One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Michael Shiverdecker, late of Company E, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the bottom of page 36 the following:

"Provided, That after July 1, 1912, no pension under this act or under any other act, general or special, shall be paid to a pensioner of African descent until such time as all inmates of national soldiers' homes of African descent are consolidated, removed, and domiciled in a national soldiers' home at a place separate and apart from any other such home occupied by any other soldiers and veterans of the Civil War or other wars.

"Provided further, That after July 1, 1912, all inmates of national soldiers' homes of African descent shall be domiciled at a distinctly separate home maintained exclusively for such inmates."

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, to that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to submit a few remarks, and I understand that under the rule I have but five minutes. On a former occasion—April 15 I think it was—I made some brief and moderate observations on the Negro race, its relation to society and politics, the great mistake that our Government has made in undertaking by constitutional amendment and other legislation to put the African in this country on a political and social equality with the superior or Caucasian race.

At that time I did not have in mind, and can not conceive now, of all the excesses and evils that result from that abortive and unfortunate effort of artificially establishing and maintaining racial equality on the part of our Government. It is no less detrimental to us than it is to the negro himself.

A few days after that speech was made I received the following letter, which letter primarily gave rise to the amendment providing for placing whites and negroes in separate homes, which I have just offered. The letter is from the inmate of a national soldiers' home—an old soldier of the Civil War, a pensioner, poverty stricken, but at the same time one of the remaining sentinels, one of the remaining marks of that great type of American citizenship, the American soldier, and when he submits a letter touching upon this question and making complaint I think his petition should be presented to the Congress, although he is humble and although he is a pensioner on the affectionate charge of the Government.

I have stricken out such parts of the letter as were overcommendatory of the person to whom it was addressed, and still left the sense remain intact. The letter was addressed to me. It is as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY HOME,
———, April 24, 1912.

Hon. S. A. RODDENBERY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I write to thank you for your * * * speech printed in the RECORD of April 15. It did surely hit the nail on the head—one of the best I ever read on the subject. If it had included the national home it would have been perfect. Here the niggers have one of the most prominent barracks and tables in the home. They are in the first row of seats on the camp grounds, the first to be seen on entering the gates, and the last on going out. * * * I am informed it is worse in other homes—they even sit side by side at tables—not even a table by themselves. Oh, the nigger. And when the old veterans are laid away they are laid side by side by a nigger. They do not even then have a place of their own to meet their Maker. It surely is what Gen. Sherman said of war—in the national homes.

* * * * * * *

I hope to live long enough to take you by the hand and personally thank you again for what you said, and what you think of the nigger.

I will have to ask that my name be not mentioned * * *; it might make trouble for me.

Again thanking you, I am,
Truly, yours,

———— ————,
Late of New York Volunteers.

That man, an old soldier, is in a national home in a State west of the Mississippi River. I submit to you that these old men are entitled to the same separate domicile in these homes as we are entitled to in our own homes, and no greater duty of decency or respect for the veterans in this country can rest upon the Government than to apportion the African a separate home for his domicile and give to the heroes who fought the battles of the sixties a separate home. In answer to this old veteran's appeal, no doubt concurred in by thousands of his venerable comrades, I hope that you will adopt this amendment; I am for it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] rises in his place to-day for the first time to defend the white veteran soldier of the Civil War. His defense comes in the form of the following amendment:

Provided, That after July 1, 1912, no pension under this act or under any other act, general or special, shall be paid to a pensioner of African descent until such time as all inmates of National Soldiers' Homes of African descent are consolidated, removed, and domiciled in a National Soldiers' Home at a place separate and apart from any other such home occupied by any other soldiers and veterans of the Civil War or other wars.

Provided further, That after July 1, 1912, all inmates of National Soldiers' Homes of African descent shall be domiciled at a distinctly separate home maintained exclusively for such inmates.

It will be remembered that it is the gentleman from Georgia who has fought every pension bill offered on the floor of this House ever since he became a Member of Congress. He has taken the pains to express his opposition to every bill for the relief of the men who fought to preserve the Union. It will not do for him to come now in the guise of the Civil War veteran's friend in order that he may the better express his hatred for the negro. No; the white soldier of the Civil War needs no defense at the gentleman's hands, and his denunciation of the negro will fall far short of accomplishing its purpose. His professed interest in the white man who fought to preserve the Union is well understood here. The gentleman deceives no one but himself by what he says. The hearts of the American people beat with gratitude for the men who fought to save the flag. They look to their Representatives here to pass such laws as will provide the means to keep them from want for the few remaining years they are to be with us. The country owes them a debt of gratitude which it can never repay. Mere money in the form of pensions is no payment. Every other comfort the country can possibly give should be theirs. Some seem to think that pensions are granted in the nature of a charity. Not at all. The country is great because it is covered by a single flag, under the protecting folds of which every citizen is free. The people from Georgia no less than every citizen of the North have reason to thank God that the Union arms prevailed in the great civil conflict. The people of Georgia and of every Southern State are to-day enjoying the blessings of liberty and prosperity which could not have come to them but for the success of the Northern armies.

Yes; the gentleman from Georgia should to-day be proclaiming his appreciation of the sacrifices made by the Union soldiers, black and white, instead of pouring out his denunciation on their heads. He the friend of the Union soldier? No, no; not he. He reads what purports to be a letter from a white man against the negro. Here it is:

NATIONAL MILITARY HOME,
———, April 24, 1912.

Hon. S. A. RODDENBERY,
Washington, D. C.

* * * * * * *

I hope to live long enough to take you by the hand and personally thank you again for what you said, and what you think of the nigger.

I will have to ask that my name be not mentioned. * * * It might make trouble for me.

Again thanking you, I am,
Truly, yours,

———— ————,
Late of New York Volunteers.

He omits the name. Why does he not give that? Who knows who this man is? We are refused his name.

Mr. Speaker, I think the man who wrote that letter the gentleman from Georgia has just read is a coward or he would have signed his name to it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman might not be willing to make that remark to the face of the old man. This is the first time I ever heard aspersions cast on the old soldiers here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is out of order; the gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The soldier's name is signed to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman from Georgia ought to have read the name. The men against whom this amendment is leveled fought to preserve the Union no less than the men they are associated with in the soldiers' homes. The black man fought for the preservation of the Union—as valiantly as the white man fought—and every consideration that is due the white man for services rendered to the Union at the time of its direst need ought to be given to the black man who rendered like service.

I am astonished that any man on this floor would introduce such an amendment as this to a bill seeking to pay pensions to soldiers who served their country. I can not sit here without saying a word in opposition to such an amendment. It ought not to be considered by the House for a moment. I hope with all my heart that every vote in the House will be cast against it. No men fought more bravely than the black men. They are entitled to their full share of credit for preserving the Nation. You say their liberties were at stake? Yes; and so was the liberty of every other person in the land. Thank God the close of the war brought liberty alike to the North and to the South, to the whites and to the blacks, and that to-day we live in a land where slavery is no more, where every citizen is a sovereign. I grieve to see the gentleman from Georgia express such bitterness toward the negro. He should be one of the negroes' ablest defenders. He should be advocating measures to help the negro to help himself. The negro has made wonderful progress considering his lack of opportunity. He is a good citizen, a gallant soldier. He should be encouraged, not reviled.

Who led the successful charge at El Caney at San Juan Hill? Was it not the negro? Who questioned his color then? Did anyone revile him? Not at all. All praised his valor, all applauded his intrepidity. He is brave, he is fearless, he is easily led, he makes a good soldier, he is entitled to be honored no less than his white brother. The black veteran soldier should receive the same tender care in his declining years that we are proud to accord to the white men who rendered equal service to the Nation. We should know no color in ministering to the wants of those who gave their all in defense of the country. Who made the Nation great? Who made us one people, inseparable now and forever? Who questioned the color of the soldier's skin when he enlisted to fight for the preservation of the Union? [Applause.] No man cared whether he was black or white. The question then was, Was he a patriot, was he willing to give his life to the service of his country? He offered all he had when he offered his life. The country owes him a debt of gratitude for the work he did in the dark days of trouble.

Gentlemen, strike down the color line. Defeat the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, and let the news spread into every home in this broad land of the free that Congress will tolerate no discrimination in the treatment of the country's veteran soldiers on account of the color of their skin. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, an opportunity to extend my remarks upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were—ayes 13, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Is a motion in order now to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. Not until the third reading takes place.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I desire to make such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the bottom of page 36 of the bill the following:

"Provided, That after July 1, 1912, no pension under this act or under any other act, general or special, shall be paid to a pensioner of African descent until such time as all inmates of national soldiers' homes of African descent are consolidated, removed, and domiciled in a national soldiers' home at a place separate and apart from any other such home occupied by any other soldiers and veterans of the Civil War or other wars.

"Provided further, That after July 1, 1912, all inmates of national soldiers' homes of African descent shall be domiciled at a distinctly separate home maintained exclusively for such inmates."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-two gentlemen are present.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the motion is out of order; there is an automatic call of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is an automatic call of the House. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 42, nays, 140, answered "present" 20, not voting 190, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Mr. ALLEN with Mr. LONGWORTH.
Mr. HARDWICK with Mr. CAMPBELL.
Mr. FOWLER with Mr. LEVER.
Mr. ELLERBE with Mr. PICKETT.
Mr. BRANTLEY with Mr. MOTT.
Mr. ROUSE with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. ANSBERRY with Mr. ANTHONY.
Mr. AYRES with Mr. BARTHOLDT.
Mr. BOEHNE with Mr. CRUMPACKER.
Mr. WATKINS with Mr. FOCHT.
Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. FOSS.
Mr. CONRY with Mr. HARRIS.
Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia with Mr. HILL.
Mr. HOWARD with Mr. SWITZER.
Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL with Mr. JACKSON.
Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. LAWRENCE.
Mr. HENRY of Texas with Mr. MCKENZIE.
Mr. HUGHES of Georgia with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN.
Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey with Mr. MALBY.
Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey with Mr. PROUTY.
Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. RODENBERG.
Mr. MOON of Tennessee with Mr. SIMMONS.
Mr. MURRAY with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.
Mr. SIMS with Mr. YOUNG of Michigan.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire how the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. LEVER, voted.

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. FOWLER. I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, and I desire to answer "present." If the gentleman from South Carolina were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. I voted "nay," and I am paired with him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The name of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was called, and he voted "present."

After the roll had been called and before the presence of a quorum had been ascertained the following occurred:

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion will have to be seconded by a majority of those present.

Mr. PALMER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMER. Does the same apply to a motion to take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. A recess can not be taken without a quorum.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the point of order on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Well, I have not made the motion.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the motion to adjourn will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. It is clear that 20 is not a majority of those present. One can tell that without further counting. [Applause.] The Chair will explain to the House that the peculiarity of the form in which this motion to adjourn is put is on account of the fact that a call of the House is pending.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The name of the gentleman from Illinois was called, and he voted "nay."

Mr. RODDENBERY. A parliamentary inquiry. If the gentleman from Illinois votes "present" at one time and then votes "nay" at another time, which he had a right to do automatically, does the RECORD show the change or will he be counted twice, once as having voted "present" and once as having voted "nay."

Mr. MANN. As having voted twice. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Moss of Indiana). That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

After the call,

The SPEAKER. On this motion to recommit the yeas are 42, the nays are 140, voting "present" 20—a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. The motion to recommit is rejected. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to change the spelling of a name on page 15. As it appears in the bill it is spelled wrong.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to change the spelling of a name.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. The name is in line 9, page 15. In the bill it is spelled "Tauner," but should be spelled "Tanner."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 2.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The motion is dilatory. [Applause.] The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the bill (S. 6084) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21477. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5060. An act to provide for the disposal of the unallotted land on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska; and

S. 6167. An act to authorize the Williamson & Pond Creek Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, Mingo County, W. Va.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HURON, S. DAK.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] withhold his request for a moment, in order to allow me to present a formal matter?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 534.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House with a duplicate certified copy of Senate bill 6009, an act to increase the limit of cost to the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., the same having been lost or misplaced.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] asks unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole Senate bill 6084. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if unanimous consent is granted to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, would it be ruled that a second could or could not be demanded?

The SPEAKER. It takes unanimous consent to do this thing.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I understand; but if it is done by unanimous consent, at what stage would the right to demand a second arise?

The SPEAKER. It never does. This is not a suspension of the rules.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I understand it is not a suspension of the rules; but if consent is had, would a Member be recognized in his own right for five minutes, or would we be operating under one-hour rule, as in general debate?

The SPEAKER. He would have five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object, before objecting, I would state that I do not desire to consume an hour, yet I do not wish to be limited to five minutes for the discussion of the bill, but should like to address the House, subject to the rules of general debate, for 10 or 15 minutes. If that can be accomplished without objection I shall not object; otherwise I shall object.

The SPEAKER. There is not anybody authorized to promise that nobody will object to an extension of time.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair might possibly help the gentleman out by a suggestion that he could offer an amendment, and get five minutes on that.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21477, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is that the river and harbor bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21477, with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, and Mr. LAWRENCE.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 11, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18719) to authorize the State of Tennessee to sell school lands for educational purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 684), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 11, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG (S. DOC. NO. 663).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to Senate concurrent resolution 19, certain information relative to the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg and the proper representation of the Government thereat, which, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, was referred to the Special Committee on the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg and ordered to be printed.

LAWRENCE (MASS.) STRIKE (S. DOC. NO. 662).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, certain information relative to the wages and conditions of living of the mill operatives in Lawrence, Mass., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court in the following causes:

Henrietta B. Hawes, administratrix of the estate of David C. Houston, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 661);

Francis H. Hardie, Joseph C. Hardie, Caroline H. Neal, Catherine M. Hardie, and Isabelle H. Hardie, children and sole heirs at law of James Allen Hardie, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 664);

Seneca H. Norton v. United States (S. Doc. No. 660);

Isabella H. Adams, administratrix of the estate of Arthur Hubert Burnham, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 659);

Mary O. H. Stoneman, administratrix of George Stoneman, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 658); and

D. M. Carman v. United States (S. Doc. No. 657).

The foregoing findings were, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. It asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, and Mr. LAWRENCE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

The message further requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., the original having been lost or mislaid.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the bill (H. R. 1) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present the memorial of Rev. James Mulligan, of Waverly, Iowa, relative to the Owen medical bill. I ask that the memorial lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAVERLY, IOWA, May 2, 1912.

Hon. A. B. CUMMINS,
Washington, D. C.:

I have your kind letter with amended Owen bill inclosed, and I thank you for the same no less than for the invitation to state my objections to the bill in some detail.

I have examined carefully the modifications that have been made in committee, but they do not, in my humble estimation, make it any less objectionable than it was before.

I can readily agree, as is being argued, that the text of the bill carries no suggestion of tyranny or oppression, but if you will examine the statutes of the States where, for the aggrandizement of orthodox medicine and in the name of the public health, the gravest outrages against the rights of the individual are of frequent occurrence, I am sure you will find that they in their text suggest purposes no more sinister than are found in the language of the Owen bill.

In none of these statutes will you find it written that citizens may be legally persecuted for believing that God reigns supreme on earth as in heaven, provided they have the temerity to put their faith to practical test in time of illness. Rarely will you find it stated in express terms that men and women may be legally branded as unclean and deprived of the privileges of organized society because, forsooth, they decline to subscribe to the medical dogma that the health of their offspring can be preserved by defiling their blood with the festering corruption of the beasts of the field. And never in any statute, I venture to say, will you find it written that perfectly healthy citizens may be imprisoned for a term of months and even years without any process of judicial procedure on the mere embryonic theory that they are carriers of disease. And yet, as you must be aware, such outrages are of common and growing frequency in a number of our States. And how is this possible? Not because legislators have sanctioned them in the written law, but because health boards, once established, quite invariably assume the right to formulate rules that have all the force of law and to act as prosecutor, judge, jury, and appellate court in compelling their enforcement.

While the people could be persuaded that such stringencies were for the common good, there was no general protest, but as they have gradually grown to suspect that the interest of a predatory organization was the chief end being served, there has come an unrest that is foreboding a limitation to the powers of the State medical oligarchies; and this is met with the present effort to buttress themselves behind the power and influence of the Federal Government.

I believe it but fair to assume that the authority which would be merged into this proposed new health establishment is at least equal to that wielded by any State health board, and that, with no restraining hand over it save that of the President's, assumption of power through the formulation of rules could be carried to almost any extreme. And it goes without saying that power would be thus assumed and that it would be exerted for the advantage of the medical sect in control.

I know it is argued with much unction that there would be no attempt to exercise power within a State except upon the express invitation of its governor "or other proper authority." Indeed, the bill expressly provides this alleged safeguard, but it is apparent to me that in practice it would be as meaningless as that other provision which assumes to safeguard from discrimination the weaker sects of medicine and healing. Let no one be deceived as to these points. If the proposed health service could not extend its authority into the States except in rare emergencies, there would issue from the States no clamor for it. And this clamor would not come exclusively from the physicians of one school of medicine, it is fair to say, save that they saw in the project something for their own advantage.

I know that there can be shown to us provisions of our Constitution which should seem to be ample to quiet all the fears we may have as to assaults upon our liberties in the administration of the Owen bill, but in the light of a condition and the text of the bill itself these safeguards become frail indeed. The condition of which I speak is found in the fact that the American Medical Association, chief proponent and sponsor for the bill, would provide not only the medium by which the officers operating under it could be converted into State officers, but also the medium by which Federal authority could be converted into or guised as State authority. Lest you might regard this as an unreasonable assumption, let me invite your attention to the fact that the personnel of the public-health boards of the States no less than of the medical functionaries of the Federal Government is identical with the personnel of the organization so persistently urging this legislation; and let me remind you, also, that the "other proper authority of a State" upon whose invitation the Federal health officers may invade a State, according to section 3 of the bill, almost necessarily describes the health board of a State. Consider all of these things together, my dear Senator, and I think you must conclude, as I have done, that the administration of the proposed law would be quite as completely in the hands of the American Medical Association as if Congress so designed it.

If you have pursued my letter thus far, you will doubtless perceive that I regard the Owen bill as objectionable in its entirety, and that it would be beyond my power to suggest any changes that would make it acceptable. And that, in truth, sums up my attitude with complete exactness. In taking this position, however, I should wish you to understand that I am not less solicitous for the welfare of my fellow creatures than the most disinterested of those who are petitioning you to undertake to check the ravages of disease by legal enactment. My calling brings me in contact with sorrow and suffering caused by disease and its consequences, and I hope you will believe me when I say that if I could be convinced the adoption of the Owen bill would relieve this distress even in a small degree I would welcome it gladly, despite the sinister purpose I see lurking behind it. It is deplorable, if true, that 600,000 of our people come to an untimely end each year through disease, but in the distribution of these fatalities it is found that the States maintaining the most elaborate health departments quite uniformly bear a larger share of the number than do the States that maintain small and inconsequential ones. In the light of such an anomoly, therefore, it requires more credulity than I possess to concede that the establishment provided for by the Owen bill would be capable of reducing the ravages of disease in the smallest degree. Quite the contrary, I should fear that the adoption of this measure would have the effect of increasing illness, especially if it is contemplated, as I believe it is, that the bureau of publications provided for therein shall engage in the popular distribution of health (disease) bulletins. I am firmly of the belief that thoughts freighted with the fear of illness are more potent of evil as disease carriers than the types of God's humble creatures that we are persistently urged to "swat." Science has long recognized the value of suggestion as a curative agency, and our most advanced thinkers recognize that the same agency can produce, if not disease itself, at least the morbid condition of mind and body that invites it.

I am not a scientific man in any sense, but in the course of a busy life I have had under my observation a number of cases of illness produced by suggestion, and at the risk of wearying you I will refer to one of them. One morning, a few years ago, I boarded a train at West Union, Iowa, where I was then established, en route for Turkey River. It was a route I frequently traveled, and I was acquainted with the trainmen. When the conductor approached, he told me confidentially that they were having some sport with Jimmie, the new brakeman, by persuading him that he looked very ill, and he asked me to aid in carrying the joke along. I declined to do so, but other passengers were more accommodating, and Jimmie was not only persuaded that he looked ill, but he actually became ill, and at Turkey River I saw him carried from the train on a stretcher as sick a lad as I ever looked upon that made a subsequent recovery.

Authentic cases such as I have here cited could, I believe, be multiplied almost without number, but if we recognize that influences on the mind are even small factors in the causation of disease, should we not hesitate ere we sanction the popular distribution of bulletins under the seal of the Government that deal with the subject of disease?

I do not believe that many of our people are lacking in knowledge of the conditions that make for bad health. Not of their own choice are many of them ill housed, ill nourished, or subjected to excessive fatigue or pestilential environment. Man's very struggle for existence is an effort to attain for himself and family a plane of living making for the best possible health conditions, and that more and more are reaching this plane with the passing years is shown by the vanishing scourges and the lowering death rate. That those who make our laws can help in this conquest of disease which is being wrought by advancing civilization will not be gainsaid, but the help must be in the way of improving economic conditions by lightening the burdens of taxation rather than by devising expensive establishments such as you now have under consideration, to sap from the people the substance upon which their health and well-being so largely depend.

I again thank you for this opportunity to place before you my views on this subject, and, should you regard them worthy of consideration, I would be pleased if you will do me the honor of placing them, in the form of a memorial, before your distinguished associates.

Assuring you of my profound respect, I remain,
Your obedient servant,

REV. JAMES MULLIGAN,
Priest of St. Mary's Catholic Church.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Tampa, Fla., praying that an appropriation be made for the relief of the sufferers from the Mississippi River floods, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Church Fraternal, of Monmouth, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation granting the privileges of second-class mail matter to publications of fraternal societies, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry officers of building and loan associations of East St. Louis, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation levying a special excise tax on building and loan associations, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROOT presented a resolution adopted by members of the board of aldermen of New York City, N. Y., favoring an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the erection of a new post office in that city, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is rather late, but I have a couple of remonstrances against the so-called employers' liability act, which was passed by the Senate. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the memorials were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PINE BLUFF, ARK., May 9, 10, 1912.

HON. JEFF DAVIS,
Care United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please have this message printed, front page, morning and evening papers, Washington. Reference, Cotton Belt Savings Bank, Pine Bluff. Mail me copy of papers.

Hon. James S. Sherman, President United States Senate, and Senators assembled:

The members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, Lodge 305, earnestly request your assistance and pray that you may see your duties to the railroad employees and defer action on workmen's compensation bill at this session of Congress, thereby giving them an opportunity to study and better understand the vital principles involved. As we now see it this pending bill is very detrimental to all classes of labor. We believe this to be a measure fostered by corporate interests, aiming at the elimination of our liability laws. We would have stated our objections sooner and at more length, but were handicapped on account of the interpretation placed upon laws governing our organization.

W. S. BAUM, President Lodge 305.

STATE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Clinton, Ill., May 7, 1912.

HON. JEFF DAVIS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In your fight against the compensation bill, I would like to advise that the rank and file of men engaged in train service do not want that kind of law, and the leaders of the organizations have not consulted the men regarding the matter. I am sending you under separate cover several copies of a resolution adopted by the four organizations in union meeting held at Springfield, Ill., February 26–29, 1912. We consider that the compensation measure will not compensate; that it is merely a will-o'-the-wisp and a scheme to place our welfare in the hands of the insurance companies. The railroads will then inaugurate relief propositions and force the men to pay for each others' injuries and death. We are willing to take our chances in the courts, but can not do so with the bill as drawn up by the twenty or more railway attorneys. Give us a law eliminating assumption of risk, contributory negligence, and the fellow-servant rule and I can assure you that the railroad men will be very thankful. We can then go into court as American citizens, even though the lawyers do get part of the judgment. The railroads are trying to force men in train service down to the level of the lowest, and should the compensation act become a law every railroad in this country would at once discontinue their claim departments. If you can avoid using my name in this matter will be glad to have you do so, as our president would surely have me expelled from the organization for taking this stand. As I have a wife and nine children I can ill afford to lose my insurance.

Nearly every State in the Union was represented in the union meeting.

With best wishes, I beg to remain,
Yours, truly ——— ———.

LOSS OF STEAMER "TITANIC."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is not exactly in the shape of a memorial, but I noticed in the New York American in the issue of Tuesday, the 7th, a commendation of the committee making the Titanic investigation. I wish to say, Mr. President, that that is one investigation which has met my entire approval, and this article expresses my views so admirably that I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment while it is read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The matter was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

[From the New York American of Tuesday, May 7.]

CHAIRMAN SMITH AND THE "TITANIC" INVESTIGATION.

Now that the Titanic investigation is ended, the country should take note of the fact that it was well done. The work of the Senate committee was worthy of the best traditions of the Senate—the old-fashioned traditions, free from all empty formalism and the taint of favor and privilege.

Senator SMITH deserves the strongest commendation. It was mainly due to his energetic initiative, to his searching, indefatigable patience and thoroughness, to his keen insight and strong common sense that the work was done and finished in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired.

There were powerful financial interests opposed to this inquest, and there was a powerful inertia of senatorial habit that had to be overcome. But under the driving hand of the sturdy Senator from Michigan the committee took to its task without the loss of a day or an hour, and kept at it steadily, passing back and forth between New York and Washington, until the last scrap of material testimony had been wrung from the most unwilling witnesses.

Americans are not greatly concerned with the criticisms that have been passed upon this investigation by inspired organs of corporate influence and political red tape in Great Britain. On this side of the water it seems that the jests about Senator SMITH'S lack of nautical language are frivolous and senseless, since the information to be elicited was not for the use of sailors, but for legislators, who understand best the language of landsmen.

Nor does it seem to Americans that the eagerness of some Englishmen to make light of this serious matter does any credit to English sensibility and good taste. That the greatest of ships, built and manned by Englishmen, should have foundered in midocean with such fearful loss of life and under circumstances so gravely discreditable to English commercial methods and English seamanship is hardly a fit subject for English jokes.

In the trial of this capital case of Modern Civilization v. The Titanic Homicide, the British Board of Trade is the chief prisoner in the dock.

It is unlikely that the investigation now going on in England, under rules imposed by this same British Board of Trade, will yield results half so satisfactory to civilization as the findings of Senator SMITH and his colleagues.

BUREAU OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in some remarks I made a few days ago in opposition to Senate bill No. 1, generally known as the Owen medical bill, I said, in substance, that there was no demand for the passage of the bill except by the American Medical Association or any sentiment in its favor except such as has been manufactured by that association, or words to that effect. I have here a copy of a letter sent out by the American Medical Association. It is quite short, and I desire to have it read and printed in the RECORD, including the names of the physicians appearing at the head of the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The letter was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Council on Health and Public Instruction: Henry B. Favill, chairman, Chicago; Joseph N. McCormack, Bowling Green, Ky.; Henry M. Bracken, St. Paul, Minn.; Walter B. Cannon, Boston, Mass.; Frederick R. Green, secretary, Chicago.]

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION,
535 Dearborn Avenue, Chicago.

To the Members of the National Auxiliary Legislative Committee.

DEAR DOCTOR: The Owen bill (No. 1) has been reported on favorably by the committee and is now before the Senate. The time has come to impress on Members of the Senate the importance of this bill to the public health. If Senators are convinced that this measure is desired by their constituents there will be little difficulty in securing its passage. Will you, as a member of the national auxiliary legislative committee, kindly take the following steps at once:

1. Telegraph to the Senators from your State, asking them to support Senate bill No. 1 for the sake of the public health.

2. Have as many physicians as possible in your county do the same thing.

3. Have a resolution indorsing the bill, and asking your Senators to support it, passed at once by your county society and a certified copy sent to both of your Senators. Have a special meeting of your county society called, if necessary.

4. Get as many prominent citizens in your county as possible to wire or write the Senators from your State, asking them to vote for the Owen bill. The support of judges, lawyers, ministers, school superintendents and teachers, prominent club women, business men, and others is particularly desirable.

5. Secure action on this measure by women's clubs, local health organizations, civic or commercial organizations, or any other influential bodies in your county, having copies of the resolution adopted in each case sent to your Senators.

6. Get the indorsement of any newspapers in your county and secure favorable editorial comments, if possible.

While the indorsement of physicians is of value, telegrams, letters, and resolutions from nonmedical individuals and organizations are particularly desired as evidence of public sentiment. I am inclosing a copy of the report of the Senate committee, also some extracts from the Journal of April 27.

The bill has not yet been introduced in the House of Representatives. Present efforts should be concentrated on Senators. Prompt action on the above suggestions will greatly increase the effectiveness of any work which you may be able to do.

Very truly, yours, FREDERICK R. GREEN, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WETMORE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3035) to grant an honorable discharge to William T. Haskins, alias William Thomas, to report it back with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, the beneficiary thereof having died. (S. Rept. 736).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2047) for the creation of the police and firemen's relief and retirement fund, to provide for the relief and retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such relief and retirement, and for other purposes, submitted an adverse report (No. 737) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4148) to provide for the acquiring of title to public lands classified as and carrying phosphate deposits, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 738) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I desire to report favorably Senate bill 139, providing for the purchase by the Government of lands south of Pennsylvania Avenue, with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 739) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 139) authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

A bill (S. 6789) granting an increase of pension to William T. Hutton (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 6790) granting a pension to Arbell Skaggs (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6791) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

SCHOOL LANDS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. ASHURST. I introduce a bill to further assure title to sections 16 and 36, heretofore reserved to several States in aid of the public schools. I ask to have it read at the desk. It is a short bill.

The bill (S. 6786) to further assure title to sections 16 and 36, heretofore reserved to several States in aid of the public schools, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands heretofore reserved by any act of Congress for the purpose of being applied in aid of public schools in the Territories, and States and Territories erected out of the same, which were public lands and were free from any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the date of the approval of any act of Congress, so reserving such lands in aid of public schools, shall belong to the particular State in which such lands are situated and shall be applied in aid of the public schools within such State, and all such lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, so reserved, within national forests now existing or proclaimed shall be administered as a part of the said national forests; but at the close of each fiscal year there shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to such State, as income for its common-school fund, such proportion of the gross proceeds of all the national forests within such State as the area of such lands heretofore reserved within such State for school purposes may bear to the total area of said national forest.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation as to the purpose of the bill which I have just introduced.

In the year 1878 the Congress of the United States—section 1946, Revised Statutes of the United States—reserved in Arizona and all the other Territories all of sections 16 and 36 of the public lands, with the view that when the Territories were erected into States such sections 16 and 36 should be applied for the benefit of the public schools.

Some years ago the then Secretary of the Interior, in my judgment without warrant of law, began to dispose of and administer the unsurveyed sections 16 and 36 that were lying within forest reserves or national forests as part and parcel of the forest reserves or national forests instead of treating them as school lands, thus depriving the State of Arizona, or rather the common-school system of the State of Arizona, of the income, issues, rents, profit, and use of these particular school sections. At that time I happened to be the district attorney of Coconino County, one of the counties of Arizona within which are situated a large number of these unsurveyed sections 16 and 36, and I prepared an opinion wherein, after careful investigation of the law upon the subject, I held that sections 16 and 36, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, could not legally be used or treated by the Forest Service or by the Department of the Interior for any purpose, because they were reserved by Congress for the common schools.

I am exceedingly anxious to see to it that the identical sections 16 and 36 as were reserved in 1878 shall not be lost to the common schools in Arizona, for at this time nearly one-half of all Arizona is included within some kind of a reserve, and if these sections 16 and 36, or any of them, be lost, selections of land equally as valuable as lands that were granted in 1878 will be difficult.

I ask permission that I may, without reading the same, incorporate into the RECORD with this bill the opinion which I wrote in support of my position.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The brief referred to is as follows:

OPINION RENDERED BY HENRY F. ASHURST, DISTRICT ATTORNEY OF COCONINO COUNTY, ARIZ.

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ., February 21, 1907.

To the honorable the Board of Supervisors of Coconino County, Ariz.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to yours of recent date, in which you request from me a written opinion as to whether your body has the power and authority to lease sections numbered 16 and 36, within Coconino County, where such sections 16 and 36 lie within the exterior boundaries of a forest reserve and were unsurveyed at the time of the establishment of such forest reserve, you are advised that your body has the power and authority, under title 65 of the revised statutes of Arizona, 1901, to lease sections 16 and 36, notwithstanding they were unsurveyed at the time such sections were included within the exterior limits of a forest reserve. For the purposes of this opinion all references to "lands embraced within the exterior limits of a forest reserve" shall be construed to refer to lands that lie within the exterior boundaries or outside limits of a forest reserve but which are not an integral part of the forest reserve.

You are further advised that any attempt on the part of the President of the United States or on the part of the forest-reserve officials to include sections 16 and 36 (whether surveyed or unsurveyed) within a forest reserve, and thus make such sections 16 and 36, or any of them, an integral part of any forest reserve, is an act which is ultra vires and void; and any strained construction placed upon section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes" (the same being the act of Congress which gives the President the power to establish forest reserves), by the President of the United States or the Interior Department of the United States or the Forestry Department, which attempts to treat sections 16 and 36 (whether surveyed or unsurveyed at the time of the creation of the forest reserve) as an integral part of any forest reserve, is an assumption of power by the executive branch of the Government that has never been delegated to it either expressly or by implication.

The executive branch of the Government derives its power and authority to create forest reserves under and by virtue of section 24 of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," which section reads as follows:

"SEC. 24. That the President of the United States may from time to time set apart and reserve in any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall by public proclamation declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof." (Mar. 3, 1891.)

Even a cursory examination of the above section 24 readily discloses that the power of the President of the United States in the matter of creating forest reserves is limited to the extent that he may create forest reserves out of the public lands only.

Congress, in describing the character of lands out of which the President may create forest reserves, used the term "public lands" and no other descriptive term, and the repeated use of the term "public lands" in the said section 24 by Congress indicates an obvious intention on the part of Congress that the President shall not create forest reserves out of any character of lands other than public lands. Applying to the said section 24 the maxim "expressio unus est exclusio alterius"—the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others—the executive branch of the Government in creating forest reserves is limited to the lands that have never lost their character as public lands.

Certainly no one would seriously contend that under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, supra, the President can create forest reserves out of lands that have lost their character as public lands; and if the power be not found in the said act of March 3, 1891, supra, it does not exist at all. Now, observing that the President may not create forest reserves out of lands that have lost their character as public lands, we proceed to ascertain what are "public lands."

In the case of Newhall v. Sanger (see 92 U. S., 769; 2 Otto, 761) the Supreme Court of the United States held that the words "public lands" are habitually used in our legislation to describe such as are subject to sale or other disposal under the general laws. Also see the case of de La Fayette Wilcox v. John Jackson on the demise of Murray McConnel, reported in the Thirteenth Peters, page 498. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States held: "But we go further and say that whensoever a tract of land shall have once been legally appropriated to any purpose, from that moment the land thus appropriated becomes severed from the mass of public lands, and that no subsequent law or proclamation or sale would be construed to embrace it or to operate upon it, although no reservation were made of it."

On this point also, see United States v. Fitzgerald (15 Peters, 417) and the case of Easton v. Salisbury (21 Howard, 428); and see, especially, Burfenning v. Chicago, St. Paul, Indianapolis & Omaha Railway Co. (163 U. S., 319; also reported in 41 L. Ed., 175). "But it is also equally true that when by act of Congress a tract of land has been reserved for homestead and preemption, or dedicated to any special purpose, proceedings in the Land Department, in defiance of such reservation or dedication, although culminating in a patent, transfer no title, and may be challenged in an action at law. In other words, the action of the Land Department can not override the expressed will of Congress or convey away public lands in disregard or defiance thereof. (St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S., 636–646, 26: 875–879; Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S., 488–519, 30: 1039–1048; Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S., 618, 31: 844; Davis v. Wiebold, 139 U. S., 507–529, 35: 238–246; Knight v. United Land Association, 142 U. S., 161, 35: 974) * * *."

"* * * It has been repeatedly decided by this court that patents for lands which have been previously granted, reserved from sale, or appropriated, are void. The executive officers have no authority to issue a patent for the lands in controversy, because they were not subject to entry, having previously been reserved, and this want of power may be proved by a defendant in an action at law."

There is no statutory definition of the words "public lands," and the meaning of these words, of course, varies somewhat in different statutes passed for different purposes. To say that sections 16 and 36 are public lands would be to defeat the very operation of the law which reserved and saved and pledged the said sections 16 and 36 as a common heritage of the children of this Territory.

It now remains to be discovered whether the said sections 16 and 36 in Arizona were legally appropriated to any purpose by Congress prior to the creation of the forest reserves in which the Forestry Department is attempting to include such sections as an integral part.

Paragraph 1946 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (1878), which paragraph was enacted over 20 years before the creation of any forest reserve in Coconino County, reads as follows:

"Sections Nos. 16 and 36 in each township of the Territories of New Mexico, Utah, Colorado, Dakota, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming shall be reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in the several Territories herein named and in the States and Territories hereafter to be erected out of the same." Section 1946, Revised Statutes of the United States, 1878.

Upon a reading of the section 1946, supra, we see that sections 16 and 36, in Arizona, lost their character as public lands years before any forest reserves were created in Coconino County, and that the said sections 16 and 36 are therefore lands of a character not susceptible of being constituted into the integral part of any forest reserve.

It is a canon of statutory construction that Congress is always familiar with its own previous enactments, and it can not be said to be reasonably arguable that, although Congress had pledged itself to reserve all the sections 16 and 36 in Arizona for the purpose of applying them to the schools in Arizona, that it would subsequently (in 1891, by the act of Congress, supra), give to the President the power to make such sections 16 and 36 integral parts of a forest reserve and thus violate the pledge and revoke the reservation it formerly made to the Territories and forever deprive the schools in the Territories of the benefit of the revenue derived from such sections 16 and 36. Such an argument would be tantamount to a charge of bad faith on the part of the Congress.

I am not unaware that the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Heydenfelt v. Dalny Mining Co., held that until the identical sections 16 and 36 were surveyed, Congress reserved the right to make any disposition of the lands that it saw fit, i. e., to constitute the lands (secs. 16 and 36) into a reserve of any kind. (See Heydenfelt v. Dalny Mining Co., 93 U. S., 634.)

The Heydenfelt case arose out of a dispute as to the title of a part of a section No. 16 in the State of Nevada, which section 16 was referred to in section 7 of the Nevada enabling act, which reads as follows:

"That sections Nos. 16 and 36 in every township, and where such sections have been sold or otherwise disposed of by any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be, shall be and are hereby granted to said State for the support of common schools."

No one will fail to observe, in the above section 7 of the said enabling act, that, whilst the words are words of present grant, there is a defeasance clause in the very section of the act granting the lands; that is to say, there are words in the said section 7 which indicate that upon the happening of certain contingencies the State's title to sections 16 and 36 may be defeated and the State required to select other lands in lieu of such sections 16 and 36 as may have been sold or otherwise disposed of by Congress.

In paragraph or section 1946 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (the law passing the title to sections 16 and 36 to Arizona), the closest scrutiny defies the discovery of any defeasance clause therein, that is to say, there does not appear in the law passing the title to sections 16 and 36 to Arizona, any contingency the happening of which will operate to defeat the right of the Territory to the unsufruct and the rents, issues, and profits of the identical sections 16 and 36 that were reserved, and it is elementary that if a defeasance clause is to be made operative to defeat a title or a grant, the defeasance clause must appear in the act granting the lands or in the conveyance passing the title, and if the defeasance clause does not appear in the grant or in the conveyance passing the title or purporting to pass the title, it will be absolutely inoperative and will not defeat the title. This principle is so well established that to cite authorities to sustain it would be a work of supererogation. But, it may be argued, that by paragraph 1946, supra, no title passed from the United States to the Territory, and that the words "shall be reserved" as used in the said section 1946 do not import a grant either in presenti or in futuro. Admitting, for the sake of argument only, that the legal title to the said sections 16 and 36 may not have passed to Arizona by the use of the words "shall be reserved," candor compels the acknowledgment that Congress by the use of the words "shall be reserved" absolutely and unequivocally pledged the Territory of Arizona, that Arizona should have reserved to it the said sections 16 and 36, and after such pledge and reservation by Congress, the President could not appropriate sections 16 and 36 to any other purpose without violating the pledge and reservation made to the Territory under paragraph 1946, Revised Statues of the United States, and when the pledge and reservation were made, Congress passed the equitable title to the sections 16 and 36 and holds the legal title in trust for the Territory, and Congress, by the use of the words "shall be reserved" (words which are the equivalent of "are hereby reserved"), eo instanti passed the equitable title to the said lands from the Government of the United States to Arizona.

It was held by the honorable Secretary of the Interior that, in relation to the disposition of the public lands: "It is the settled law, first, that when a party has complied with all the terms and conditions necessary to the securing of title to a particular tract of land he acquires a vested interest therein, is regarded as equitable owner thereof, and thereafter the Government holds the legal title in trust for him. Second, that the right to a patent once vested is * * * equivalent to a patent issued, and when in fact issued, patent relates back to the time when the right to it became fixed." (Kern River Oil Co. v. Clark, 30 L. D., 556.)

This rule has been repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court of the United States.

It will not be denied that Congress possesses plenary power to repeal the said section 1946 (the law reserving the said sections 16 and 36), but for the purposes of this paper, it is sufficient to say that Congress has not repealed the same, and until it be repealed, the Government of the United States will hold the legal title to sections 16 and 36 in trust for this Territory, and the legal title will doubtless pass to the State of Arizona when such a sovereignty is formed, but the executive branch of this Government possesses no such power of repeal, and if the President, in executing the laws, places such strained constructions on them as to deprive Arizona of the rents, issues, and profits of the said sections 16 and 36, then the President is treading on forbidden ground and is making laws, which is at utter variance with the imperishable distinction of the legislative, judicial, and executive functions which support the genius of our Government.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST, District Attorney.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or for any Territory or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CLEORA E. MASONHEIMNER.

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Cleora E. Masonheimner, S. 159, Sixty-second Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On May 9, 1912:

S. 4314. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4623. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5045. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5193. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5415. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5493. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5670. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On May 10, 1912:

S. 275. An act to make the special examiner of drugs, medicines, and chemicals an assistant appraiser at the port of Boston;

S. 3160. An act to establish Holeb, Me., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me., and for other purposes; and

S. 4245. An act to increase the limit of cost of the additions to the public building at Salt Lake City, Utah.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HURON, S. DAK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to be furnished with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building in Huron, S. Dak., the original having been lost or mislaid; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. BOURNE, and Mr. SIMMONS, conferees on the part of the Senate.

PEND OREILLE RIVER DAM, WASH.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 22731) to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend Oreille River, Wash. It is a local bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND.

Mr. GALLINGER. On yesterday at my request House bill 20840, relating to police and firemen's pensions was under consideration, and for the purpose of having it further examined it went over. I think that I shall offer two amendments to the bill that will cover every objection which has been made to it. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill, the bill having been read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. On pages 5 and 6 I move to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 5, line 24, after the word "law," it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the following proviso:

Provided, That should the police and firemen's relief fund at any time be insufficient to defray the expenditures hereinafter mentioned, then, and in that event, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to, and they shall, direct the collector of taxes of said District to deposit, and said collector shall thereupon deposit, in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said fund, out of receipts from all licenses other than liquor licenses, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in said fund.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 6, page 9, line 10, after the word "surgeons," I move to amend the amendment by adding the words "and the health officer of the District of Columbia."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 9, line 10, after the word "surgeons," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting "and the health officer of the District of Columbia," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That a retiring board, to be composed of the surgeons of the police and fire departments and two officers of the police department and two officers of the fire department, not surgeons, and the health officer of the District of Columbia, such officers to be appointed by and to serve during the pleasure of the Commissioners of said District, shall be appointed to consider all cases for relief or for retirement or for pensions of officers and members of the police and fire departments, and all applications for pensions for widows, children, and dependent fathers or mothers.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether, under its provisions, the Treasury of the United States must respond to this pension system, either directly or indirectly?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no provision in the bill that requires any payment whatever from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand, for instance, that half of the running expenses of the government of the District is contributed by the United States, is it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true; but the sources for meeting the pensions of these people under this bill will consist of fines imposed upon members of the police and fire departments, rewards and gifts received by members, receipts from the sales of unclaimed property in the police department, and the deduction of 1½ per cent from the monthly salaries of each member of the police force, and fines and forfeitures paid into the police court of the District of Columbia, except those allowed by law to the use of the Humane Society.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, outside of the proportion that is to be deducted from those salaries, and so forth, would it not take a fund that otherwise would go to the general expenses of the District government and compel the United States Government to pay a greater proportion, or a greater amount at least, of the running expenses of the local government because of the fact that these fines and other matters must now be taken out of the general fund and paid specifically for this purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is quite the contrary. Exactly the opposite result will be reached. The fines going into the District treasury would make a larger revenue from the District, and under the organic act the Government would have to put up an equal amount. Taking the fines to pay these pensions, the principle being recognized, there would be a less revenue for the District of Columbia. Hence the Government would have to put up a less amount to meet the amount of the District revenues. So the bill does not take anything from the Public Treasury, but on the contrary, if it does anything, it saves something to the Public Treasury.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from New Hampshire understands that I believe that the District from its own property should not be prevented, if it sees fit, from paying its own firemen and its own policemen such pensions as would be appropriate. I believe that should be done here the same as in any other city. I want to say at this time that I do believe our police in this city are the poorest paid of any class of officers that I know of, and that they certainly ought to be paid a much larger salary, considering what salaries are paid to clerks and other officials of the Government. The thing that I do object to is any system under which the United States would enter into granting pensions on account of old age or otherwise, unless the proposition shall apply to every American citizen.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I have explained, that is exactly what this bill does. It does not impose any tax whatever upon the General Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the creation of the police and firemen's relief and retirement fund, to provide for the relief and retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such relief and retirement, and for other purposes."

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia on the police and firemen's pension bill just passed be printed in the RECORD in connection with the action taken on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 729, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

POLICE AND FIREMEN'S PENSIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 20840:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act the funds designated by law as the 'policemen's fund,' the 'police fund,' and the 'firemen's relief fund,' shall be designated as the 'police and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia,' and the said fund shall consist of all fines imposed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia upon members of the police and fire departments by way of discipline; all rewards, proceeds of gifts, and emoluments that may be received by any member of said departments for extraordinary services, except such as may be allowed to be retained by such member or members on the approval of the said commissioners; all net receipts and moneys arising from the sale of unclaimed property in the custody of the property clerk of the police department; a deduction of 1½ per cent of the monthly salary of each member of the police and fire departments; and fines and forfeitures paid into the police court of the District of Columbia, except those allowed by law to the use of the Humane Society, all of which shall be collected by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and be by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States, in the manner provided by law, to the credit of the trust fund denominated 'police and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia,' and be held subject to the drafts of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the purposes hereinafter set forth; all expenditures to be made according to law and to be accounted for in the manner provided by law: Provided, That should the police and firemen's relief fund at any time be insufficient to defray the expenditures hereinafter mentioned, then, and in that event, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to, and they shall, direct the collector of taxes of said District to deposit, and said collector shall thereupon deposit, in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said fund, out of receipts from all licenses other than liquor licenses, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in said fund.

"SEC. 2. That whenever any officer or member of the police or fire department of the District of Columbia shall become disabled by injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty he shall, in addition to his regular salary, receive his necessary expenses during the time of such disability, to be ascertained and certified by the retiring board hereinafter provided for, whose certificate shall state an account of said expenses and the manner, cause, and condition of the injury or disease, and such necessary expenses shall, when approved by the said commissioners, be paid out of the said police and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia.

"SEC. 3. That should any officer or member of the police or fire department become so permanently disabled through injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, or, having served not less than 15 years, shall, for any cause, become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from the service therefor, he shall be entitled to relief from the said fund in an amount, in the case of an officer or member of the fire department, as follows: Chief engineer, a sum not to exceed $150 per month; deputy chief engineer, a sum not to exceed $125 per month; battalion chief, fire marshal, and superintendent of machinery, a sum not to exceed $100 per month; deputy fire marshals and captains, a sum not to exceed $90 per month; lieutenants, a sum not to exceed $75 per month; assistant superintendent of machinery, a sum not to exceed $60 per month; engineers and drivers, a sum not to exceed $55 per month; assistant engineers and assistant drivers, a sum not to exceed $52.50 per month; inspectors and privates, a sum not to exceed $50 per month.

"And in the case of an officer or member of the police department as follows: Major and superintendent, a sum not to exceed $150 per month; inspector and assistant superintendent, a sum not to exceed $125 per month; inspector, a sum not to exceed $100 per month; captain, a sum not to exceed $90 per month; lieutenant, a sum not to exceed $75 per month; sergeant, a sum not to exceed $60 per month; private, a sum not to exceed $50 per month, as may be justified, in any case of the police and fire departments, by the length of service and the nature of the injury or disease, as such disability may be determined by the retiring board hereinafter provided for; that in case of the death of any officer or member of the police or fire department before or after retirement from injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, leaving a widow, or children under 16 years of age, or a dependent father or mother, or both, such widow or such relative shall be entitled to a pension to be paid from the said relief fund, the amount thereof to be determined by the retiring board hereinafter provided for: Provided, That in no case shall the amount paid to any one family exceed the sum of $50 per month, and that upon the remarriage of any widow her pension under this act shall immediately cease, and that any pension to or for her children under 16 years of age shall cease upon their attaining such age.

"SEC. 4. That any officer or member of the police or fire department of the District of Columbia who may have performed police or fire service therein for a period of 25 years shall be entitled to retirement from such department and to an allowance to be paid from the said police and firemen's relief fund in an amount equal to the maximum allowance as provided in section 3 of this act, for the respective officers and members of said departments.

"SEC. 5. That a sum not to exceed $75 may be allowed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be paid from the said police and firemen's relief fund, to defray the funeral expenses of any member of the police or fire department who may die while in the service of such department.

"SEC. 6. That a retiring board, to be composed of the surgeons of the police and fire departments and two officers of the police department and two officers of the fire department, not surgeons, such officers to be appointed by and to serve during the pleasure of the Commissioners of said District, shall be appointed to consider all cases for relief or for retirement or for pensions of officers and members of the police and fire departments, and all applications for pensions for widows, children, and dependent fathers and mothers; and the police and fire surgeons shall certify in writing to the said retiring board the physical condition of the officers or members of the force, if living, for whom a pension is sought for any reason provided for in this act, and whether or not said condition, or death, is due to injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, or that said officer or member has become so permanently disabled as to entitle him to discharge from the service therefor. The said retiring board shall give notice to any applicant for relief or pension or retirement to be present before it and give any evidence that he may desire, and the proceedings of the said board shall be reduced to writing and shall show the date of appointment of the officer or member under inquiry, his age, his record in the service, and any other information that may be pertinent to the matter of relief, pension, or retirement, and shall show what amount, if any, is awarded the applicant by way of relief or pension. The said board shall make a report of its finding to the commissioners, who shall have the power to take further testimony, if they so desire, and may approve, disapprove, or modify the findings of the said board, or remand any case for such further proceedings as may be necessary, and the decision of the said commissioners shall be final. The said commissioners are also hereby authorized and empowered to make, modify, and amend from time to time rules of procedure for the conduct of such board.

"SEC. 7. That within 60 days following the 1st day of July, 1912, and every two years thereafter, the commissioners shall cause every policeman and fireman receiving a pension allowance from the police and firemen's relief fund to undergo such examination as in the judgment of the commissioners may be necessary to enable them to determine whether the pension in such case or cases shall be increased or reduced; and the commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to increase or reduce the allowance of pensioners as the result of such examination: Provided, however, That should a pensioner fail or refuse to undergo the examination prescribed by the commissioners, the allowance of such pensioner may be reduced or entirely discontinued by the commissioners: Provided, however, That the commissioners may discontinue any pension or retirement allowance upon duly certified information from a court of record that any person so pensioned or retired has been guilty of any crime involving moral turpitude or where any such person is found by the retiring board, after notice and trial, to be an habitual drunkard or guilty of lewd or lascivious conduct: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to give the widow of any officer or member of the police or fire department any right to a pension upon her remarriage, or to give any child or children of any officer or member of said police or fire department the right to a pension after becoming 16 years of age.

"SEC. 8. That any such pensioned or retired officer or member of the police or fire department in time of flood, riot, great fires, during extraordinary assemblages or unusual emergencies may be called by the head of the respective department into the service of the District police or fire force for such duty as his disabilities will permit of his performing, as ascertained and certified by the retiring board, without compensation therefor.

"SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Amend the title of the bill so as to read as follows:

"A bill for the creation of the police and firemen's relief and retirement fund, to provide for the relief and retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such relief and retirement, and for other purposes."

The bill as amended has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter, in which the reasons for the proposed legislation are clearly set forth:

APRIL 25, 1911.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill entitled "A bill for the creation of the police and firemen's relief and retirement fund, to provide for the relief and retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such relief and retirement, and for other purposes," and to recommend its early enactment.

The main objects of the proposed legislation are to harmonize the rates of pensions and retirements of the police and fire departments so that the allowances for the corresponding class of the members of each department shall be alike; and to provide sources of revenue for the fund for the relief of the members of the police and fire departments, so that receipts from licenses—except those received under the excise law—shall be available as far as necessary for the purpose.

The first proposed modification in the bill is that instead of the payment of $1 per month by each member of the police and fire department to the relief fund as at present, 1½ per cent of the monthly salary of each member shall be applicable to that purpose. The equity of this proposed change is apparent. The beneficiaries to the fund should contribute to it in proportion to their salaries and to the rate of allowance they are to be entitled to receive.

The bill also proposes, in section 6, to make the action of the retiring board subject to the approval, disapproval, or modification by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which will enable the commissioners to regulate the amount of pension by the equities of each case, as they may appear.

It is also proposed, in section 7, to specifically invest the commissioners with power to discontinue any relief or pension where the beneficiary is found to be guilty of improper practices or conduct and to make more definite the present provision for a biennial examination to determine the advisability of increasing or reducing the allowance of pension. As a number of retired and pensioned officers and members of the police and fire departments will at all times be capable of rendering a limited service on occasions of emergency, the commissioners are authorized by section 8 to avail themselves of such assistance.

The maximum rate proposed in this bill is no greater than the rates established in other municipalities in the United States corresponding to and exceeding in population the District of Columbia, and it is materially less for the class of police and fire department officers receiving the higher salaries. If the maximum should be allowed in each case, the increase in the expenditures over the present outlay on that account would be very little; but the commissioners believe that in view of the discretion vested in them to regulate the pension allowance the annual increase would be immaterial.

At the present time, a critical condition confronts the commissioners in consequence of the inadequacy of the police and firemen's relief funds to meet the present demands upon them. At the close of the month of December, 1910, when the pay rolls for the police and firemen's pensions were submitted to the auditor for payment, it was found that the revenue collected during that month and the balance remaining on the 1st of the month after the payment of the November pensions was insufficient for the purpose of liquidating in full the several allowances for December. Consequently it became necessary to delay the payments of the December allowances until the 9th day of January, 1911, in order that sufficient collections from police-court fines might be made to meet the deficiency. This deficiency for both the police and firemen's pensions on account of the month of December amounted to about $1,500. The extra demand on the income from the police court of the District for the $1,500 deficiency to enable the December allowances to be paid resulted in a corresponding failure to be able to pay the January pensions until some time in February through the shortage in funds, the discrepancy on account of the January payments being $2,857.73, or 60 per cent of the total amount due for that month. In February 60 per cent of the liabilities was paid, the deficiency being $2,825.40; and for the month of March just passed, 75 per cent of the allowances was paid, leaving a deficiency of $1,777.75 for that month.

This condition will continue during the remainder of the fiscal year, with a probability that before the close of the year it will be necessary to further reduce the payments on these allowances in both the police and fire departments payments below the amounts paid for the months above mentioned. The pension rolls of the police and fire departments amount to about $11,000 a month, and a little over $1,300 is collected each month through a deduction of $1 per month from the salary of each officer and member of these two departments. The balance of about $10,000 required to meet the monthly payments of pensions is made up entirely from police-court fines and forfeitures, except in the months of July and August, when about $20,000 is derived from dog licenses. It is obvious, therefore, that the payment of police and firemen's pensions are dependent nearly absolutely upon the collections of fines and forfeitures in the police court.

During the month of December the money received on this account amounted to $3,000 less than the average for preceding months, and it was because of this falling off in the police-court receipts that the December allowances were delayed in settlement until a sufficient amount could be received from the collections in January from the same sources. Averaging the total payments for pensions on account of both the police and fire departments, it requires about $11,000 per month or about $133,000 for a full year, and of this about $13,000 is supplied by the deduction of $1 per month from each officer and member of the police and fire departments and about $20,000 received from dog taxes. The balance of about $100,000 necessary to be collected in order to pay the present pensions in full is therefore dependent entirely on the fines and forfeitures from the police court of the District of Columbia.

The total collections made from the latter source during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, were $89,490.92. During the fiscal year, in the month of February, it was necessary to reduce the payments of pensions of police and firemen to a pro rata basis, but this deficiency was made up after the 1st of the succeeding July, when sufficient revenue was obtained from the collections on account of dog taxes.

The bill under consideration would, if enacted, provide a new source of revenue for the payment of police and firemen's allowances which would, for many years to come, more than supply all the revenue needed for this purpose, and leave a surplus to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the general revenues of the District.

A great many of the beneficiaries of both departments who gave the best years of their lives to the service, are now incapacitated for other work; and those dependent upon members of these departments who have children to take care of and provide for are dependent for living expenses on the regular payment of the allowance the law provides. It seems an unjust hardship to deprive these people of any part of their small monthly stipend. The proposed measure provides ample means for the payment of all allowances in full every month.

Any increase of the relief fund which this bill may involve will not entail any additional charge upon the Treasury of the United States, as it is not proposed that the United States shall bear any part of the expenses. On the contrary, as the entire expenditure will be made from the revenues of the District, the enactment of the bill as proposed would result in a saving to the Federal Government through the reduction of the District revenues which would be available for appropriation for those expenses of the District which are payable in equal parts by the United States and by the District of Columbia.

Further, it might be stated that the operation of the proposed law would be in line with economy in this, that it would result in the retirement of the older and superannuated members of the police and fire departments at the higher rates of compensation and in the infusion of new blood in the force by the appointment of younger men at a much lower compensation.

The police force is divided into three classes, numbered one, two, and three. Those of class one received $900 per annum, those of class two receive $1,080 per annum, and those of class three receive $1,200 per annum. The promotions work automatically. Those of class one, after a service of three years, are advanced under the law, and those of class two, after a service of five years in that class, are promoted to class three under the law.

A member of class three receiving $1,200 per annum, if retired, would provide a vacancy for the appointment of a new man at $900 per annum, which would result in the saving to the appropriation of $300 per annum.

Very respectfully,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

The following letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia calls attention to one of the many distressing cases which this legislation is designed to relieve:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 30, 1912.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a communication dated the 25th instant from Mrs. Florence Crippen relative to her distress because of the insufficiency of the police and firemen's relief fund.

November 5, 1889, Private Americus N. Crippen, after being on the force for a few months, was killed by a man named George Bush, who had murdered a man. He was so closely pursued by the officer that he could not escape. He therefore shot Crippen, who died almost immediately, not, however, until he had shot Bush and inflicted a fatal wound.

The case of Crippen is only one of a number of the tragic and heroic circumstances under which pensioners of this fund become entitled to its bounty.

The commissioners earnestly hope that timely relief may be provided by the early enactment of the pending legislation in Senate 2047, entitled "A bill for the creation of the police and firemen's relief and retirement fund, to provide for the relief and retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such relief and retirement, and for other purposes."

Very respectfully,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

To the Commissioners of the District of Columbia:

MY DEAR SIRS: When the heart is breaking the lips must speak. I am desolate and in absolute want; no means for food and am sinking. Won't you please present my case to the District Committee and urgently ask for the payment of my back pension, amounting to a good sum now, and please, dear gentlemen, ask that immediate relief be given; I need it. Why is it that Congress seems to ignore the legal rights of these people and will not do justly by them? If they could know my condition, I am sure they would do something to relieve the stringency. Oh, please do something for my relief. I have no source to look to and am in the poorest health, as Dr. Hemler can testify.

Please, dear commissioners, help me. I would not thus trouble you but for dire necessity. Let me beg that you urge the matter before the committee at their next meeting, and oblige,

Yours, respectfully, in distress, grief, and want,

MRS. FLORENCE CRIPPEN.

The following is a brief analysis of the House bill and the substitute proposed in this report:

POLICE AND FIREMEN'S RELIEF FUND—HOUSE BILL.

All present and future deficiencies in fund to be met by a tax upon all taxable property in the District. Upon certification by the commissioners to the Secretary of the Treasury of the existence of a deficiency he shall cause to be paid from the Treasury an amount sufficient to meet it.

Tax to be in addition to that now provided for by law, and shall be collected at the same time as other taxes. Before first tax is available commissioners shall, on the 1st of every month, draw a requisition on the Secretary of the Treasury for an amount sufficient to meet the deficiency for that month. Requisition to be paid from any District funds which, in the opinion of the commissioners, can be spared. Such funds to be reimbursed from first moneys received from tax herein provided for.

This act not to take effect until a majority of the persons, more than 21 years of age, owning property in the District, have voted in favor of the tax. Commissioners to make all arrangements for holding such election. Expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the District to be reimbursed out of the first moneys received from taxes.

POLICE AND FIREMEN'S RELIEF FUND—PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE.

Receipts to consist of: Fines imposed upon members of the police and fire departments; rewards and gifts received by members except such as are allowed to be retained; receipts from sale of unclaimed property in the police department; a deduction of 1½ per cent in monthly salary of each member; police-court fines, except those allowed by law to be paid to the humane society.

Deficiencies to be made up from receipts for licenses other than liquor licenses.

Members injured in line of duty to receive expenses in addition to regular salary.

Permanent disability incurred in line of duty, or from any cause after 15 years' service, brings a pension of not exceeding $50 to $150 per month, according to rank.

In case of death after retirement, dependent relatives to be paid not exceeding $50 per month. Widow's pension to cease upon remarriage. Pension to her children to cease after attaining age of 16.

Member may be retired after 25 years' service and receive maximum pension allowed for injury in line of duty.

Funeral expenses of member dying while in service may be allowed to the extent of $75.

Retiring board, consisting of police and fire surgeons and two officers each from the police and fire departments, shall pass on all cases for relief.

Commissioners shall require biennial examinations of all policemen and firemen now receiving pensions to ascertain whether they should be increased or reduced. Pensions may be discontinued if pensioner is shown to be guilty of crime.

Pensioners may be called on for duty without compensation in times of great emergency.

OLD POST-OFFICE PROPERTY, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13774) providing for the sale of the old post-office property at Providence, R. I., by public auction.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. LEA. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to the report of the committee which has been investigating the Lorimer case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Tennessee will be permitted to make a statement.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, on behalf of the Lorimer committee I desire to state that the majority and minority members of that committee have made an agreement to file the majority report and the views of the minority on Monday, May 20, and they have further agreed that the minority and majority will endeavor to get a unanimous-consent agreement to have a day set for a vote on the question during this session of Congress.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I did not understand the first part of the Senator's statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee stated that the majority and minority members of the Lorimer committee have agreed to file the majority report and the views of the minority on May 20.

Mr. BRISTOW That is a week from next Monday.

Mr. LEA. A week from next Monday.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say that, notwithstanding the suggestions and statements that have been made to the contrary, no member of the Lorimer committee has thought or had any idea of attempting to delay a report in this case or postponing the consideration of it over this session.

RETRIAL OF CADETS.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 99.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know what the joint resolution is, and I shall not object to it at this time, but I shall ask for the regular order after it is concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the report of the committee may be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will have to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho objects.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the joint resolution be considered notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Idaho.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion can not now be made.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of——

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Calendar No. 596, unobjected bills alone to be considered, and that after the unobjected bills have been taken care of it shall be in order to move to take up any bill to which objection has been made.

Mr. SWANSON. I object, unless we commence at the beginning of the calendar and go through with the unobjected bills. I have no objection to the request if that is done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request as presented.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. I will modify the request, then, to commence at the beginning of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that, in considering the calendar under Rule VIII until the calendar is completed, only such bills shall be considered as are unobjected to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as first in order.

Mr. JONES. At the request of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EASEMENT OF FLATHEAD LAKE LANDS, MONTANA.

The bill (S. 5206) to amend that portion of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1066), relating to the reservation of an easement in lands bordering Flathead Lake, Mont., was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read heretofore.

Mr. MYERS. On behalf of my colleague, I desire to ask——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MYERS. No; I wish to ask that it be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend so much of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1066), which provides for the reservation of an easement over tracts of land bordering Flathead Lake, Mont., so as to read as follows:

That an easement in, to, and over all lands bordering on or adjacent to Flathead Lake, Mont., which lie below an elevation of 9 feet above the high-water mark of said lake for the year 1909, is hereby reserved for uses and purposes connected with storage for irrigation or development of water power, and all patents hereafter issued for any such lands shall recite such reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5728) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over, and let the next bill go over.

The next order of business, being Senate Resolution 242, directing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to inquire into and report to the Senate whether post-office inspectors are being sent through the country to influence postmasters to aid in the election of delegates for or against any candidate for the Presidency, and so forth, was passed over.

The bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4204) to provide for the final settlement with the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties dated August 7, 1851, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that this bill and the next six orders of business be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The bill (S. 4205) to provide for the final settlement with the Clatsop Tribe of Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties dated August 5, 1851; the bill (S. 4533) to provide for a final settlement with the Kathlamet Band of Chinook Indians, of Oregon, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 9, 1851; the bill (S. 4534) to provide for a final settlement with the Wheelappa Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 9, 1851; the bill (S. 4535) to provide for a final settlement with the Lower Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 9, 1851; the bill (S. 4536) to provide for a final settlement with the Waukimum Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 8, 1851; and the bill (S. 4537) to provide for a final settlement with the Nuc-quee-clah-we-muck Tribe of Indians, of Oregon, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 7, 1851, were passed over.

The bill (S. 3316) to repeal an act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 11628) authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the Island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as the next bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 284) for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4840) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battleship Indiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let the bill go over. It is being considered in connection with the omnibus claims bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4159) for the relief of F. M. Lyman, jr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think this bill and the next two should go over, because they are adversely reported and will involve discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let them go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I do not ask that.

The bill (S. 4230) for the relief of Robert F. Scott and the bill (S. 364) for the relief of Ranney Y. Lyman were passed over.

The bill (S. 111) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in Washabaugh County, in the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER AT ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

The bill (S. 4780) for the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "toward" and insert "for"; in line 7, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert "the Secretary of the Navy"; and on page 2, line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert "and to include all necessary approaches," so as to read:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $750,000, to be immediately available, and to remain so until expended, for the construction, under the direction of a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and Ivory G. Kimball, representing the Grand Army of the Republic, of a memorial amphitheater at the national cemetery at Arlington, Va., and in accordance with the plans of Carrere & Hastings, architects, of New York City, adopted by the commission appointed by section 16 of the act of May 30, 1908, and by said commission reported to Congress February 15, 1909, to cost not more than $750,000, and to include all necessary approaches.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. When the bill was up the other day there was an amendment which, I think, it was generally agreed should be adopted, and I think it was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the suggestion that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] made. It was not in the form of an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the word "amphitheater," insert "including a chapel."

Mr. LODGE. I suggested that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts now offer it as an amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Secretary read who will now constitute the commission. I think that part of the bill has been amended. Has it been amended?

Mr. WARREN. By adding "the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it been amended by simply adding "the Secretary of the Navy"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is very proper. I had intended to move such an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The board will consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Superintendent of the United States Capitol, and Ivory G. Kimball.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Kimball represents the Grand Army of the Republic. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was not giving attention at the time the bill was read the other day, and I shall object to it now if it is not too late.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not too late. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

REPORTS RELATING TO COTTON.

The bill (H. R. 14052) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue certain reports relating to cotton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read in full.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care to have the bill go over, providing it is amended in such a way that it is possible for the department to carry out the instructions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator is under a misapprehension. I have just come from the department, and they agree heartily to the amendment now in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are certain amendments, and they will be considered, and an objection hereafter will be in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The bill as now amended is the one the department recommends.

It changes the date of taking the acreage report from June 1 to July 1, largely, first, to obviate the expense that would be incurred by making a preliminary report and then sending out agents and getting the corrected reports, which occurs every year, whereas if you wait until July 1 you will get but one report and the actual acreage covered. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I do not understand it. The bill, in section 3—which is hereafter to be known as section 2—says:

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue each year, immediately following the publication of the ginning report of the Census Bureau of December 1, an estimate of the total production of cotton in the United States for the current crop year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is a different bill. The Senator has the wrong bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the bill on the calendar now—No. 500—and section 2, according to the bill, is to be stricken out and section 3 is to be known as section 2; and the section is just exactly as I read it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; that is correct. That is the present law. We did not change that at all. This is not the amended form. I shall have to ask the Secretary to read the copy he has. There must be some misunderstanding as to the form in which the bill comes.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over, so that the Senator can examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is not necessary to go over. It is the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is the present law there is no necessity for reenacting it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Section 1 of the proposed legislation, which changes it from June to July 1, is the only change. Just let me read it. [After a pause.] There is no objection to it from the department.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no report from the department here, and I was looking for it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That [indicating] was the part they objected to. This [indicating] is the new legislation.

Mr. BRISOW. I ask, Can not the business of the Senate proceed while the Senators settle it among themselves?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks that the bill go over. It will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5294) to establish in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a division of markets, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5186) to incorporate the Brotherhood of North American Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PROCEDURE IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read in full and the committee amendments agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have it read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] requested me to have the bill go over until he could be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

T. M. MOLLOY AND J. H. CROZIER.

The bill (S. 5956) to restore in part the rank of Lieuts. Thomas Marcus Molloy and Joseph Henry Crozier, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill to explain the details of it; what effect it has, not only on these officers, but on men in the service generally.

Mr. PERKINS. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury gives the information. I ask that the Secretary read the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read a part of the report, and I call the attention of the Senator to the last part of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask that the bill go over?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not. Secretary MacVeagh in his report says:

> While it is the intention and practice of the department to suspend the promotion for one year of any officer failing to pass in his professional examination, it appears that Lieuts. Molloy and Crozier have suffered excessively in the loss of so many numbers through their failure to pass the professional examination for promotion.
> The bill therefore has my approval, and I recommend its passage.

Is the bill intended to give them credits that they have not earned?

Mr. PERKINS. The preceding paragraph explains that.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have it go over. I will read the whole report and see.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2605) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ANNIE G. HAWKINS—HARRIET P. PORTER.

The bill (S. 117) granting an increase of pension to Annie G. Hawkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall oppose the passage of this bill and the ensuing one, but I do not object to their being taken up at this time if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who reported them, is present. He is anxious to have them considered, but I wish to state my objection.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that they go over, as the Senator from Delaware is not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, as will the next bill.

The bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter was passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5860) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5719) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army was read.

Mr. WORKS. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1) to establish a Department of Health, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5169) authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians to intervene in the suit of the Omaha Indians in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 20182) to amend "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

RETRIAL OF CADETS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand since the joint resolution was under consideration before, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], in behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, has filed a report. I think it proper that that report should now be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. DU PONT on the 9th instant, as follows:

> The Committee on Military Affairs, which has had under consideration Senate joint resolution 99, submits a favorable report thereon and recommends that it do pass amended as follows:
>
> In line 3 of the title, strike out the word "Simpkins" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Simkins."
> On page 1, in line 8, strike out the word "Simpkins" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Simkins."
> On page 1, in lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "for violations of regulation No. 132 of the said academy" and insert in lieu thereof the words "for having violated, on August 4, 1911, paragraph No. 132 of the former regulations of the said academy."
> On page 2, in line 4, strike out the word "regulation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "paragraph."
> On page 2, in line 6, strike out the word "regulation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "paragraph."

On page 2, in line 6, strike out the word "forty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-two."

On page 2, in line 7, after the word "regulations," insert the words "approved June 15, 1911."

This resolution authorizes the President:

First. To reassemble the court-martial, or as many members thereof as practicable, not less than the minimum prescribed by law, which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simkins, and James D. Christian, of the United States Military Academy at West Point, for having violated on August 4, 1911, paragraph No. 132 of the former regulations of the said academy and sentenced to be dismissed from the service; and,

Second. To resubmit the case of any one or more of said cadets upon his or their applications to said court for reconsideration of the sentence; and

Third. Authorizes the court upon such reconsideration to construe said regulation as not necessarily requiring a sentence of dismissal, but as permitting a lesser punishment, as provided in paragraph 142 of the current regulations, and to modify the sentence accordingly; and Fourth. Authorizes the President to carry such modified sentence or sentences into effect, notwithstanding the prior dismissal of said cadets, by reinstating them in accordance with such terms and conditions of the modified sentence as approved by the President.

Paragraph 132 of the Regulations of the Military Academy, approved December 1, 1902, provided:

"No cadet shall drink any spirituous or intoxicating liquor or bring or cause the same to be brought within the cadet limits or have the same in his room, tent, or otherwise in his possession upon pain of being dismissed the service."

This regulation has been always construed to make it mandatory for a general court-martial, if the charge was proved, to impose a sentence of dismissal.

On the 15th of June, 1911, the prior regulations of the Military Academy, approved December 1, 1902, were superseded by new regulations, now current, paragraph 142 of which provides as follows:

"Cadets who shall drink or be found under the influence of intoxicating liquor or bring or cause the same to be brought within the cadet limits or have the same in their rooms, tents, or otherwise in their possession shall be dismissed the service or otherwise less severely punished."

It will be observed that this new regulation can not be construed to make a sentence of dismissal mandatory in case the charge be proved, but gives latitude to award a less severe sentence, in the discretion of the court. These new regulations, though approved on the 15th of June, 1911, were only forwarded from the Public Printer at Washington to the Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point on the 29th of August, and consequently they could not have been put into effect until brought to the knowledge of those concerned. The strong presumption was, therefore, that the court-martial for the trial of Cadets Freeland, Sasse, Simkins, and Christian could not have been aware of their discretionary powers in the matter of the sentence so imposed. This strong presumption has now become a certainty, inasmuch as the Secretary of War, by direction of the President, has corresponded with the members of the court-martial and satisfied himself that they had not been informed of any change in the regulations by Gen. Barry, who was the officer who convened the court, and were, therefore, ignorant of the fact that they had discretionary powers in the matter of awarding a lesser punishment.

While it is true that on the 4th day of August, 1911, the cadets in question violated a regulation of the academy in having partaken of, or having in their possession, very small quantities of intoxicating liquor, it is also true that they were not in the slightest degree under the influence of intoxicating drink, or guilty of any impropriety whatever so far as their personal demeanor was concerned; nor were there any charges of such character made against them.

In this connection it may be stated that the evidence of the violations of the regulations by the above-named cadets was based upon their own admissions, made under duress and against their protest; and it may also be added (though this is not very material) that the Corps of Cadets was not at the Military Academy at the time, but encamped in the open country.

Attention is called to the accompanying letter of the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Senate Military Committee:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 9, 1912.

Hon. HENRY A. DU PONT,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: By direction of the President I made an investigation of the cases of Cadets Ralph E. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, and Tattnall D. Simkins, third classmen, and James D. Christian, fourth classman, United States Military Academy, dismissed by sentences of a general court-martial, which sentences were carried into execution October 6, 1911.

I came to the conclusion that the court, in sentencing these cadets, was probably influenced by the mistaken construction that under article 132 of the Regulations of the Military Academy, under which these cadets were tried, a penalty of dismissal was mandatory instead of discretionary with the court. I therefore gave my assent to a draft of joint resolution authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial, or as many members thereof as practicable, not less than the minimum prescribed by law, and resubmit these cases for a reconsideration of the sentences imposed, authorizing the court to construe said regulation as not necessarily requiring sentences of dismissal.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the joint resolution is of such a nature that if there is a disposition to pass it at all it ought to be passed at an early day. The object of it is, of course, to obtain a new trial of these men, which if it results as the first one did will leave them as they now are; but if there should be a lesser punishment found sufficient, it would be possible for them to enter West Point again after losing one year. If it is not soon decided, they, of course, would have to lose two years and would perhaps pass the age limit. Of that I am not certain.

I am myself very much averse, on general principles, to taking up matters of individual cadets and overturning the discipline of the institutions at West Point and Annapolis. In a sort of hysteria some years ago—I speak respectfully, of course—Congress enacted legislation which provided that any cadet found guilty of hazing in any degree should be dismissed. It left no discretion whatever. There were one or two cases which soon arose. I assume, perhaps, that the boys who were caught at it had never read the law. In one case, it was said, a boy had simply snubbed another one's nose in a playful manner with his hands. He was asked if he had hazed the other boy, and he said he had; and upon that he was dismissed from the academy. Those matters were brought to the attention of Congress—perhaps a few cases of the kind—and the cadets were, from time to time, reinstated.

That situation, of course, became intolerable. So the matter was thoroughly discussed by the Committees on Military Affairs and new legislation was provided which gave liberty to a court-martial to administer any punishment which it might see fit, up to and including dismissal from the institution, for hazing.

I know nothing of the particular merits of the case regarding these young men, but, as I look at it, this is a closure of the entire matter. We have now the legislation, we have now the orders and regulations duly signed and promulgated, and it seems to me that when these cases are disposed of it closes the chance of further complications of this kind.

Therefore I hope the joint resolution may be passed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as one of the members on the Committee on Military Affairs who did not sign this report, I simply desire to say that I will not object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I shall not vote for it. I do not believe that Congress ought to review any of the decisions with reference to disciplinary matters at Annapolis or West Point. Notwithstanding the fact that the report is filed here, I have not a doubt but that this legislation, if passed, will be appealed to as a precedent hereafter, and Congress will be asked to pass legislation for the relief of other persons who think they may have been aggrieved for violating some of the orders at Annapolis or West Point.

I believe that we ought to enforce discipline there, and I think it would do much to destroy discipline for Congress to come in and relieve in cases of this character.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I believe the joint resolution ought to pass. I do not think Congress ought to attempt to review the judgment of the properly constituted authorities of these institutions; but these boys did not receive a fair trial. They have not had a fair chance, and they ought to have it. The reason why they did not receive a fair trial was that the members of the court who tried them did not know that under the law as it was at that time they had the discretion to impose a sentence or a punishment less severe than dismissal. We ought not, I think, to permit a judgment to stand rendered under that misapprehension.

If the men who tried the cadets had known that it was within their power to administer the penalty of dismissal or a lesser penalty, I would not stand for a review of their discretion. But we ought to give a chance to the board to determine that matter.

There is no dispute about the facts of the case. The facts were admitted by the young men themselves. The only question which was or could be left to the members of the court-martial was, What shall be the penalty? If the members proceeded to answer that question in ignorance of the change that had been made in the regulations of the academy, it seems to me that, in all fairness, we ought to give them—not the young men but the court itself—the opportunity to decide the case with a full knowledge of the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is unnecessary to enter into any lengthy discussion of this matter, and I will not take up the time of the Senate with reviewing it at all. I wish to express the hope that the Senate will agree to the joint resolution, simply stating further, in corroboration of what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has said, that there was a mistake of law made in the case. The cadets were tried under the regulations of 1902. They were tried in August, 1911. In June, 1911, the regulations had been modified and the modification had been agreed upon, but the modification was not known to the members of the court-martial.

The cadets were sentenced under the regulations of 1902, and the court-martial believed at the time, as the letter from the Secretary of War shows, that they were compelled to sentence them to dismissal from the service. Subsequently this new regulation was brought to their attention, which gives discretion in the court-martial to either dismiss or punish to some lesser extent. That is the whole situation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator the date of the trial at which the young men were tried? What was the date of the hearing?

Mr. FLETCHER. August 4.

Mr. WARREN. The trial was, I think, August 16, and the offense was committed August 4.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct. The trial was on the 16th of August. The offense was committed on the 4th of August. This change in the regulations had been agreed upon on the 15th of June, 1911, but the regulations as modified had not been printed and sent down to West Point, although the superintendent there knew of them, because he had first to submit them to the Secretary of War.

Mr. BORAH. It seems clear from the statement which has been made that these boys ought to have an opportunity to have another hearing, but it would also seem as though there ought to be an appropriation made to start a kindergarten school for those who were trying them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not mean to criticize the court-martial, because the new regulations had not been printed and sent down to West Point until after the trial, I understand.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says the superintendent was familiar with them.

Mr. FLETCHER. The superintendent knew of them. They had been submitted to the Secretary of War on his recommendation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to oppose the joint resolution in its present form, in view of what has been divulged, and yet it strikes me as almost incredible that Gen. Barry should not have informed that court-martial sitting at West Point that the regulations had been changed. Those regulations had been changed almost two months before this court-martial was convened. If a court-martial was conducted in that way, I think it is about time, perhaps, not that we should have a kindergarten but that there should be some suggestion from some source made to officers high in command that a court-martial should at least have all the evidence before it that was needed to enable it to give a just verdict; and the officers constituting such courts ought to know, as has been suggested to me sotto voce in the neighborhood of where I stand, their own powers and their own privileges.

While the Secretary of War does suggest, in rather a modified way, that these cadets were improperly sentenced, yet if I vote for this joint resolution, as I probably shall, I shall always feel that it ought not to be looked upon as a precedent, and that it is involved, even now, in some doubt as to whether or not these young men were improperly convicted. They did disobey the regulations; they knew what the regulations were; they were ignorant, of course, of this change; they deliberately violated the regulations of the academy, and they ought to have been punished; but I am quite willing, for one, that the court-martial shall be reconvened and give them another trial.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I ought to say, in view of what the Senator from New Hampshire has said—and I agree with much that he has said—that there is no positive evidence, of course, that Gen. Barry and this court-martial did not know that the new regulation was in force. If that is true, the second trial of these cadets will doubtless terminate as did the first one. In going into this matter and passing this joint resolution, we simply put the matter back before the court. It will be easy for members of that court to say that they had all of the matter before them in the first trial, and that they do not wish to change their finding; and that would settle it.

I am one of those who believe that four young men just starting out in life, who have been disgraced in this manner and turned back upon the world, will not be harmed further, and if the lesson was a good one in the first place it will certainly be a better one if it be emphasized. On the other hand, if there has been a wrong done, it may make the difference between entirely successful lives and failures for four young men.

So, I am inclined to take the merciful side, but I do it with the expectation that there is a probability of the first trial being duplicated by a second one, the result of which may possibly be the same finding. I do not want to put myself in the position of saying that we are going to override the discipline of West Point. That is a matter that I have always been disinclined to do. I have invariably in committee voted against taking up these subjects. I think my fellow members of the committee understand that. But with this doubt and with this letter of the Secretary of War, while it is to some extent vague, and without questioning what the court or Gen. Barry may have done with or without knowledge, as this must necessarily be a closure of the entire matter, I should like to see the joint resolution passed as proposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say, so far as Gen. Barry is concerned, that he probably takes the position that the regulations were not promulgated until the 29th of August at the time they were sent down from the Public Printer. They were agreed to on the 15th of June, and then printed. So he probably holds that they did not go into effect until they were received in printed form at West Point and there promulgated; which was after the trial.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. Can any member of the committee inform us when the new regulation was promulgated? The report seems to be——

Mr. GALLINGER. It was sent down on the 29th of August.

Mr. ROOT. That is quite a different thing. Regulations are not promulgated by having the package of papers put into the express office by the printer. There is a formal proceeding under which a general order is published promulgating a regulation, and thereupon it becomes a law. I can see nothing here to indicate when that event occurred. When did the new regulation become law? I see no answer to that. It may well be that Gen. Barry knew these new regulations were in fieri, and that they had not been promulgated so as to become a law at the time of the trial.

I observe, Mr. President, that these young men were charged and tried for a violation of regulation No. 132, which is the regulation containing the penalty of dismissal. That is, the old regulation is the regulation for the violation of which they were charged and tried. They were not being tried under any other regulation. It is true that that regulation under which they were charged and tried was at some time or other superseded by another and a different regulation, which is regulation No. 142, a different statute.

The situation is as if a man were indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced under a particular statute, and that evidence were produced that at some time or other that statute was repealed by another law which has now gone into effect, but we are not informed when that repeal took place.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask a question right there of the Senator? Does not the letter of the Secretary of War show that the construction put upon the last regulation by the department was a modification of the first, and that that modification took effect before the offense was committed?

Mr. FLETCHER. Before the trial was had or the offense committed.

Mr. McCUMBER. And also before the offense was committed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to call the Senator's attention to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. There was certainly a recommendation that they go back and have a new trial.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Secretary of War does not explain that, as the Senator suggests.

Mr. ROOT. What the Secretary of War says is:

> I came to the conclusion that the court, in sentencing these cadets, was probably influenced by the mistaken construction that under article 132 of the Regulations of the Military Academy—

That is the old one, which is said to have been repealed by the later one. It is a mistaken construction of the old law under which they were charged and tried.

Mr. McCUMBER. The mistake was that the old law was in existence, while the Secretary holds that it was not in existence.

Mr. ROOT. He does not appear to hold that it was not in existence. He says that the court—> was probably influenced by the mistaken construction that under article 132 of the Regulations of the Military Academy, under which these cadets were tried, a penalty of dismissal was mandatory instead of discretionary with the court.

That is to say, he puts himself upon the ground not that the court was ignorant of the repealing statute, not that it was ignorant of the new statute, but that it is chargeable with a misconstruction of the old statute.

Mr. BRISTOW. Probably.

Mr. ROOT. Probably influenced by a misconstruction of the old statute, so that the effect of this joint resolution would be to order a new trial because of a probable error in construction by the court.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is all there is to it.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; that is all there is to it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the joint resolution had better go over. It will lead to a great deal of discussion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor, and I have been yielding, as I supposed, for questions. I did not expect to get into any argument or discussion on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War believed that under the old regulation there was discretion in the court-martial, but the court-martial itself has been inquired of evidently, and the court-martial has informed the Secretary of War that it felt that under the old regulation it was mandatory to dismiss these cadets, and that the court had no discretion. The Secretary of War believes they had. This joint resolution simply provides, not that there be a retrial of these cadets, but that they go back before the same court-martial, and that that court-martial be authorized to impose the same or such other sentence as it may see fit. The cadets are not asking for a new trial——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply want to get through with this sentence. They are not asking for a new trial, but they are simply asking to go before the same court-martial, and that the same court-martial pass sentence upon them.

Mr. BRISTOW. This joint resolution will evidently lead to considerable discussion, and I ask that it go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the Senator will not do that. If you are going to do anything at all about this matter, if you are going to correct the injustice that has been done, and do the right thing by these young men, do it now; and if you are not going to do it now, do not do it at all. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. ROOT. I feel bound to say that, in the absence of any information upon the vitally important fact as to when the new regulation was promulgated and became law, I should ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects, and the joint resolution goes over.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the order is made putting the joint resolution over, I want to suggest to the Senator from New York that the report shows that the new order was made on the 15th day of June, 1911, and that it was communicated to the Military Academy at West Point on the 24th day of August, 1911. The record, I think, is quite sufficient with respect to those points.

REWARDS TO EMPLOYEES OF ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

The bill (H. R. 17937) authorizing the Secretary of War to pay a cash reward for suggestions submitted by employees of certain establishments of the Ordnance Department for improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Idaho.

HAROLD L. JACKSON.

The bill (S. 6244) to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment on page 1, line 9, after the word "Infantry," to insert:

Provided further, That prior to his restoration to the active list this officer shall have passed an examination for promotion to the grade of major of Infantry, as prescribed by regulations of the War Department under the terms of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army of the United States with the same rank and relative position he would hold if he had not been retired: Provided, That such restoration shall be in temporary excess of the number authorized only until such time as a vacancy shall occur in the grade of major of Infantry: Provided further, That prior to his restoration to the active list this officer shall have passed an examination for promotion to the grade of major of Infantry, as prescribed by regulations of the War Department under the terms of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VASHON ISLAND MILITARY RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (S. 5608) providing for the abandonment of the Vashon Island Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment in section 3, page 3, line 8, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-four," to insert:

Provided, That the total proceeds of the sale and the amount thereof turned in to the Treasury shall be reported to the Secretary of War by the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That if any one of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not duly purchased by the lessee, as provided in section 2 of this act, within 90 days after the same becomes subject to purchase under the provisions of this act, then, in that event, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of such remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations"; and the said lessees in occupancy of their lawfully leased tracts at the time of the passage of this bill, and who do not purchase such tracts, shall have the privilege of removing from their tracts any and all improvements made thereon; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reappraise any unsold tracts from time to time before offering the same for sale under said act of July 5, 1884: Provided, That the total proceeds of the sale and the amount thereof turned into the Treasury shall be reported to the Secretary of War by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In section 3, on page 2, line 17, I think the word "one" should be stricken out and the word "part" inserted. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 2, line 17, after the word "any," it is proposed to strike out "one" and insert "part," so as to read:

That if any part of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not duly purchased by the lessee, as provided in section 2 of this act, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask that calendar Nos. 622, 623, and 624, being House bill 18712, House bill 20586, and Senate bill 6646, may be passed over for the day. My reason for making the request is that I assume the new general-pension law will be in effect in a very short time, and I do not wish to cover any case by special pension where the same pension will be granted under the new law. So until I can reexamine these cases I ask that the bills go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in that connection I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, if there is a probability that the enactment of the general law to which the Senator has referred will lessen the number of private pension bills. They have been very numerous in the past; I doubt not they have been meritorious bills; but I should like the Senator's opinion as to that matter, because I have already received one letter making inquiry on that point.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I answered that question once or twice during the debate upon the general pension bill. My opinion is that it will not lessen the number of private pension bills introduced. There seems to be a habit on the part of some Senators of introducing any number of such bills.

Mr. WARREN. Ought it not to reduce the number of such bills?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment, until I finish my sentence. At the same time, Mr. President, I believe it will have the effect of there being a smaller number passed, because those who under the new bill receive the same amount that they would have granted to them by special acts, as pensions have heretofore been graded, at least, would not be considered in a new special pension bill if it were introduced, unless there should be some change in the sentiment of the two committees.

ERSKINE R. K. HAYES.

The bill (S. 3459) for the relief of Erskine R. K. Hayes was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TWIN FALLS, IDAHO.

The bill (S. 247) to provide for the erection of a public building at Twin Falls, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, on page 2, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "ninety," and in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "ninety," so as to read:

The cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed $90,000. For the purposes aforesaid the sum of $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT IDAHO FALLS, IDAHO.

The bill (S. 250) to provide for the erection of a public building at Idaho Falls, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, on page 1, line 11, to strike out "150" and insert "85"; and on page 2, line 2, to strike out "150" and insert "85," so as to read:

The cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed $85,000. For the purposes aforesaid the sum of $85,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITION TO POST-OFFICE BUILDING, DETROIT, MICH.

The bill (S. 5851) to increase the appropriation for the addition to the post-office building at Detroit, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the limit of cost of the addition to the post-office building at Detroit, Mich., be increased $70,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 22343) to require supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, to submit their annual reports at the end of each fiscal year was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6497) to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was the bill objected to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

The bill (S. 3463) to establish a bureau of national parks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let the bill go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was unable to hear what disposition was made of orders of business 606 and 607.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both bills went over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I heard no request. Did some Senator request that they go over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] requested that order of business No. 606 should be passed over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not able to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] objected to order of business No. 607.

UVALDE, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 22301) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Uvalde, Tex., a certain strip of land was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORSICANA, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 12013) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Corsicana, Tex., certain land for alley purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BUCKHANNON, W. VA.

The bill (S. 6342) to provide for the erection of a public building at Buckhannon, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "sixty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on the property already acquired for that purpose a suitable building, including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office in the city of Buckhannon, W. Va., the cost of the same not to exceed $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice there is no report on the calendar. Has there been one made?

Mr. WATSON. I have a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I thought had been submitted with the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe it has been published. Will the Senator state the facts?

Mr. WATSON. The postal receipts for the last fiscal year were $12,318.35. The site has already been acquired.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWSON RENO.

The bill (S. 4166) for the relief of Lawson Reno, collector second district of Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to credit Lawson Reno, collector of internal revenue for the second district of Kentucky, and his accounts with the sum of $96, being the value of stamps totally destroyed by fire in the office of Stamp Deputy George R. Mayo.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, this is a matter of a minor claim, amounting to something less than a hundred dollars. The case is that of an internal-revenue collector. The building burned, destroying the stamps he had paid for. The matter was before the Committee on Claims, and the revenue department reports that the facts are as stated. I trust the measure may be passed. I believe it is a matter of simple justice to a poor man.

Mr. SMOOT. A telegram in the report from the Reno collector states:

Fire at Bowling Green this morning destroyed bank. Stamps of deputy collector are in vault. Don't know condition.

I ask whether they were destroyed or not. They were in the vault.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We have the verification from the internal-revenue department, as well as from the chief of police of Reno, that the iron box which was in the office was destroyed, and they have every reason to believe that the stamps were destroyed. It is recommended as a matter of justice that he be paid this amount. He paid for the stamps, and they were tantamount to so much cash to him.

Mr. SMOOT. I only ask if the information came after the telegram I have read.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all right. I am quite satisfied it is just.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTAIN ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 6551) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead" was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

A. W. CLELAND, JR.

The bill (S. 5507) for the relief of A. W. Cleland, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the report be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BRISTOW on the 1st instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5507) for the relief of A. W. Cleland, jr., having carefully considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This bill directs the payment to A. W. Cleland, jr., of Denver, Colo., of $62.83, for potatoes furnished the United States Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., in the month of May, 1889. From the evidence submitted, and from the records of the Indian Office, it appears that Mr. Cleland furnished the above Indian school 2,513 pounds of potatoes on May 23, 1889, but failed to receive payment for the same because of delay in presenting his claim in proper form. On April 2, 1892, his claim for $62.83 was allowed by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the claim having reached the Indian Office on March 15, 1892. To be payable from the proper appropriation, however, it should have been on file prior to July 1, 1891. At that date the unexpended part of the appropriation passed to the surplus fund, and therefore funds were not, and are not, available from which Mr. Cleland's claim could be paid.

Mr. Cleland's appeal to Congress appears first to have been made in the Fifty-ninth Congress, he having failed to seek congressional relief sooner, presumably because he was not in urgent need of the money.

The correctness of this claim for payment for supplies furnished to the Government is unquestioned, and your committee recommends the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DRENZY A. JONES AND JOHN G. HOPPER.

The bill (S. 3452) for the relief of Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors for surveying Yosemite Park boundary, and for damages for illegal arrest while making said survey, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "$4,840.89" and insert "$2,649.37"; in line 10, after the word "changed," to strike out the remainder of the bill in the following words: "And the additional sum of $2,000 for damages for the illegal arrest and detention of Jones by the military authorities while lawfully engaged upon said survey," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid to Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,649.37, for the surveys and resurveys of the Yosemite Park boundary, under contract 184, California, the boundaries of the park having been changed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors, for surveying Yosemite Park boundary."

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, at the time of the adjournment yesterday evening it was understood that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would be ready to go on with the agricultural appropriation bill to-day. However, there seems to have been some misunderstanding on that point, and I find that no Senator is ready to go on with the discussion of the unfinished business to-day. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, on the request of the Senator from North Carolina, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move to take up for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 99.

Mr. SMOOT. We have a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the calendar under Rule VIII and go through with it, considering unobjected bills. As soon as we get through with bills unobjected to, then the motion of the Senator from Virginia would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it proper, the unfinished business having been laid aside, to proceed with the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SWANSON. Did the unanimous-consent agreement extend further than 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement extended to the end of the calendar unless interrupted by the unfinished business. The unfinished business has been laid aside. The Chair understands, therefore, that the unanimous-consent agreement is to continue to the end of the calendar for unobjected bills, and then to go back to the beginning and start in to act on those that have been objected to, provided the Senate desires to do so, in spite of the objection.

Mr. SWANSON. I was under the impression that we were to proceed with the calendar of unobjected bills until 2 o'clock. At 2 o'clock the unfinished business came up, and after that was laid aside it seemed to me to be in order to move the consideration of a bill on the calendar, as I understood that the unanimous-consent agreement extended only until 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not so understand it, but the reporter's minutes will show.

Mr. SMOOT. The unanimous-consent agreement did not include a request that the calendar be continued until 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is as the Chair remembered it, but the Chair was not positive.

Mr. SWANSON. I would understand that unless it included that the consideration of the calendar should extend further than 2 o'clock the unanimous-consent agreement was simply to proceed under Rule VIII until 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business then came in. There is no question but that that would interrupt the calendar, but the unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not hear any unanimous consent for the consideration of the calendar to continue any further than it would be continued under the rule, which was until 2 o'clock under Rule VIII.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I suggest to the Senator that it is more than probable an objection would have been interposed against laying aside the unfinished business had it not been understood that we should proceed with the calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. I withdraw the motion at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue with the calendar and announce the next bill.

LANDS IN NEZ PERCE COUNTY, IDAHO.

The bill (S. 4791) authorizing the patenting of certain lands to rural high school district No. 1, of Nez Perce County, Idaho, was announced as next in order on the calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, after line 10, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in the event the proposed school building is not completed within two years after the title has passed to the rural high school district No. 1 the land shall revert to the United States: Provided further.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause patent to issue to rural high school district No. 1, of Nez Perce County, Idaho, for the use and benefit of said district, for the following-described tract of land within said county, to wit: Commencing at the southeast corner of lot No. 27, on the north boundary of Fort Lapwai Military Reservation, in section 2, township 35 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; thence south along the west line of the Presbyterian mission reserve 300 feet; thence south 85 degrees west 726 feet; thence north 300 feet to the north boundary of the Fort Lapwai Military Reservation; thence north 85 degrees east along said military reservation boundary 726 feet, to the place of beginning, containing 5 acres, more or less: Provided, That Indian pupils residing within said district shall at all times be admitted to such schools as may be established on the lands granted herein on terms of equality with the white pupils: Provided further, That in the event the proposed school building is not completed within two years after the title has passed to the rural high school district No. 1 the land shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That in the event said lands are ever abandoned and not used for educational purposes all right, title, and interest therein conveyed to the said district by this act shall be forfeited and the same shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

RESTRAINT OF TAX COLLECTION.

The bill (S. 2371) to amend section 3224 of the United States Compiled Statutes so as to prevent the restraining of the assessment or collection of any tax—State, county, municipal, district, or Federal—was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD ENTRY IN ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 6245) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Arizona where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Arizona subject to entry under the act to provide for an enlarged homestead, approved February 19, 1909, do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate 1,000,000 acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence; but in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT OKANOGAN, WASH.

The bill (S. 338) authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Colville Indian Reservation to the town of Okanogan, State of Washington, for public park purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "lot," to strike out the following words:

seven in section 16 which lies east of the easterly side line of the right of way of the Great Northern Railway as the same is now located and existing, said portion of said lot comprising approximately 18½ acres, also all that portion of the north one-half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 16 which lies east of the easterly side line of said right of way of said Great Northern Railway, excepting that part of said tract which lies east of a line drawn diagonally in a southwesterly direction from the northeast corner of said northwest quarter of said northeast quarter to a point exactly in the center of said northwest quarter of said northeast quarter, the area thereof being approximately 14½ acres, making an entire area of 33 acres, and all situated in township 33 north, range 26 east of the Willamette meridian, in the county of Okanogan, State of Washington—eight of section 17, township 23 north, range 26 east of the Willamette meridian, containing 47.35 acres.

And to insert—

So as to make the section read:

That there is hereby granted and conveyed, for public park purposes, to the town of Okanogan, county of Okanogan, State of Washington, a municipal corporation, the following-described lands, or so much thereof as said town may desire, to wit: All that portion of lot 8 of section 17, township 23 north, range 26 east of the Willamette meridian, containing 47.35 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 16, after the words "United States," to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That the lands conveyed to the town of Okanogan, as authorized herein, shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the said conveyance shall be made of the said lands to the said town by the Secretary of the Interior upon the payment by the said town for the said lands, or such portion thereof as it may select, of such sum as may be fixed by the appraisement hereafter to be made under the act entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1906, and patent issued to the said town for the said lands selected, to have and to hold for public park purposes, subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning public parks, and that the grant hereby made shall not include any lands which at the date of the issuance of patent shall be covered by a valid, existing, bona fide right or claim initiated under the laws of the United States: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted, and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same: And provided further, That the said town shall not have the right to sell or convey the lands herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described, and that if the said lands shall not be used as public parks the same, or such parts thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the lands conveyed to the town of Okanogan, as authorized herein, shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER (MO.) LEVEE.

Mr. REED. Out of order, I should like to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, out of order the Senator from Missouri submits a report.

Mr. REED. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 21590) to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25 of Dunklin County, Mo., to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River, and to construct and maintain a levee across the mouth of the Varney River, in the State of Missouri, and submit a report (No. 740) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a local measure.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are proceeding under one unanimous consent, I will say to the Senator. We can not have two unanimous-consent orders existing at the same time.

Mr. REED. I was not aware of that. It is a mere local bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can wait until the calendar is finished.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we shall soon be through with the calendar.

Mr. REED. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his request for the present.

PENSION BILLS PASSED OVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. House bill 18712, House bill 20586, and Senate bill 6646, the next three bills on the calendar, will be passed over on request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD ENTRY IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 5952) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Nevada where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Nevada subject to entry under the act "To provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate 2,000,000 acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence. But in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

The bill (S. 6383) to amend an act approved February 19, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that bill is confined to those lands in Wyoming, or it is not of general application.

Mr. WARREN. It is not confined to Wyoming, but it is confined to those arid lands which are under the law provided for an enlarged homestead. Of course it can apply only to them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. It was not intended to apply to the State of Idaho. When the Senator was presenting the matter I made that suggestion, and I understood the Senator to say that it was to obviate embarrassment or difficulty in those lands in the northwestern portion of Wyoming. It is true they lie next to Idaho, but I would not like to have it extend to Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say to my colleague that I desire to offer an amendment to extend it to the State of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. My objection to the measure now is that it is in general terms. It was allowed to come out of committee on condition that it did not extend to Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The bill at present does not extend to the State of Idaho for the reason that it amends an act which act does not extend to the State of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what I have in mind.

Mr. BORAH. Thereafter, on the 17th of June, 1910, we passed the same act applying to the State of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it did not contain this provision.

Mr. BORAH. It contains this precise provision.

Mr. HEYBURN. Reducing the amount of cultivation?

Mr. BORAH. It contains the precise provision covering the same amount of cultivation that the law did.

Mr. HEYBURN. But not as it would be if this was enacted.

Mr. BORAH. No; but my purpose was——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask that the bill go over under the circumstances.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will not cut me off until I explain.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will not cut off the Senator at all.

Mr. WARREN. In presenting the bill as I did before the committee I did not attempt to mislead the committee. I was content, so far as I was concerned, that it might apply only to Wyoming; but in preparing and introducing the bill it seemed rather selfish to confine it that way, and so I introduced it in general terms for the committee to act on it in the manner it might deem best.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am sure the Senator will acquit me of any suggestion that he did so act.

Mr. WARREN. This is the condition in my State—not so particularly in the northwestern part as in exactly the opposite corners, the northeast and the southeast. We have hundreds of families, I might perhaps say thousands, who during the last five years have settled there. They have come from the Eastern States, attracted by the dry-farming proposition of deep plowing and allowing the land to lie fallow every other year. In fact, they have been there until now the time is approaching for proving up on their homesteads. We have had two years of excessive drought and it is utterly impossible for many of those people to go on and prove up unless they have relief. I assume that the condition must be the same in Montana and some other States. I do not know how it is in Idaho. It does seem to me that we ought as early as possible to allow those people to present their proof and get their patents and become settled in the country rather than to have them lose their all.

This matter comes up to me not alone from settlers, but the appeal also comes from the land offices in the different districts in which this matter had been brought before them through the entries, as well as from the homesteaders, and the manner in which the first settlers had undertaken to prove up shows how practically impossible it will be for these deserving settlers to cultivate for the first few years the one-fourth as demanded under the present law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am perfectly willing to accede to the wisdom of the Senator from Wyoming, so far as the conditions in that State are concerned, but I do not desire them extended to the State of Idaho.

It is my intention, Mr. President, to take up this question of pressing any further what is called the enlarged homestead at an early date or a convenient opportunity. I am chafing under the constant aggression that is exhibited in the way of enlarging the enlarged homestead.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks that the bill go over?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER.

The bill (S. 5458) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Delaware River south of Trenton, N. J., by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 7, after the word "act," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the said bridge shall be built and completed in accordance with such plans as the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers may hereafter approve, and until such approval has been given no further work of construction shall be done by the said companies.

So as to make the bill read:

That section 6 of the act approved March 16, 1906, authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. or their successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River between a point south of and within 1 mile of the southern boundary line of the city of Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, and a point south of and within 1 mile of the southern boundary line of the borough of Morrisville, in the county of Bucks and State of Pennsylvania, be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which the said bridge shall be required to be completed shall be within five years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That the said bridge shall be built and completed in accordance with such plans as the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers may hereafter approve, and until such approval has been given no further work of construction shall be done by the said companies.

SEC. 2. That said act as thus amended be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The bill (S. 6614) to authorize the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Red River of the North between Pembina, N. Dak., and St. Vincent, Minn., was read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not see the Senator in charge of the bill present, but I should like to know under what law or condition it is necessary to have the consent of Congress to build a pontoon bridge. Pontoon bridges have been builded since the first settlement of this country without any special authority. A pontoon bridge is made up of boats and is tied to the bank with ropes. There has never been any requirement that you should have consent to make them. They can be swung around in a few minutes as fast as the tide will carry them and swung back again as soon as men can push them back.

This is entering upon a new field of legislation. I should like, before we do it, to have some information from the distinguished Senator who seems to have reported the bill. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks that the bill go over, pending the return of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The bill (S. 5455) to establish a system of wireless telegraphy in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to make some inquiries about the bill. I see the Senator who reported it is not here, so I will have to ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

HEIRS OF JOHN W. WEST.

The bill (S. 1231) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

RETIRED OFFICERS OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 5955) for the relief of certain retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PHARMACISTS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2795) to promote pharmacists to the grade of chief pharmacist in the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

NAVY RETIREMENTS.

The bill (S. 473) relating to Navy retirements was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask that the same order be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

HYDROGRAPHIC STATION AT LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The bill (S. 2949) to establish a hydrographic station at Los Angeles, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, in the State of California, the same to be conducted under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department," approved June 21, 1866.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to secure sufficient accommodations in the city of Los Angeles for the hydrographic office, and to provide the same with the necessary furniture, apparatus, supplies, and services allowed existing branch hydrographic offices, at a cost not exceeding $9,000, which sum is hereby appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMASTERS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 5214) to increase the number of paymasters and passed assistant and assistant paymasters in the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, IN JACKSON HOLE, WYO.

The bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five," making it read:

That the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the words "out of," to strike out "the reclamation fund" and insert:

Any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, through the engineer officer in charge of road and bridge construction and maintenance in the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to that amendment, which proposes to pay it out of a general fund. I think, as we have a reclamation fund and this is a reclamation project, it should be paid out of that fund.

Mr. WARREN. I will explain that to the Senator. The reclamation fund, as far as it applies to that locality, has all been apportioned, and in order to pay it out of that fund it would be to put a higher price per acre upon the land in Idaho, where this water is used, and in Wyoming. It would be a hardship upon the settler to appropriate it in any other manner.

This is for the general public. It is in the timber reserve. The Jackson Hole country is surrounded by vast timber reserves. The people are cut off from the world, except as they go out at the Idaho side and north of the Yellowstone Park. On this stream the rise of the water, of course, renders them isolated, sometimes 90 days or more at a time, even from getting food from the outer world.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have the irrigation projects, and we have guaranteed $30,000,000 of bonds for aiding in this work. It should be paid out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. WARREN. Not a dollar of that loan has been taken, and we are paying for a great many things for the general good out of reclamation funds. We are not niggardly about having them come out of that fund; therefore I hope the Senator will not object to this small amount being taken from the general fund for the general good of the country. It is too late to take it out of the reclamation fund, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SHIVELY. What is the necessity for a bridge in that isolated place?

Mr. WARREN. Many people live there, and furthermore, along this bridge would be one of the great thoroughfares of the Nation into the Yellowstone Park country. It is a part of a new county, which, as I said, is within large timber reserves.

This Jackson Hole settlement, while within forest and game reserves, has fine meadows and fine farms, and all that. They are totally unable to overcome this difficulty of high water forced upon them through the Government's use of the Snake River as a canal for Jackson Lake reservoirs. They have had temporary bridges, also ferries, but these have been washed away by high water. Most of the year, before the building of Government reservoirs, they could ford the stream, but now they can not. They are cut off.

This bill compels the local authorities to build the approaches, probably a mile or so on each side, which will have to be built. The bridge, when built, will not only be conducive to the convenience and use of the people in the Reclamation Service, but it will form a great public highway. A new railroad is approaching on the west side, and brings, with a short drive, the tourists of the country who come to look at the Yellowstone Park and other resorts, especially the great game preserves. So far as advertising is concerned, if I may so term it, the United States gets one of its greatest advertisements by the people going through that vast scenic country to get to the several parks and reserves.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator, is it not true that the Government came in and in process of carrying out its own plans destroyed the bridge?

Mr. WARREN. The Government not only destroyed the bridges but the ferries also. It swept them all away. They have been replaced two or three times, and again they have been swept away.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was on a county road; it was an asset of the State, and it destroyed the use of that road; that is to say, it made the road useless. The Government raised the water over the approaches. So I do not think the people in the surrounding country or the organized government of the State should be compelled even to pay for those approaches, because they had a satisfactory road, a satisfactory bridge, and satisfactory approaches.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is this in the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from North Carolina asks if this is in the Yellowstone Park. It is not; it is south of there, but between the Yellowstone Park and this place it is all a timber reserve. Not only that, but by legislation it has been made a great game preserve—the greatest in this country, in fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I notice in the letter from the Secretary of the Interior he says that Uinta County itself ought to pay one-half of the expense of this bridge. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming why the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior on that point has been waived and another expense placed upon the Government?

Mr. WARREN. There are three answers to that: The first is that it is not in Uinta County itself, but in a new county—the county of Lincoln; the second is that nearly all of that country the Government has in reserve for timber, game, and public parks, and therefore there is little property upon which to levy the taxes; and the third is that the expense, as it seemed to me, had better be divided by providing that the bridge itself, which will naturally be a steel bridge, shall be put in by the engineers of the Government, and that the local authorities, as the bill provides, shall first agree to build the approaches and roads and then assume the expense of subsequent maintenance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, that ought to be done. It is not on a Government reservation, is it?

Mr. WARREN. It is not; but it is surrounded on all sides by Government reserves. This locality is a long narrow strip of fertile country; it is settled up, hence not itself a part of a timber reserve, but it is surrounded by miles upon miles of Government reservations.

Mr. GALLINGER. And this is intended to provide a better access to the national park from one direction, from the south, is it?

Mr. WARREN. Not only to the national park, but in going from the forest reservation upon one side over to the forest reservation upon the other side. In case of a great forest fire, for instance, they would be prevented from crossing unless this bridge is constructed. It is more for the use of the United States than it is for the people of that section of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I observe nowadays a tendency to load onto the Government expenditures for pretty nearly everything. I do really think that it is rather an extraordinary provision that the Government of the United States should build a bridge on private property without the inhabitants making at least a contribution to the expenditure. The Senator from Wyoming says it is a sparsely settled country, but a moment ago the Senator said there were a thousand people there.

Mr. WARREN. Well, I call that sparsely settled when there may be 50 or 75 miles between settlements.

But let me say to the Senator that it is not proposed to build the bridge on strictly private property. In one sense it is Government property, for the river is full of Government water, put into that river and taken out of it by the Government in transporting the water from a Government dam for its own purposes, rendering the river impassable to the people of that community, where they formerly had no trouble in that respect; and it is the duty of the Government to provide the bridge.

Mr. GALLINGER. What was the dam built for, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. The dam was built to raise Jackson Lake so as to take in all the surplus water, the water from the winter snows in the Teton Range, and conduct those waters to the Government lands far below; and the Government is selling to settlers water and land below, largely in Idaho.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I will not object to the consideration of this bill; yet I do think we shall be driven sooner or later to draw a line between the obligations of the Government and the obligations of the citizens of the Government in reference to appropriations from the Treasury. I have said all I care to say about the matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to say, in reply to the Senator's suggestion, that I feel sure that if the Senator from

New Hampshire could realize the conditions in that portion of the country he would raise no objection to the passage of the bill. During the last winter for more than 90 days the people there were not able, because of the high water, to get a particle of food or clothing or anything else into the country except on snowshoes over the mountains. The ferryboats and the bridge they had provided for in the summer were washed away. It is one of those cases that can not be duplicated in this country, and if it be a precedent it is very unlikely that it will ever be followed.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, there must have been some change in the situation, it seems to me, since the Senator introduced the bill. As introduced the bill proposed to appropriate $10,000 for the construction of this bridge, and I observe that the appropriation was to be made out of the reclamation fund. Now the amount is changed to $25,000, and it is to be paid out of the general fund in the Treasury. What transpired in the meantime to cause the Senator to change his mind in that respect?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I was in that portion of the country last summer, as I have been there before. Of course it was a time of drought, and, wishing to be as economical as possible, I was of the opinion that perhaps $10,000 would do the work; but later, and especially upon sending to the Secretary of the Interior for information, when it was learned that a steel bridge alone would cost at least $25,000, according to the estimate of engineers who knew the stream and who have been engaged for the last year in work on the dam above, the amount was increased to $25,000.

Mr. POMERENE. I notice that the Secretary of the Interior recommends that one-half of this expenditure shall be paid by the local authorities.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Ohio was perhaps not in when I explained that.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not in. I just came into the Chamber.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Ohio will notice that an amendment to the bill provides that before the Government shall expend the money it shall obtain an agreement with the local authorities, first, to put in the approaches, and second, to maintain the bridge. That, while not fulfilling the letter of the Secretary's recommendation, really fulfills its spirit, because the locality will be doing its full part in first building the long line of approaches to the bridge, and second, in the maintenance of the bridge hereafter.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senate to return to bill (S. 6614) to authorize the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Red River of the North between Pembina, N. Dak., and St. Vincent, Minn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The understanding was that the bill was simply to be passed over temporarily until some Senator who understood the bill should return and explain it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I understand the situation, and I am certain I can explain the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill went over on my suggestion until the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] should be present. I have no objection to the bill now being taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6614) to authorize the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Red River of the North between Pembina, N. Dak., and St. Vincent, Minn.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can explain the bill to the Senator very briefly. We already have provision for a bridge across the Red River of the North from a little town called Drayton to the Minnesota side. There is no bridge now between Pembina, which is, I think, somewhere about 30 or 40 miles north of Drayton, and the town or village of St. Vincent, on the Minnesota side of the Red River of the North. It is proposed to allow the authorities of those two little towns of about 1,000 inhabitants each to construct a pontoon bridge across this navigable water, the same as has heretofore been constructed at Drayton. It is to be constructed under the general law relating to bridges across navigable rivers, and hence must conform to the requirements of the department so far as providing openings for the navigation of small boats is concerned. I think that explains the matter sufficiently.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not object to the appropriation or the authorization for the building of the bridge; but I was somewhat surprised at the introduction of a bill authorizing the building of a pontoon bridge. A pontoon bridge is not permanently located with regard to the banks of a stream. It is simply a bridge made of boats. It may be made up in one hour, opened in the next, and closed in the next. I do not believe there is a precedent for the authorization of the building of a pontoon bridge by legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that an act has been passed similar to this providing for a bridge at Drayton, as I have already stated. I will also say to the Senator that those are both little towns, and the expense of erecting a bridge across the Red River of the North there would be very large. In the winter time the people there can cross on the ice, but when the ice chokes up it would wash away almost any ordinary bridge unless it was built quite expensively; but they can remove the boats, take care of them, and have a means of intercommunication between these little towns in the summertime over this temporary bridge and in the winter time over the ice.

Mr. HEYBURN. I doubt the necessity for legislation to authorize the building of boats upon a navigable river, and that is all this amounts to. The pontoon consists of a bridge of boats tied together end to end, and tied to either shore in the same way. I doubt the necessity for legislation to authorize such occupation of a navigable stream. I asked that the consideration of the bill be suspended more in order to have some little explanation of it than for any other purpose. I have no objection to the bridge. I would vote, perhaps, for a bridge that would rest upon piers and be fastened to the banks in the ordinary way, but when new legislation or new items come up my curiosity, if nothing else, prompts me to pause long enough to understand them.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, of course, understands that a pontoon bridge across there would be an obstruction to navigation—that is, if the boats were tied together—unless provision was made for opening certain sections of them. Under the general law no bridge can be built, whether pontoon or otherwise, which would obstruct the navigation of a river, without a law authorizing it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think the law applies to pontoons. We have used pontoons frequently in the larger rivers, and opened them and closed them quickly and frequently. It is entirely practicable to build them across the Potomac River, and then if a vessel comes along and wants to pass through it is not at all a difficult undertaking to open a pontoon bridge. You untie the rope or unhitch the chains, as the case may be, and open it or close it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think, however, it would be necessary to get permission to build a pontoon bridge across the Potomac or any other navigable stream.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO JUDICIAL CODE.

The bill (S. 4838) to amend section 96 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, after the word "attendance," to strike out "or" and insert "of," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 96 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 96. The State of New Jersey shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of New Jersey. Terms of the district court shall be held at Trenton on the third Tuesdays in January, April, and September. At each term of the district court it shall be lawful for the judge holding such term, on consent of both parties or on application therefor and good cause shown by either party to any civil cause set for trial or hearing at said term, to order such cause to be held or tried at the city of Newark, in said district, upon the day set for that purpose by said judge: Provided, That such application shall be made to said judge, either in vacation or term time, at least one week before the date set for trial of said cause and on at least five days' notice to the opposite party or his or her attorney; and writs of subpœna to compel the attendance of witnesses at said city of Newark may issue, and jurors summoned to attend said term may be ordered by said judge to be in attendance upon said court in the city of Newark."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONHEGAN ISLAND LIGHTSHIP.

The bill (S. 5387) to construct and place a lightship near Monhegan Island, entrance to Penobscot Bay, Me., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Island," to insert "off the," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have constructed and placed near Monhegan Island, off the entrance to Penobscot Bay, Me., a lightship, to cost not exceeding $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to construct and place a lightship near Monhegan Island, off the entrance to Penobscot Bay, Me."

BIG SANDY RIVER BRIDGE, PIKE COUNTY, KY.

The bill (H. R. 23407) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy River was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 1322) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I inquire what became of Calendar No. 642, being House bill 22731, which appears on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS). The bill was passed this morning.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well. I ask that Calendar No. 643, being House bill 1322, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4947) providing for the equalization of Creek allotments was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDALS OF HONOR.

The bill (S. 2001) to provide for the award of congressional medals of honor to officers of the naval service, and officers and enlisted men of the Revenue Marine, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PORT DISCOVERY BAY, UNITED STATES MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 5808) granting right of way across Port Discovery Bay, United States Military Reservation, to the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "meridian," to strike out "upon such line as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War," so as to read:

That the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Port Discovery Bay, United States Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, across section 1, township 29 north, range 2 west of the Willamette meridian, and across sections 35 and 36, township 30 north, range 2 west of the Willamette meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 7, after the word "way," to strike out "two," and insert "not to exceed one"; in line 9, after the words "right to," to strike out "take and use a strip of land in said reservation 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to said right of way for stations, station grounds, and stock yards, with the right to"; in line 15, after the word "roadbed," to insert "or for the location of station houses"; in line 16, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty"; in line 18, after the word "fill," to insert "or necessary for such station houses"; in line 22, after the word "operation," to insert "including any necessary station houses"; on page 3, line 5, after the word "crossings," to insert "the construction of the fences and crossings to be in accordance with such requirements as may be made by the Secretary of War"; and in line 16, after the word "War," to insert:

Provided further, That said corporation shall pay to the United States such annual compensation for the use of the land hereby granted as may be determined by Secretary of War to be just and reasonable: Provided further, That the United States reserves the right to occupy the land covered by this grant, or any portion thereof, whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, such occupation may be necessary for military purposes: Provided further, That the right of way and other privileges granted by this act shall be subject to the regulation and control of the Secretary of War, and shall be inoperative, null, and void unless the said railway company shall complete the construction of and have in use its tracks within three years from the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purposes, a right of way not to exceed 100 feet in width through said Port Discovery Military Reservation, as aforesaid, and a right to use other additional ground when cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of said roadbed, or for the location of station houses, not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill or necessary for such station houses: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation, including any necessary station houses, of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines, and the use and enjoyment of the rights and privileges herein granted, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States, from which same shall be taken: Provided further, That the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, will fence its right of way and will provide and maintain necessary and suitable crossings, the construction of the fences and crossings to be in accordance with such requirements as may be made by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That any corporation having a franchise for a railway, telegraph, or telephone line in the vicinity of the proposed line of said railway may, upon securing a license from the Secretary of War, use the track and other construction herein authorized to be placed upon the reservation upon the payment of just compensation; and if the parties concerned can not agree upon the amount of such compensation, the sum or sums to be paid for said use shall be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That said corporation shall pay to the United States such annual compensation for the use of the land hereby granted as may be determined by the Secretary of War to be just and reasonable: Provided further, That the United States reserves the right to occupy the land covered by this grant or any portion thereof whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, such occupation may be necessary for military purposes: Provided further, That the right of way and other privileges granted by this act shall be subject to the regulation and control of the Secretary of War, and shall be inoperative, null, and void unless the said railway company shall complete the construction of and have in use its tracks within three years from the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That the said Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, shall comply with such other regulations or conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the location and width of the right of way and of the additional areas granted shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War prior to the commencement of work under the grant hereby made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDALS OF HONOR.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate return to Calendar No. 646, being the bill (S. 2001) to provide for the award of congressional medals of honor to officers of the naval service, and officers and enlisted men of the Revenue Marine, and for other purposes. I think objection was made to the bill because of a misunderstanding.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if there was a misunderstanding, it will have to appear why only officers are included in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. We have amended it so as to include the enlisted men.

Mr. HEYBURN. I could not tell that, because neither the bill nor the report is on the calendar of bills which are at my desk.

Mr. LODGE. They are both on the calendar which I have.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, they are not on my calendar.

Mr. LODGE. They are on mine.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have just received them from the document room.

Mr. LODGE. They are here in my book. Let me say that the bill is simply to extend the general law for the conferring of medals of honor for distinguished gallantry in the service, which now applies to the officers and men of the Army, to the officers and men of the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, unless the amendment includes the enlisted men——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will observe that on page 2 the committee have recommended an amendment so as to include enlisted men in each instance, and I shall offer another amendment to make the bill conform to the committee amendment by making it apply to commissioned, warrant, appointed, and petty officers, and enlisted men. That was the intent of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is because that information was not accessible to me that I heretofore raised the objection to the consideration of the bill. For some reason neither the bill nor the report is in the calendar of bills on my desk. I sent for them and have just received them. With the proposed amendments the bill is entirely satisfactory, and I withdraw any objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in section 2, page 2, line 14, after the word "officers," to insert "and enlisted men," and in line 15, after the word "officers," to insert "and enlisted men," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the "joint resolution relative to the medals of honor authorized by the acts of December 21, 1861, and July 16, 1862," approved May 4, 1898, be hereby amended to extend and include the commissioned, warrant, or appointed petty officers and enlisted men of the Regular or Volunteer Navy. The commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps and the commissioned, warrant, and petty officers and enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service, cooperating with the Navy, and in instances where the revenue cruisers have been acting independently of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the same authority which has been conferred upon the Navy Department in pursuance of the joint resolution of May 4, 1898, in relation to the commissioned, warrant, and petty officers and enlisted men of the Revenue Marine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer several amendments on the first page, in order to make the bill conform to the amendments just adopted. In line 7, after the word "warrant," I move to strike out the word "or"; in line 8, after the word "officer," where it first occurs, to strike out the word "or"; in line 8, after the words "petty officer," to insert "or enlisted man"; and, then, after the words "commissioned officer," in line 9, I move to insert the words "or enlisted man."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, before the word "appointed," it is proposed to strike out the word "or"; in line 8, before the words "petty officer," to strike out the word "or"; in the same line, after the words "petty officer," to insert the words "or enlisted man"; and in line 9, after the words "commissioned officer," it is proposed to insert "or enlisted man," so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause medals of honor to be struck, from dies to be prepared at the United States Mint for the purposes of this act, and to present or cause the same to be presented, in the name of Congress, to any commissioned, warrant, appointed officer, petty officer, or enlisted man of the Regular or Volunteer Navy, or commissioned officer or enlisted man of the Marine Corps, and the commissioned, warrant, and petty officers and enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service, cooperating with and under the control of the Navy, in conformity with section 2757 of the Revised Statutes, and the officers and enlisted men of the revenue cruisers, acting independently thereof, who have distinguished themselves in battle, or who shall distinguish themselves in battle, or display extraordinary heroism in the line of their profession.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the title should probably be amended.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the title be amended so as to read, "Officers and enlisted men of the naval service," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title be read from the desk as amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the award of congressional medals of honor to officers and enlisted men of the naval service and officers and enlisted men of the revenue marine, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be so amended, in the absence of objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator, does not the present law provide for medals of honor to naval officers, although not perhaps to officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. LODGE. It does provide for naval officers, but——

Mr. WARREN. And enlisted men, does it not?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator whether a separate medal is to be struck for this purpose, or is it to extend the provisions of the act originally providing for medals of honor?

In the first place, the act provided for medals of honor to enlisted men. Years afterwards it was made to apply to enlisted men and officers of the Army——

Mr. LODGE. These medals are to be struck from dies already made.

Mr. WARREN. Now it is proposed to make it apply to the officers and men of the Navy?

Mr. LODGE. And Marine Corps.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire—I have not the act referred to before me—who determines as to the recipients of the medals?

Mr. WARREN. A board.

Mr. LODGE. A board recommends them and the President gives them.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is in the act?

Mr. LODGE. That is in the act.

Mr. WARREN. I observe one sentence of the law, if the Senator will turn to it, that I should like to have him explain somewhat. It provides for a gratuity and a medal of honor to seamen distinguishing themselves in battle or by extraordinary heroism in the line of their profession.

Mr. LODGE. That is proposed to cover cases such as frequently occur at sea where a man at great risk of his life rescues another man who has gone overboard. That is a thing that constantly happens in the line of their profession, but not in battle.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I wanted to know, whether that applies alone to the naval service, because in the case of the Army the original purpose, because of an amendment, miscarried, so that a good many medals were distributed on what afterwards were not considered to be proper grounds, and there was a new law passed which bestowed such medals only for distinguished gallantry in battle.

I think it is no more than right to have it apply to distinguished service in the Life-Saving Service, and so forth, if it is not too broad.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it will be found too broad. The board is very careful about granting these medals.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4331) for the relief of William E. Farrell was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5863) for the retirement of employees in the civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5806) to correct the naval record of Franklin Pierce was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to announce that this bill was adversely reported from the committee and was called back and is now on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

BILLS OF LADING.

The bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. Under an arrangement with the junior Senator from the State of Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who desires to offer a substitute, but which substitute is not ready for presentation at this time, I will ask that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KEYSER, W. VA.

The bill (S. 5906) to provide for the erection of a public building at Keyser, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office in the town of Keyser, W. Va., the cost of the same not to exceed $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OLYMPIA, WASH.

The bill (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment in line 6, before the word "dollars" to strike out "three hundred," and insert "one hundred and fifty thousand"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Olympia, Wash., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. SWANSON. A division.

The motion was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 6, noes 14.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 24016) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 24016. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER AT ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4780) for the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion until I can see if I can get unanimous consent to consider a bill? If there is any objection to my bill I will not ask to delay the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I made the motion because under the agreement made, when the calendar had been concluded, it was in order to make a motion to take up a bill notwithstanding the objection. But the Senator from Nebraska, who objected to that bill, is not here, and I therefore withdraw my motion to take it up.

PUBLIC LANDS CARRYING PHOSPHATE DEPOSITS.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (S. 4148) to provide for the acquiring of title to public lands classified as and carrying phosphate deposits.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The amendments were, on line 13, page 1, to strike out the words "first form"; on line 7, page 2, after the word "disposal," to insert the following: "as placer or lode claims as may be appropriate"; on line 14, page 2, after the word "hearing," to insert "before said court," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has in good faith located, selected, or entered, or any person who shall hereafter locate, select, or enter, under the nonmineral land laws of the United States any lands which are subsequently classified, claimed, or reported as being valuable for phosphate may, if he shall so elect, and upon making satisfactory proof of compliance with the laws under which such lands are claimed, receive a patent therefor, which shall contain a reservation to the United States of all phosphate deposits in said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; and all unappropriated public lands now embraced within phosphate withdrawals shall, after the passage and approval of this act, be subject to location, selection, and entry under the provisions of the agricultural public land laws, subject to the provisions of this act. The phosphate deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the mining laws applicable to the acquisition of phosphate lands in force at the time of such disposal as placer or lode claims as may be appropriate, but no such person shall enter upon such lands to prospect for or mine and remove phosphate therefrom without previous consent of the owner under such patent, except upon such conditions as to security for the payment of all damages to such owner caused thereby as may be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to affect or abridge the right of any locator, selector, or entryman to a hearing before said court for the purpose of determining the character of the land located, selected, or entered by him: Provided further, That such hearing shall be had upon the written application of the locator, selector, or entryman at any time after location, selection, or entry and prior to the issuance of patent for the lands so located, selected, or entered.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I should like a brief explanation of the bill from the Senator from Idaho. I did not quite catch the bill as it was read. Will the Senator state the purpose of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. The purpose and object are to provide for agricultural entries upon lands which have been withdrawn for phosphate, without interfering with the agricultural locations. That is to say, reserving the phosphates, but permitting agricultural entries on those lands. It is built upon the same principle as surface entries on coal lands, reserving all phosphates and at the same time giving those who wish to hereafter explore and to go upon the land an opportunity to do so, giving bond to the holder of the agricultural lands.

Mr. WARREN. Does it give the State the same privilege of accepting, if they wish the surface rights?

Mr. BORAH. The State?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it covers the State, as we drew it, and I do not think there is any amendment which covers it.

Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator have any objection to so amending it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I may be able to lend some assistance if the Senator from Wyoming will again state his inquiry.

Mr. WARREN. Some cases have come up where land has been selected as lieu land by the State, and after renting it and passing it over so far as they are concerned, the Government labels it oil land or phosphate land, and it is therefore hung up, and some of the States have asked that in these reservations whatever we do for the settler we give the State the privilege of doing.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it would be safe to enter upon that proposition in this bill, because it opens up other branches that will undoubtedly lead to discussion.

Mr. HEYBURN. This only applies where the title is in the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not apply in cases where the title is undetermined and unsettled.

Mr. WARREN. So it is in the lieu lands, until the finality.

Mr. HEYBURN. This applies to public lands of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to interfere with the bill, but I should like to have the States taken in. Perhaps that can be done in another way.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESERVATION OF FUR SEALS.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on Monday, immediately after the routine business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

RETRIAL OF CADETS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. There are several amendments, mostly in changes of language. I will send to the desk a copy of the bill with the amendments indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, strike out the name "Simpkins" and insert "Simkins"; in line 10 strike out "for violations of regulation numbered 132" and insert "for having violated on August 4, 1911, paragraph numbered 132 of former regulations"; on page 2, line 6, strike out "regulation" and insert "paragraph"; in line 8 strike out "regulation" and insert paragraph"; in the same line strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty-two"; and in line 9, after the word "regulations," to insert "approved June 15, 1911." It is also proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them."

The joint resolution if thus amended would read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

Resolved etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reassemble the court-martial, or as many members thereof as practicable, not less than the minimum prescribed by law, which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., for having violated on August 4, 1911, paragraph No. 132 of former regulations of the said academy, and sentenced them to be dismissed from the service, and to resubmit the case of any one or more of said cadets upon his or their applications to said court for reconsideration of the sentence; and upon such consideration the court is authorized to construe said paragraph as not necessarily requiring a sentence of dismissal, but as permitting a lesser punishment, as provided in paragraph No. 142 of the current regulations, approved June 15, 1911, and to modify the sentence accordingly; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to carry such modified sentence or sentences into effect, notwithstanding the prior dismissal of said cadets, by reinstating them in accordance with the terms and conditions of the modified sentence as approved by the President.

Mr. CULLOM. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Root
Bacon	Crawford	Johnston, Ala.	Shively
Borah	Cullom	Lea	Simmons
Bourne	Cummins	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Fall	Myers	Swanson
Catron	Fletcher	Overman	Warren
Chilton	Gallinger	Page	Watson
Clapp	Gardner	Perkins
Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	Pomerene

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have responded to their names; not a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 11, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee from our heart of hearts that the people of this country have with one accord set apart a day called by the sweetest and most endearing of all names—mother. To-morrow we shall wear in sacred memory the white carnation, the white rose, the lily of the valley. To her the world owes a debt of gratitude which can never be canceled. It was mother who went down to the very gates of death that we might live. From her we drew the strength of life. It was mother who cradled us in her dear arms and comforted our childish sorrows. It was Thy love reflected in her which watched over us by day and by night and inspired in us the purest, the noblest thoughts of life. At her knee we learned to lisp the inspiring and uplifting words, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

So long as we revere her name will our homes be pure and the genius of our Republic be sacred.

Mother is in heaven for most of us. There she waits our coming, for heaven will not be heaven for mother until the pearly gates have opened for her children. Blessed be her memory forever, O God, our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4762. An act to amend an act approved February 6, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 8, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled 'An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' and to provide for the more efficient administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes";

S. 459. An act to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribes of Indians; and

S. 5141. An act to correct an error in the record of the supplemental treaty of September 28, 1830.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution to declare and make certain the authority of the Attorney General to begin and maintain and of any court of competent jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit or suits for the purpose of having judicially declared a forfeiture of the rights granted by the act entitled "An act granting to the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4762. An act to amend an act approved February 6, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 8, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled 'An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' and to provide for the more efficient administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 459. An act to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribes of Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5141. An act to correct an error in the record of the supplemental treaty of September 28, 1830; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 1. An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 652).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 14083 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

H. D. CLAYTON,
E. Y. WEBB,
Managers on the part of the House.

C. D. CLARK,
KNUTE NELSON,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House agreed to the Senate amendments Nos. 1 and 2, which strike out sections 3 and 4 of the bill, for the reason that, in our opinion, the matters mentioned in those sections are provided for by general law, and therefore said sections 3 and 4 are unnecessary.

H. D. CLAYTON,
E. Y. WEBB,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Is the original bill at the Clerk's desk?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the original bill is on the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to agree to the conference report.

The question being taken, the conference report was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 690), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves points of order on the bill.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The Washington Herald of this morning contains a report written by some reporter for that paper who has the privilege of the press gallery about the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] on yesterday regarding the separation in the soldiers' homes of white and negro Federal soldiers. In that report he used the following language:

The House was at once thrown into a state of excitement. Representative ELLERBE, of South Carolina, the leading soloist, tuned up, while TOM HEFLIN, of Alabama, who believes the Civil War is still in progress, got ready for action.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks leave to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not see the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE] at the time this amendment was pending yesterday. I am informed that he was in Philadelphia with the Rivers and Harbors Committee. The House was not thrown into excitement; nobody was excited. As for myself, I took no part in the debate.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] had read to this House a letter from a Federal soldier from New York, a white man, asking that the white and negro Federal soldiers be separated and congratulating him upon his efforts along this line. I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY]. I would favor separating the old Confederate soldier from the negro soldier, and I would grant the wish of these old Federal soldiers. If you should poll the Federal soldiers to-day, the brave men who followed Grant through that struggle for four long years, every one of them without a single exception would vote for separation of the races in these soldiers' homes. [Applause.]

I do not know by what authority this agent of the Washington Herald, who has the privilege of the press gallery, says that I believe "the Civil War is still in progress." There is not a man in this House who has said more, for the brief time that I have been in Congress, in the House and on the hustings, in the effort to bind more closely these sections than I have. [Applause.] I stood here in this hall in the Democratic caucus and cast my vote to make a blind Federal soldier, who had been Chaplain of a Republican Congress, Chaplain of a Democratic House. [Applause.] I stood here in that same Democratic caucus and cast my vote to make Gen. SHERWOOD, a Federal general from Ohio, chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. [Applause.] I have, by the invitation of Federal soldiers in the North, addressed them on Lincoln's birthday on two or three occasions, and I have recently been invited to address the sons of Federal soldiers on Memorial Day at Sunbury, Pa. These people know me better than does the reporter of the Washington Herald.

Mr. Speaker, the efforts of the reporter of the Washington Herald to put me in a false attitude before the country will fail to accomplish that purpose. [Applause.]

In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a year ago, when he was speaking about the war of the sixties and criticizing the South, I stated that it was a southern boy, Worth Bagley, of North Carolina, who spilled the first blood in the War with Spain, and I referred to the fact that Gen. Joe Wheeler, of Alabama, and Gen. Grant, the son of Gen. Grant, the old war general, and Fitzhugh Lee, and Gen. Shafter stood side by side beneath the Stars and Stripes in that War with Spain, and I said on the floor then "Thank God, the war is over." [Applause.]

When I was in Kentucky in the campaign last fall a scene I shall never forget greeted my eyes, one that impressed me deeply. It was in the district represented by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS]. I was to make a speech at 12 o'clock. The old Federal soldiers were having a reunion, and when I arrived they hastened to close their deliberations and give me the hall in which to speak. There were Confederate soldiers in that audience, and the reunion closed with Federal and Confederate soldiers shaking hands with each other, while tears were streaming down their faces and their voices mingled together as they sang "God be with you until we meet again." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have voted to grant pensions to Federal soldiers during the eight years that I have been here. I do not believe that the old soldier, Federal or Confederate, who is rich in this world's goods ought to be on the pension roll of the United States or the State. I would give the money that these wealthy soldiers receive to the poor and needy soldiers. [Applause.]

In the State of Alabama we pension Confederate soldiers, but no rich soldier can draw a pension. Those who need help are the ones the Government should help, whether it be State or Federal Government.

I have been renominated to Congress without opposition [applause], and I want to say to the old soldier who followed the flag under Grant that I will vote to grant him a pension whenever he becomes needy and presents the proof to this House. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have always had the greatest respect for newspaper men. They are clever gentlemen, as a rule. A majority of those that I know are my friends. Sometimes newspaper men criticize me, and I do not object to open, honest, and fair criticism; but when one of these men sitting here in the press gallery undertakes to misrepresent me, as did this reporter of the Washington Herald, I resent it. So far as I know, the other members of the press gallery are fair.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that this reporter will not mistreat and misrepresent anyone else in this House as he has me. I take the Washington Herald and read it every morning, and it would be well for the management to look into this matter and see that its reporters in this House are fair and just to Members of Congress.

The report in that paper this morning regarding me is false, and no Republican in this House believes that I have such feelings as that reporter has stated in the Washington Herald to-day. [Prolonged applause.]

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and upon that motion I ask unanimous consent that bills from the Committee on Claims be considered first, and that of the bills reported from the Committee on Claims the bill H. R. 23451 be considered first by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if there could be any opportunity for other bills on the Private Calendar to be considered?

Mr. POU. I do not think this bill will take up the entire day or anything like it.

Mr. TILSON. There are some bills on the Private Calendar that will take only a few minutes, and it seems to me we ought to have a chance at as early a date as possible to pass those bills.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the special order giving the Claims Committee this day does not include other private bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that this day was simply substituted for the other day, and whatever rights the chairman of the Committee on Claims had on the day that was taken away from him he has to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct. I have read the order.

The SPEAKER. And pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House the gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that bills reported from the Committee on Claims have preference, and that bill 23451 be first considered. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman what are the bills reported from the Claims Committee which the gentleman desires to bring up?

Mr. POU. There are two bills here providing for the payment largely for personal injuries. There are a few other items in them, but I will state to the gentleman both of those bills come in as a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills, some very meritorious bills, on the Private Calendar. There has been no opportunity to present them at this session of Congress, and I understand that the two bills referred to will occupy a large portion, if not all, of this legislative day, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS FOR PERSONAL INJURY AND DAMAGE TO PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar, and Mr. HAMLIN took the chair amid general applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the first bill——

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 23451.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from North Carolina that bills must be called in the order in which they appear on the calendar.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill H. R. 23451 be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that motion will not be in order at this time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Has not the gentleman first recognized the right to move that it be taken up out of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the rule is that these bills to-day from the Committee on Claims and other committees, other than War Claims, are to be considered in regular order, but it has been held by Chairmen that it was in order to move to take a bill up out of order. That has been the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois cite any authority on that proposition?

Mr. MANN. I can not cite any authority, because I do not know whether there is any authority, but I know that has been the ruling in the past and is occasionally done. That leaves to the Committee of the Whole the authority to determine the order in which they will consider the bills; without that order they come up in regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina state his motion again?

Mr. POU. My motion is that the committee proceed to consider the bill H. R. 23451 out of its regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the motion.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23451) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, there is just a word I desire to say about this bill. The bill carries an appropriation of $39,603 and comes as a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims. There may appear some inconsistencies in the amounts that we have allowed for these unfortunate persons who have been injured in the service of the Government. I want to say that I do not believe it will be found that in any case the committee has allowed too much. It may be that in numerous cases we have allowed too little. It will be found that a great majority of the items of this bill provide for the payment of various sums to persons injured in the service of the Government, who could not be allowed anything under the act of May 30, 1908. The committee has followed, as far as possible, the rule laid down in the law, to wit, that wherever a person was totally disabled or wherever he lost his life, the committee has allowed to his heirs or legal representatives approximately one year's pay. There are some cases in which the committee has departed from the rule. I simply say to the committee here that we have done the best we could. I do not believe that the items providing for compensation for death and personal injuries in these two bills—House bill 23451 and House bill 24121—will exceed $80,000. During the entire time that the Members of this House will serve here, I believe they will not vote any sum of money that will do more good or will be more beneficently bestowed than the sum these two bills carry for these unfortunate people.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman stated that these claims could not be paid under the act of Congress to which he referred providing for the payment of claims for personal injuries and damage to property. Why could not the claims be paid under that act; because they accrued prior to the passage of the act?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that the only reason why these claims could not be paid under the act to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. POU. In the personal-injury cases, yes. There are a number of these injuries that occurred just a week or so before this act went into effect.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand; but what I wanted to know was whether or no these were all cases that would come under the provisions of the act of Congress had the injuries been received or damage to property occurred before the passage of the act?

Mr. POU. I believe that is so in almost every case.

Mr. MONDELL. It is in practically every case?

Mr. POU. In practically all of them. There may have been one or two instances, perhaps half a dozen, in which persons in the service of the Government were injured, who would not have come within the provisions of the act of 1908.

Mr. MONDELL. Have all the cases contained in this bill been transmitted to Congress in the form of an estimate by the War Department?

Mr. POU. The report shows, I think, in every case the department has recommended a payment. I will say to the gentleman that I had a conference with the Secretary of War and he is very deeply interested in this matter, and is firmly convinced of the justice of these claims.

Mr. MONDELL. One more question, if I may. The Book of Estimates contains—I am not able to turn to it now—certain estimates submitted by the Secretary of War for personal-injury claims and for damage to private property. Does this bill and the other bill referred to contain all the cases in those estimates or only a part of them?

Mr. POU. Not all. There are a few bills still pending before the committee, but a very few.

Mr. MONDELL. How does it happen the committee does not take up those estimates as presented by the War Department and pass on all of them rather than to take up cases that might be presented by a Member and consider those and not consider other worthy claims presented by the department?

Mr. POU. Now, I will say to the gentleman this——

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). But with regard to which no Member of Congress was sufficiently interested to bring them to the attention of the committee.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman this: The committee has considered, I believe, every bill that has been recommended by the War Department. But the gentleman is well aware, I imagine, that there are bills pending before the committee which are not based upon estimates of the War Department; and the gentleman is, no doubt, well aware of the fact also that under the rules of the committee in force for some years past no action is taken upon a bill until the Member introducing it asks for it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says there are some cases in this bill in regard to which the War Department did not voluntarily present an estimate, but that the committee passed them because a Member had introduced the bill and asked them to consider it. But at the same time is it not true that there are a considerable number of cases where the War Department did make a specific estimate and did present the case to the attention of Congress, but owing to the fact that no Member of Congress has been sufficiently interested to introduce a special bill, the committee has paid no attention to them?

Mr. POU. No. I will say to the gentleman that in all those cases where the War Department voluntarily sent estimates to the committee, I undertook to look after the bills myself.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. POU. And I will say to the gentleman I introduced a bill carrying probably half a dozen items which were recommended by the War Department. Upon investigation I ascertained that there was no Member pushing those claims, and because of that fact I introduced this bill myself, and the committee considered the items, and they are a part of either one or the other of these bills.

Mr. MONDELL. My attention was called to a number of claims at the beginning of the session. The claimants are not constituents of mine, but it happened that the damage to property occurred in my State, and so my attention was called to the matter, not by the claimants themselves, but by others, and I looked the matter up, and I found their cases were included with a number of other cases that the War Department had submitted to Congress for its consideration. And I said to those who called these cases to my attention, "I assume the Committee on Claims will take up the recommendations of the War Department with regard to these and other cases and consider all of them." I did not feel it was incumbent upon me to introduce a bill or bills for those parties. Up to a few days ago no action had been taken with regard to those cases, although they are based upon the same recommendation that these other cases are.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the claims to which the gentleman referred were estimated for by the War Department under the head of "Military establishment."

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And the committee of the House refused to consider the claims, because they thought the Committee on Military Affairs had no jurisdiction over them.

Mr. MONDELL. That is, the Military Committee refused to do so.

Mr. HAY. When the bill went to the Senate, the Senate put those claims on the bill, and the matter is in conference. I do not think the Military Committee has any jurisdiction over these claims, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that some of the cases placed on the military bill in the Senate are the same as the cases included in these two bills reported by the Committee on Claims of the House?

Mr. HAY. There is a case of that sort of a man named Ingraham, I think.

Mr. MONDELL. Are there not a number of such cases?

Mr. HAY. I do not know how many of them. I know the case of Ingraham, which is a $5,000 claim and the largest claim in the bill, and the War Department has insisted we should take jurisdiction of these claims, because they said the Committee on Claims would not report them. My information is that the Committee on Claims would report them if anybody would take the trouble to go to them and show them they were just claims.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, this is my understanding of the situation: I am not criticizing the gentleman's committee for not taking up those claims and presenting them to the House. I presume they are correct in their view that they had no jurisdiction over them. But the Military Committee of the Senate apparently took a different view of it, and have added all the claims that have been submitted to them by the War Department to the military bill. Am I correct?

Mr. HAY. You are.

Mr. MONDELL. That same estimate came before the Committee on Claims. Members who were interested in some particular claims—30 or 40; I do not know how many there are—introduced bills, and thereupon the committee considered those claims that individual Members are interested in, but paid no attention to the other claims in the item submitted by the War Department and in which no Member had any particular interest.

It occurs to me, and I might suggest it to the Committee on Claims, that when the War Department or any department of the Government submits claims and suggests the payment of them, they all being based on the same examination and having had the same investigation, Members of Congress ought not to be compelled to introduce bills, 30 or 40 of them, covering those cases, but that they should be reported by the committee after consideration and investigation in gross, or at least as many of them as appeal to the committee on their merits, and not because somebody is pressing them.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not mean to say that the committees of this House would report any estimate without investigation, does he?

Mr. MONDELL. I said "after investigation." My suggestion is that when these estimates are made to Congress by the War Department, all resting on the same basis, it is the province of some committee to take them up and examine them, one and all, rather than to wait for some one to introduce a bill with regard to some one of the items and press it before the committee and have it reported when it has no more virtue than all the other items that are not acted upon.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the floor. I am simply speaking through somebody's courtesy.

Mr. POU. Would not the gentleman recognize the fact that there is nothing before the committee in case there is no bill introduced? This committee does not operate automatically.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand; but without presuming to tell the committee how it should operate, it occurs to me that it would be a very proper thing for the chairman or some member of the committee to introduce a bill covering all the cases presented by the departments of the Government for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. FRANCIS. That would be simply a matter of practice, but not according to the rule. The gentleman might look at our rules. I think we have pretty good rules.

Mr. POU. If I can have the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], I would like to say that, as I understand it, the Committee on Military Affairs refuses to consider these claims.

Mr. HAY. Yes; on the ground that they have no jurisdiction.

Mr. POU. There has been a controversy, I will say to the gentleman, with respect to jurisdiction. The Committee on Claims has included a few of these items in this bill. At this very moment the committee is proceeding to consider the remainder of those claims, and I will say to the gentleman that if nobody else introduces such a bill, I will do in that case what I did in respect to these unfortunate laborers who had nobody here pushing their interests—I will introduce a bill myself; and I promise the gentleman that the matter shall have full and fair consideration by the Committee on Claims.

The committee is still at work. All of these items have been referred to one subcommittee, and that subcommittee at this very time is working diligently, sifting this large number of claims. We will give everybody an opportunity to have their claims paid in cases like that which the gentleman cites, where an estimate has been made by one department of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands that all the cases I have reference to are cases where the claims would be paid automatically were it not for the fact that the damage or the injury incurred was prior to the passage of the act of Congress providing for such payment——

Mr. POU. I understand that perfectly——

Mr. MONDELL. And the department submitted a statement to the effect that they had been examined and that they come under the law. But under the circumstances they must be considered by some committee, because of the fact that they occurred prior to the passage of the act.

Now, there are some of these cases that no Member of Congress is particularly interested in, to the extent that he is disposed to give his time and attention to them as an individual case. There are two of those cases that were brought to my attention.

The people concerned do not live in my district. I did not feel called upon to introduce bills in their behalf. I assumed that inasmuch as their cases have been presented in due and proper form by the department all of their cases would be brought before the committee in the form of an omnibus bill, the committee reporting such cases as they felt should be reported after an examination.

It seems to me that is the proper and orderly way to do it, rather than have individual Members of Congress introduce separate bills, as they do in cases where they are particularly interested.

Mr. POU. I have attempted to explain to the gentleman the reason why part of these cases were included in this bill and part of them were not so included. It is partly on account of the question of jurisdiction, which has just been settled; and I have promised Members here—and I am sure the members of the committee are with me—that we will give these claims consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not understand how there can be a conflict of jurisdiction. The Committee on Military Affairs refused to accept jurisdiction. I am not certain but that they are right.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. My point of order is, Mr. Chairman, that this discussion has nothing to do with what is in this bill. It has to do with what is not in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to detain the House, but I do think that we ought to have this matter cleaned up and clearly understood.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say that I have no extra time to chase around after claims that are absolutely good and that ought to be paid on their merits, but in which my constituents have no immediate interest.

Mr. POU. I can not see how the matter can be cleared up in any other way than in the way I have explained. I assure the gentleman that all the claims that have not been included in this bill will be considered, and if necessary I will myself introduce a bill covering them.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it has taken a long time to get that assurance, I will say to the gentleman, but I am glad we have it now.

Mr. POU. The gentleman got it immediately when he suggested the situation.

Mr. MONDELL. I have had this matter under consideration for some months, touching the propriety of what I now suggest that some one connected with the committee ought to introduce an omnibus bill and take these cases up, and not compel Members in cases of this kind, where there is no question about the propriety of the payment being made, to introduce separate bills and bring the matters before the committee and go through all the tedious routine of reporting all these separate bills when the cases all rest upon the same class of evidence and are all presented to the committee by a department with the assurance that they have been investigated and would come within the law but for the fact that the injury or damage occurred prior to the passage of the act.

I do not want to criticize the committee, and yet it does seem to me that the committee is subject to some criticism for not having taken up all these cases. If any were considered all should have been considered.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will allow me, I merely want to suggest to him that he certainly does not expect the committee to do his work as well as their own. It occurs to me to say that if the gentleman has a claim against the Government on behalf of anybody in his district he ought not only to introduce a bill, but be glad to have the opportunity to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that while I realize that it may help a man politically to get a claim of a few dollars through for John Smith, most of us have enough to do without working unnecessarily on that sort of thing, and while no constituent of mine has so small a claim but what I will give it and always have given it proper consideration, yet in the particular cases to which I refer the claimants were not constituents of mine at all. The only reason why the matter was brought to my attention at all was because the damage occurred in the State which I represent. I assumed, as a matter of course, that when the War Department says the property of John Jones and Bill Smith and Tom Brown has been damaged in a certain way and should be paid for and reports these cases to Congress and recommends payment, the committee should take the cases up and pass on them rather than wait for some one to introduce a bill, I hope not for the purpose of getting a little credit at home, because, after all, what we want is not credit for attention to one of these small claims, but the payment of the claim. It is not credit for the payment of the claims that I am seeking, but that the claims shall be paid.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, just a word.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] yield?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia to ask a question of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not going to ask the gentleman from Wyoming any more questions. He seems to be wound up perpetually on this question. I do not desire to ask any question, but I do not wish to assent to the proposition that all the duty devolves upon members of the committee to prepare bills and to give entire attention to them; but I say that a Member ought to give some little attention to the business of his district.

Mr. MONDELL. My friend from Georgia evidently does not understand the question at issue. No claim of any constituent of mine has been neglected. But the War Department submitted to Congress, in the form of an estimate, certain claims they had examined and the payment of which they recommended. In my opinion the committee should have examined and passed upon all such cases instead of examining and passing upon only such as some Member was particularly interested in.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say in conclusion that I do not admit at all that the members of this committee are properly subject to the criticism made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The committee have been diligently at work doing their best to sift out this large number of claims. I assure the gentleman that the claims which have not already been considered will be considered hereafter.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, when we had similar legislation before this House in the Sixty-first Congress I opposed the omnibus claims bill as reported from the Committee on Claims, and as a result of the opposition that developed in this House the bill was amended in many respects, and what we considered small and insignificant sums carried in the bill were in about 20 cases increased to $5,000 each.

We all understand perfectly that this Committee on Claims is simply carrying out the law under what is known as the Government liability act. I had no hand or voice in the construction of that legislation, and in the Sixty-first Congress I fought, and will continue to fight to the limit as long as I am in Congress, such a bill as is now before us for consideration. This bill is unfair. It is unjust. It is a reflection upon the Government of the United States and it will be a discredit to any Congress that would pass it. In this bill, on page 4, we propose—

To pay $420 to Annie T. Jackson, widow of Frank W. Jackson, who lost his life in the employ of the United States Government on board the steam tug Cynthia.

Is there a man in this House who believes in plain, simple, ordinary justice, who thinks he is rendering his district or country a service or doing himself credit, who will place that value upon a human life? Why, in this bill we propose to pay a church $448.05 on account of damage to it growing out of target practice. And here is a widow, perhaps the mother of children, whose husband lost his life through no fault of his own, in the discharge of his duty as a Government employee, and we propose to compensate her for the loss of her only support by voting to her $420. I would consider myself dishonored to vote such a sum of money to a widow.

Mr. POU. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. POU. I will state to the gentleman that his criticism should properly be directed at a bill passed by his own party.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not care who is responsible. I repudiate it and denounce it here and now. Justice is above politics, and fair play should appeal to the manhood of every Member of this House, regardless of his political affiliations.

On page 7 it is proposed—

To pay $500 to Amanda Honert for loss of wearing apparel and other personal property by fire at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe school, at Caddo Springs, Okla.

Why, we pay an American citizen in this bill $135 for the loss of a horse, on account of an accident growing out of target practice; and we pay the widow of a Government employee $420 for the loss of a husband and father.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Upon what facts does the gentleman base his charge against the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. In 10 minutes I can not go into full details. In the Sixty-first Congress I read the report that accompanies the omnibus claims bill, and it made my heart weary and sick at the sad stories told there in connection with numbers of these cases.

Mr. McKENZIE. Why does not the gentleman fix the earning capacity——

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, it is not a question of earning capacity in settling the claim for a loss—the claim for the death of a Government employee who leaves a widow behind him.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Upon what basis would the gentleman fix the compensation?

Mr. AUSTIN. I would do justice like any 12 honest American jurors do when they go out of the court room to consider a similar case.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, if the gentleman was on the jury, on what basis would he fix the compensation?

Mr. AUSTIN. If the gentleman from Georgia and I were on a Georgia jury and brought in $420 for the loss of a husband and a father, the citizens of his district and my district would make it so hot for us that we would have to leave.

Mr. BARTLETT. But that does not answer my question. Upon what sort of a basis would the gentleman make his calculation?

Mr. AUSTIN. I would put in the bill at least $5,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. But I am trying to get the gentleman's basis that he would make the estimate on.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would the gentleman from Georgia make one basis for a laboring man and a different basis for a lawyer?

Mr. BARTLETT. No. But all you have got to do in any case for the recovery for a death is to find out what a man's life is worth, what is his earning capacity.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the gentleman think that $420 is a sufficient compensation for the loss of a human life?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then vote against this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. But this is made up in accordance with the law, to pay only his wages——

Mr. AUSTIN. Then shame and disgrace on such a law.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman voted for it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I did not, and I repudiate it. I will not vote to settle any of these bills, notwithstanding any law for any such sum, for it is an outrage and an injustice.

Mr. CANTRILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. CANTRILL. Let me make a suggestion. Will the gentleman state to the House some facts to bear out his extravagant charges against the committee, that they have acted with injustice and unfairness?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not making any charges against the committee.

Mr. CANTRILL. Well, will the gentleman state some facts before he makes these charges or upon which he makes the charges, and perhaps the committee would be willing to overlook the serious criticism that he has made against members of the committee. Until the gentleman can state some salient facts, it seems to me that it is unfair and unjust to the membership of this committee to charge them with injustice and unfairness.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the gentleman through with his question or his speech, whatever he calls it?

Mr. FRANCIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will.

Mr. FRANCIS. These amounts are allowed by virtue of the statute, are they not?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have referred to that.

Mr. FRANCIS. The gentleman knew that that was a basis for amounts allowed in the last Congress, and the gentleman has introduced no bill to change the law. Why did not the gentleman introduce a bill to change that law?

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. FRANCIS. I am.

Mr. AUSTIN. What does the gentleman believe is a fair sum for the loss of a human life?

Mr. FRANCIS. I am talking about the present law as it is.

Mr. AUSTIN. But I want the gentleman's opinion on it. The gentleman declines to answer my question. Now, Mr. Chairman, take page 3 of this bill:

To pay $1,500 to Charles T. Hanson for the loss of his right foot while in the employ of the War Department in the quartermaster's department at Boston, Mass.

Now, I have been interrupted a number of times by Members. Suppose one of these gentlemen who interrupted me lost his right foot through no fault of his while in the Government service, would he be willing to accept $1,500 in payment? Would he believe that Congress had done the right and fair thing in the adjustment along such lines?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Is not $1,500 just $1,500 better than nothing?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, it is just as easy, and certainly more creditable to the gentleman from New York, to vote $5,000 as it is $1,500 in a case of this kind.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I know it is easy to be liberal with other people's money. It is easy to direct the Treasurer of the United States to pay $5,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the gentleman from New York tremble for fear of bankrupting the Treasury in order to increase the amount to be allowed a widow from $420 to $5,000?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Let me answer the gentleman's question. If Congress were composed of gentlemen as big hearted and as soft-hearted and as generous with other people's money as is the gentleman from Tennessee, in two years the Treasury would be wrecked and in five years there would not be a shred left of the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I will be just as long as I am here. I am as liberal with my own money as I am with that of the National Treasury.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then go and pay the claim. Make a donation to this poor widow [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from New York will vote four or five million dollars for a battleship, and yet he trembles for the safety of the National Treasury when it comes to increasing an appropriation from $1,500 to $5,000 for the loss of an American citizen who leaves a widow and children.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I have heard the gentleman make that speech three or four times. He examines a bill, finds something of this kind, and then he swells out and talks to the people to make them believe that he is a generous man; and that may go with his constituents down in Tennessee, but when he talks about being just, this is $1,500 better than justice—it is a gift of the Government. The Government was not required to pay it. If there was a valid claim, the party would have a right to go before the Court of Claims and get it there. The truth is, this is a donation. I used to settle cases in the New York Central Railroad many years ago. When I knew I could not get anything I would go to the chief counsel and he would say: "Well, DRISCOLL, what do you want in this case as a donation?"

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee had yielded to me, and that I have the floor.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I did not know that the gentleman from Tennessee had yielded to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. AUSTIN. I did yield. A little later I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like, if we may get right down to earth and not so far in the air, to ask the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee if heretofore they have not amended these provisions for personal injuries entirely out of the bill, and the trouble has been to get anything whatever from the United States for these poor claimants? And did not the last Congress, when a similar claim was introduced here, pare it down to merely one year's wages? And did not the gentlemen argue at that time that they were very fortunate to get that, because most of these cases were entirely disallowed?

Mr. AUSTIN. Is that a question the gentleman is asking me or a speech the gentleman intends to make?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I will make my speech later in answer to the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. This occurred in the last Congress. The Committee on Claims, in line with the Government liability act, brought in a bill almost identical with this bill. We made a fight on the floor. We had it amended and the amounts increased. It was sent to the Senate and the Senate cut out the amendment increasing these items and sent it back to the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives could not act upon it without unanimous consent, and in the closing hours, 3 o'clock in the morning, the chairman of the Committee on Claims asked unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table and have it acted upon, and I objected. The bill failed to pass the Congress, and many of the very items in that bill are carried in this bill and other omnibus bills now on the calendar. That is the history of it. And I am sure the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who was a member of the Committee on Claims, will verify the statement I have just made in reference to the matter.

Mr. TILSON. I thought the gentleman was making a mistake at that time, and I think so yet. They got nothing as it was.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; but they have a chance now for this House to right that attempted wrong.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I could not say no to the gentleman from the Blue Grass State of Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman again exercise the prerogative of preventing the bill becoming a law and these people receiving something if they are not given what the gentleman thinks they ought to get?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will cross that bridge when I get to it, but in the meantime I will appeal to the fair sense of justice that is in the breast of every son of Kentucky to right this matter now; so I am appealing to the gentleman [Mr. SHERLEY] now that we pass a bill through the Congress that will not be a reflection upon our sense of justice and fairness.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not asking it yet; I am still working on you. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. AUSTIN. My friend from Illinois and myself are such great admirers of the minority leader that I must yield to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman was on a jury and the plaintiff had sued for $500 only, would the gentleman render a verdict to pay him more than the amount for which he sued?

Mr. AUSTIN. Do you think these people would not be glad to accept $5,000 instead of $420, and does not the gentleman know the reason that these claims that they have filed are in these small sums is because they know that the amount is fixed under the Government liability act at one year's wages?

Mr. FOWLER. I am in accord with the gentleman on this matter, but I want to ask the gentleman a plain question, if the gentleman would render a verdict larger than the amount claimed?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly I would, if the amount to which I thought the man was justly entitled was put at too low a figure.

Mr. BARTLETT. The court would not let you do that.

Mr. FOWLER. You could not do that; the verdict would be set aside. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to talk that way.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am more of a statesman than a lawyer, my friend. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the gentleman, in my opinion, is both a statesman and a lawyer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, after that compliment the gentleman can interrupt me the balance of the afternoon.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, if the gentleman were on the Committee on Claims and a bill was filed for a certain amount, would the gentleman go to the trouble of raising the amount stated in the bill for the relief of the claimant?

Mr. AUSTIN. What I want to do is to either recommit this bill to the Committee on Claims and let them bring in an increased amount or amend the bill on the floor of this House.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose it will be open for amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now let me call attention to a few more items in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has an hour; will he submit to an interruption?

Mr. AUSTIN. If I have been recognized in my own right; I have been very generous with my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman certainly, if he entertains the views he does about this Government compensation for injured employees, is not going to vote for this employees' compensation bill at the rates they fixed in it, I hope.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not had an opportunity to examine that bill, and never saw this bill until a few moments ago.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely wanted to suggest how the gentleman stood upon that proposition.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not doubt from the gentleman's views that the gentleman will never vote for that bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. And the gentleman and I know that juries all over the country are bringing in verdicts daily in the courthouses against private enterprises, manufacturing plants, and railroads, and does the gentleman know a single instance where a jury has fixed an insignificant sum of money for the loss of a limb or the loss of life?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to answer that question?

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman asked me the question, but I have no objection whatever to the gentleman from Kentucky answering it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I just suggest to the gentleman that I know of cases in which the jury have brought in a verdict not awarding anything.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; and that was where the proof was against the plaintiff.

Mr. SHERLEY. And now, if the gentleman will tell us something about facts in these cases instead of dealing with a lot of rhetoric, then possibly we can agree with him.

Mr. AUSTIN. Just take the facts contained in the committee's report.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is evident the gentleman has not had time to read them.

Mr. AUSTIN. I can not read them on the floor of this House with the constant interruptions which are taking my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman said to this committee that he had not seen the bill until half an hour ago, and yet he undertakes to instruct the House concerning it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will tell you what it is if you will keep quiet.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will if you will state the facts. I have heard nothing so far that has led me to think that I will hear them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield so I can answer him?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am generous and kind-hearted and always like to yield to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], but he asks me for a part of my time to answer my speech.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman asked me a question. The gentleman has not made any speech yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, when one of the critics of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] told me the other day that he was one of the most unappreciative Members of this House I denied it for him, and now the gentleman makes a confession of it on the floor of this House.

On page 3 we pay $1,500 to the heirs of Charles E. Stump, who lost his life from injuries received while in the discharge of his duties on the Isthmus of Panama. That is another case.

On page 4 we pay $438 to E. J. Older for injuries received to his left leg in the discharge of his duty in the improvement of the Mississippi River under the War Department. Now, there is an omnibus claims bill here, not under consideration, but similar to this, that I had a chance to look into yesterday. It is the bill H. R. 24121. They actually carry in that bill $325 on page 4 to pay Patrick Feeny, the dependent father of James J. Feeny, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who died as a result of injuries received in the discharge of his duties at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, May 24, 1910.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him right there? I will say to the gentleman that I had intended to introduce an amendment myself increasing that amount. He was a water boy, and he has died since the introduction of this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. So the report shows, and his father, I believe, made an affidavit that he had paid out for medicines and doctors' bills, and so forth, an amount of more than $300.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] said something of my harsh criticism of the Committee on Claims. I want to arouse in this House on both sides a sentiment against the provisions of this existing Government liability law, which I think is unjust and unfair. And I ask this House to amend this bill.

It is no party question. I say it will be a credit to every man in this committee to reread this bill and change it and amend it. There is not a man here that, if assailed at home on this record, and it was understood clearly and fully by the voters of his district, I care not how strong and useful and influential he may be—there is not a man in the American Congress could fight that out as an issue before his people and win. You can not do it, gentlemen. The great majority of the people believe in justice. A great majority of the American people have kindly feelings and sympathies. It would not do to go into your district and say that you gave the widow of a laboring man $420. It would not do; it would not be fair; it would not be just; it would not be equal and exact justice to all men. How great is our country and how boundless its resources and its wealth! It is not a little capitalized corporation. It is a world power. Our great progress and growth and development are the marvel and admiration of all mankind. Have you any man who is a taxpayer in your district that would object if you voted to increase this allowance to the widow? The gentleman has read me a lecture about economy in the great, prosperous city of Utica——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Not on your life—not in "pent-up Utica." I said Syracuse.

Mr. AUSTIN. Are there any of his constituents that would complain of him if he voted to increase an allowance for a widow with a whole lot of children?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Certainly not.

Mr. AUSTIN. As to that man who handled a shovel and a pick in building that great waterway that is going to be a monument to the greatness and grandeur of the Republic, his life was as dear to that wife and mother as the husband who is a skilled mechanic or a high-priced Government official in one of the departments. We owe it to ourselves and to the constituency that we represent to write justice on every page of this bill. These people are practically poor working people. When a workingman goes into a court and has 12 of his peers to administer justice under the laws, why can he not look with confident hope to the American Congress, made up of 400 men chosen from 90,000,000 people who believe in justice, to do right by the widow and right by the children. Is there not some place in the hearts of my colleagues for the suffering and for the tears of the widow and the children? God save the Republic if we have got to be cruel and unkind and unjust to these.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman say that he has always gotten a verdict before a jury for a plaintiff when he was the plaintiff's attorney?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know. I am appealing to you as a Member of this American Congress to forget to be stingy and miserly, and, for God's sake, stand for justice.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That kind of a speech ought to get a big verdict in any case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is an omnibus claims bill, which was introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, to carry out various recommendations which had been made or agreed to by the committee—made by subcommittees, I think, in the first instance—and carries a variety of claims.

It carries a lot of personal-injury claims, a lot of claims growing out of damages by gunfire and Army maneuvers, and a lot of claims of other classes. It never has been the practice in this House, at least not for many years, during the lifetime, I think, of any Member of Congress, and probably since long before that, to bring in omnibus log-rolling private-claim bills. I do not think it ought to become the practice of Congress.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will allow me, I would prefer to go ahead for a few minutes.

Mr. POU. I wanted to explain.

Mr. MANN. Let me explain first, and I do not think the gentleman will object. I do not believe that there is any objection to putting in a number of claims of the same class in the one bill as a matter of timesaving. I can see no reason why the Committee on claims should not, after it has agreed upon claims relating to personal injuries, direct the chairman to introduce a bill covering the claims of that class which the committee had agreed upon; nor why the committee should not have introduced an omnibus bill covering the class of claims covered by Army maneuvers, or target practice, or any other single class of claims, such as those arising out of damages caused by Government vessels. We have eliminated by general legislation many claims which used to come before the House. We have provided by different laws that cases arising out of damages by vessels, or admiralty cases, involving less than $500, may be adjusted by the Department of Commerce and Labor as to lighthouse vessels, and by the War Department and the Navy Department in relation to war and Navy vessels.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has called attention to several claims in this bill for personal injuries causing death. The Committee on Claims of the House, as now constituted, composes a membership which in the main has not been on that committee for many years, and I hope they will not consider that I am criticizing the committee members or the action of the committee itself in making a few suggestions, such as I have already made and such as I propose to make now.

Up to the last Congress it has been by common consent the policy of Congress not to pay for damages caused by personal injuries. You can trace the claims which have been allowed by Congress for generations past, and you will find very few claims which have been authorized to be paid by Congress growing out of torts of any kind, especially out of personal injuries.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did not Congress authorize the payment of $300,000 on account of the collapse of Ford's Theater?

Mr. MANN. It did. I was just going to refer to that. That is an exceptional case. Congress has occasionally authorized the payment of these claims. That was a very exceptional case. Congress authorized the payment. But Congress has constantly and consistently refused to pay claims of that kind growing out of personal injuries.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman if Congress did not make another exception and pay a man from Kansas $10,000? I will give the gentleman the man's name if he desires it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there have been a few cases, very few, that have slipped through in some way; but it has been the purpose and the policy of the Government not to pay such claims. Claims were not allowed. When I first came down here I had a case that would have torn the heart out of almost any man, and would have left no insides whatever in the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. I introduced a bill on the subject and made inquiry and learned that the bill did not have as much chance as a snowflake in the lower regions. The case still stands. It is years old, though not so old as one of the claims which has been reported by the Committee on Claims, because they have reported one claim that is 30 or 40 years old, I believe; a personal injury case, but perhaps not included in this particular bill.

Now, that was the policy of Congress. It was not quite fair for Congress to take that position. I have always believed, and believe now, that Congress by law, by general legislation, not as a method of general favoritism, but applicable to all alike, ought to make some provision for those who are injured in the Government service. We did finally pass the Government compensation act, which provided for a limited liability in a limited class of cases, not to exceed a year's pay in hazardous occupations, naming the occupations.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Did not the last Committee on Claims recommend some such policy as to that in relation to claims for personal injuries or deaths that might have occurred?

Mr. MANN. I will reach that in a moment. That general law we have recently extended, either by legislation already enacted or legislation agreed to, which is in conference, to cover the Forestry Service, to cover the Bureau of Mines and Mining, and some other branches of the Government. I introduced a bill in the House, and it was passed by the last House on the Panama Canal bill, and as a separate measure I introduced it in this House, authorizing the President to make rules and regulations for the payment of damages caused by personal injuries in connection with the work on the Canal Zone in the construction of the Panama Canal, because I believe that where the Government was undertaking work as a private individual or contractor it ought to assume the same liability. That has not yet become a law, and is not included in the present Panama Canal bill, but I hope it will be when that bill becomes a law.

Now, after we passed the first act, which was in 1908, providing for limited liability for certain hazardous employments under the Government, gentlemen on all sides in the House commenced to say, "Why, we have a case which occurred just before the law was passed. Now, you have provided a law under which from a certain date if a man is injured a man may receive this limited amount of damages, not to exceed a year's pay; but if he was injured 10 days before, he does not come within the provisions of the law, and we think it is fair to make the law apply to his case."

The Committee on Claims in the last House first brought in a number of private special bills in individual cases, and after they had given consideration to the subject they determined that cases of recent date, which would have been covered by the general law if they had occurred since the passage of the general law, would be taken care of by the Committee on Claims by a special bill.

Then they came in with an omnibus bill, containing a large number of these claims, and that bill came up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has a heart bigger than the Treasury of the United States, because if the Treasury were as large as the gentleman's heart it would not make any difference how much money you paid out of it, there would always be plenty left. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] made his speech on the subject, and in a moment of temporary aberration of mind the committee agreed to an amendment increasing one item from what the year's pay was to $5,000, and in a period of some disorder in the Committee of the Whole the Chairman put, and there was agreed to, a request for unanimous consent to increase all of those items to $5,000. I am usually fairly observing of what takes place in the House, but that got by me. The unanimous-consent agreement was made before I had time to object.

Mr. BUTLER. It was done pretty quickly, then.

Mr. MANN. A gentleman on the floor at that time had another bill coming up for a private claim for a personal injury, and he asked to have it inserted in the omnibus bill. I said to him, "You had better let it stay by itself, because your bill may become a law, while this omnibus bill will never become a law."

That omnibus bill went to the Senate as this bill will go. Those increases were all stricken out in the Senate, and a number of items were added in the Senate which, coming back to the House, required the reference of the bill to the Committee on Claims and its reconsideration in Committee of the Whole unless it was sent to conference by unanimous consent. My distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] stood here and objected to sending it to conference by unanimous consent, because he wanted those people to have $5,000 each, whereas in the bill they were only given from $1,200 to $1,500 each. It is true they have never yet gotten anything. It is true that most of them probably never will get anything; but my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] compliments himself because he has secured justice for those people in not allowing them to have anything. He took the position that unless he could give each one of them $5,000 they should have nothing, and he secured his contention. They have got nothing and they probably never will get anything. Many of them have not been considered by the Committee on Claims at this session of Congress. Some of the claims will probably never be brought before Congress again.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill is not consistent. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has called attention to a case where $420 is allowed to Annie T. Jackson, widow of Frank W. Jackson, who lost his life on board the steam tug Cynthia.

If this man had lost his life while working for a private corporation, his widow would have secured nothing. There is no pretense that there was any negligence on the part of the Government. The man lost his life by a boiler explosion. His pay was $420 a year. There was no negligence on his part and no negligence on the part of the Government. His widow could not have secured a dollar, even if she had been permitted to bring a suit for personal injuries in the Court of Claims, because a suit of that sort must rest upon the negligence of the defendant.

The committee have reported in that case in favor of paying the widow one year's pay of the man. Of course, the amount is small; but we are met with the question, when we undertake to pay for these personal injuries, whether we will do it on a general rule applicable to all alike or whether we will do it through the impatient speech of some Member on the floor of the House.

Mr. KENDALL. Does the gentleman think any flat provision can be made in cases of that character? If the Government is to acknowledge its liability and make compensation to the estates of the deceased, ought not the age of the man, his earning capacity, his expectancy of life to be taken into account, as would be done by a jury in a civil case?

Mr. MANN. It is impossible to do that by bills passed here. The rule of the committee in the last Congress was that they would allow in these cases one year's pay; but, mind you, they have not limited this rule to those who might have secured compensation under the compensation act, because that is limited to hazardous occupations. This bill is replete with cases which would not have been covered by the general law, even if they had occurred since the general law was passed. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] having called attention to one case where the committee allow $420 because that was the man's salary for one year, I shall call attention to a case where the committee allow $5,000 for the death of a husband, although his salary was not to exceed $900 a year.

Mr. KENDALL. Is that the Armour case?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I was going to ask you about the inequalities in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Absolutely.

Mr. KENDALL. Has the committee, in recommending the amounts that should be paid in these individual cases, been restrained by any previous statute?

Mr. MANN. It has not. Of course, we have the power to pay a million dollars to one of these people if we choose to exercise the power.

Mr. KENDALL. I have been interested in the case of Charles E. Stump, who lost his life in the Panama Railway service.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and to whom they allow one year's pay.

Mr. KENDALL. He was a conductor?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. A rather high-grade employee.

Mr. MANN. That is a hazardous occupation.

Mr. KENDALL. He was engaged in a hazardous occupation.

Mr. MANN. That is covered by the general compensation act, but this injury occurred before that act was passed.

Mr. KENDALL. His heirs could not have secured anything under that act?

Mr. MANN. No; but the committee allow to his heirs what they would have secured if he had been killed after the compensation act went into force.

Mr. KENDALL. If he had been killed in 1910?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. From such knowledge as I have of the working of the Claims Committee, I think they have devoted a great deal of time to the investigation of individual claims. Does not the gentleman think consideration should be given to individual claims in this way—as to the number of children which were left by a man who was killed, as to the condition of the widow, whether she is able to earn a livelihood for herself and children, and all the other circumstances that would go with such a case?

Mr. MANN. I do not think those things should be given consideration, because when you come to legislate for special cases, personal injuries, it means that you depend upon the activity of the claimant, perhaps the beauty of the claimant, perhaps the activity of the Member of the House, and perhaps his susceptibility to beauty. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEEKS. My judgment is that the committee pays no attention to the activity of the Member of the House, but tries to pass on the merits of the case.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been here long enough to know that the Committee on Claims does not take up all claims, as I shall show in a few moments, although they are on the same plane.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Ought not the committee in endeavoring to arrive at a just compensation to take into account the earning capacity of the deceased and his expectancy of life?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to say that I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Masachusetts.

Mr. MANN. I say frankly to the House that I discussed this matter with some of the members of the Committee on Claims in the last Congress when the payment of the personal-injury claims first commenced. I have been more or less active in connection with claims in the House for a number of years. I said to the members of that committee that if they desired to examine and report in favor of personal-injury claims which would have been covered by the general law, or which perhaps were not in a hazardous occupation, but where the work itself happened to be hazardous, so that they ought to be covered by the general law, and would limit the compensation to the amount to be paid under the general law, I would endeavor to aid them in passing the bills in the House; but unless they adopted that rule I would endeavor to prevent these bills becoming a law.

I do not believe that a body like the House of Representatives or any other legislative body is fairly competent to determine upon the amount to be paid in special and individual cases. I am not willing to leave it to the chairman of some subcommittee, however honest, intelligent, and faithful he may be, and that is the practice followed. The Committee on Claims does not pass upon the merits of each claim by any means. We all know that it is referred to a subcommittee, and usually one member as a subcommittee, who examines the claim and does faithful service. The Committee on Claims has been doing good work; I have no complaint to make of that or of the committee. It is the system that I am talking about.

Now, I do not believe that the committee ought to pay $5,000 to one widow for the loss of her husband's life; $1,500 to the heirs of another one for the loss of the life of the man; $1,248 for the loss of the life of another man payable to his widow; and $420 payable to the widow for the loss of the life of her husband in another case, because the committee can not draw the distinction; and I know it can not, and has not drawn the distinction.

The $5,000 case is a particularly hard case, it may seem. We pay now by general law to the widow of the life-savers in the Life-Saving Service two years' pay. I think that law ought to be extended to the Lighthouse Service, but the life-saver who gets out in the boat on a dark and stormy night and loses his life, his widow gets two years' pay. Now, why should we pay $5,000 to a lighthouse keeper's widow when he loses his life? There is no reason for making the distinction.

Mr. AUSTIN. What did we pay the widows of the postal clerks who lost their lives on the Titanic?

Mr. MANN. Two thousand dollars apiece. We pay in the Railway Mail Service $2,000. A few years ago it was $1,000, and it was on my motion in the House that it was increased.

Mr. AUSTIN. We voted the widows of the men who lost their lives on the steamship Titanic $2,000 by unanimous vote.

Mr. MANN. It was put in by unanimous consent; there was no objection to it.

Mr. KENDALL. If the gentleman will allow me, it seems from the disparity of the sums allowed here that in these cases the committee has considered some special instances.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, that is because they came from different subcommittees.

Mr. LEVY. The gentleman states that the widows of lighthouse keepers get $2,000. I want to say that the subcommittee that examined these matters reported it to the whole Claims Committee and they had something to say on it and changed it in some particulars.

Mr. MANN. I said that the life-savers receive two years' pay; not the lighthouse keepers.

Mr. KENDALL. Is it not a fact, I ask the gentleman from Illinois, that some compensation ought to be made in cases of this character, irrespective of the age of the deceased or the amount of money he was able to earn in his lifetime?

Mr. MANN. It is my view that we ought to follow the provisions of the general compensation act as long as that act is what it is, to allow one year's pay regardless of age.

Mr. KENDALL. And the earning capacity?

Mr. MANN. That takes into account the earning capacity; that is what it is based upon.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two claims in this bill to which I shall call attention for a moment. One is on page 4, to pay $5,000 to C. H. Ingraham for damages to his property at Fort Baldwin, Me., by heavy gun firing.

The other is:

To pay $448.05 to the Methodist Episcopal Church at Hull, Mass., for damage to its church building and parsonage by heavy gun firing at Fort Revere, Mass.

I think both of these claims ought to be paid. That matter came up in the House some years ago, after some maneuvers had been held in Kentucky, and there had been a lot of small damages accrued by breaking down crops, tearing down fences, and in other ways, and we inserted on the floor of the House, either on a claims bill or on the Army appropriation bill, the payment to cover those cases. I think we have recently provided by general law for the allowance of claims of that sort. Now here are two claims put in this bill.

They are based upon a report from the War Department. The report of the War Department is found on page 45 of the report and again on page 94 of the report. The War Department made an estimate as follows:

For settlement of claims for damages to and loss of private property belonging to citizens of the United States, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands that have arisen previous to August 1, 1910 (act of May 30, 1908, vol. 35, p. 280, sec. 1), $22,802.40.

NOTE.—The stated amount of $22,802.40 is asked for in order to render practicable the settlement of 183 claims now on file in this office and presented previous to August 1, 1910.

These claims embrace damages due to heavy-gun firing, and during target practice, damages to fences and growing crops and to trees by troops while engaged in maneuvers, etc. Of the amount now estimated for, more than one-half is attributable to heavy-gun firing at Forts Hamilton, N. Y.; Heath, Mass.; Levett, Me.; Banks, Mass.; Wadsworth, N. Y.; Revere, Mass.; Moultrie, S. C.; Winthrop, Mass.; and Miley, Cal. Estimates of appropriation covering 153 of these claims and aggregating $19,053.14 were submitted to Congress at its last session, as shown by House Documents Nos. 177, 519, 689, and 897, Sixty-first Congress, second session, but they failed to receive favorable consideration.

Then there is another estimate:

For payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, and operations of the Army that may accrue from time to time, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the Auditor for the War Department, upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War, where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department, and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages (submitted), $5,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. How does the department reach a conclusion as to the value of the property?

Mr. MANN. The department in all of these cases appointed a board.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why did not they give the losers of this property one year's rent like it is proposed to give these other people one year's salary?

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that there are now 221 of these cases carrying $32,000, and that the committee have just been able to get the complete list of them within the last week.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman says the committee has not been able to get a complete list until within the last week I will say that some of these claims were submitted to Congress more than a year ago and anyone could get a complete list any day by inquiry.

I understand the claim of the Committee on Claims is—I am not criticizing the committee, yet I think that where claims come in and are all included in a class, all of equal merit, all found in the same way to be good claims, that that committee, instead of paying a claim which some Member of Congress is exceedingly active about and it has its attention called to two claims, ought to have reported in a bill covering all the claims. Does anyone deny that? Here are 2 claims out of more than 200, all standing upon the same footing. It is preposterous to suppose that a man who has been damaged in his crops to the extent of $5 or $500 shall be required first to make proof of his claim to the War Department and have his claim allowed by the War Department and then be required to chase up a Member of Congress, who in turn shall chase up and hang upon the heels of the Committee on Claims in order to have his claim allowed. Now, I am not saying this for the purpose of criticizing the Committee on Claims. I hope the gentlemen now on that committee will not misunderstand me about that. I am only suggesting a revision of the practice which has been followed for years in this class of cases.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. On the same principle the gentleman would not have the Invalid Pensions Committee pass at this session on every bill for the old soldier who was in need of assistance?

Mr. MANN. On the same principle that I have enunciated we passed yesterday a conference report for a general increase of pensions, and not one specially applicable to each case. We provided for a general increase of pensions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. One other question.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. To my colleague.

Mr. FOWLER. Are not there thousands of private pension bills now pending before the Committee on Invalid Pensions which have not been acted upon and can not be acted upon because of the great amount of work that would be required in order to get at the bottom of them and determine the merits of each?

Mr. MANN. Well, I had not supposed that was the case. I supposed the Committee on Invalid Pensions was equipped with sufficient force to examine all the claims that were presented to it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to inquire—while the gentleman has insisted all the time he is not criticizing the work of the Committee on Claims, still it seems to me he has criticized every step the committee has taken—why the gentleman has not at some time here introduced some general bill that would cover this class of cases to which he has referred, the same as a general pension bill? Why has not the gentleman introduced such a bill?

Mr. MANN. I say we have enacted legislation for the purpose of covering these cases—not past cases, but future cases.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not this class——

Mr. MANN. I was not aware of that; I suppose it will cover them in the future.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not the class covered by this bill.

Mr. MANN. Personal-injury cases in the future? We passed a law covering those, but there is no law we can pass that will cover all the cases that might appeal to my friend from Iowa that I know of.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Personal-injury cases arising in the future will be covered by the law on the statute books.

Mr. MANN. It would in most cases, although we have one case in this bill that has occurred since this law went into effect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not those that are within the provisions of that bill.

Mr. MANN. That was within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It occurred prior to the enactment of the law.

Mr. MANN. No; it occurred since.

Mr. GARNER. Is this a good bill?

Mr. MANN. I apprehend what will happen to this bill will be that my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] will after a while move to increase an amount over the year's compensation, which will either be defeated or carried. If it is defeated, he will make a point of no quorum, and if it carries, I probably will.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a nice way to do justice.

Mr. POU. I wish to say just a word in explanation of certain things about which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has spoken.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield just for a question of a general nature?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that most likely a certain amendment would be offered to the bill by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], and if he failed to carry his amendment he would make the point of no quorum, but if he succeeded in carrying the amendment in the Committee of the Whole the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would make a point of no quorum, does the gentleman think there will be much business this afternoon?

Mr. POU. So far as I can, I am going to exercise our best efforts to put this bill through, because I think it is a just one.

Mr. GARNER. It is evident to the gentleman that there is not a quorum here or will not be a quorum here at the time he will ask for the passage of the bill. My inquiry is if you are going to insist that a quorum be brought in on Saturday afternoon? The baseball game has not yet started. It is now 20 minutes after 2 o'clock.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to suggest that if the point of no quorum is going to be made, it be made before the baseball game begins.

Mr. POU. I hope no gentleman will object. Both sides are interested in this bill. I want to state the rule the committee followed in including items in this bill. There is no item included where there was any objection to it by any Member.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] that if he will agree to $5,000 for every loss of life I will not raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will raise it then.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the committee how it was that these personal-injury claims were called to the attention of the Committee on Claims. It was first upon the initiative of the Secretary of War. He sent for me, and I had a consultation with him. He presented quite a number of claims of persons who were injured in the digging of the Panama Canal, some of them injured two or three weeks before this act of 1908 went into effect. The Secretary was most emphatic in his opinion that those claims ought to be paid. The committee had not even considered the matter up to that time. In pursuance of my conference with him I called the attention of the committee to these claims. We can not pay claims for persons engaged in the digging of the Panama Canal and refuse to pay claims to persons injured in the Government service somewhere else. And so it was we tried to treat everybody as fairly as we could under all the difficulties that surrounded us. There is nobody who knows better than the lawyers on this committee that it was almost impossible to follow any ironclad rule in the payment of these claims.

Let me give an illustration. There is a man whose claim is included in this bill, or in the second bill, who was receiving $1.04 a day in a shell factory. A shell exploded without any negligence on his part whatever. The man was some distance away, attending to his duties. What happened to him? Both eyes were put out, his spine injured, and the man's hearing in both ears is almost gone. Moreover, he is badly disfigured. Does anybody think that man, if you pay him anything at all, ought to receive $1.04 a day for 365 days?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is all he would be entitled to under the——

Mr. POU. Of course, that is all he would be entitled to if we had not departed from the rule set forth in the act of May 30, 1908. So we decided to pay this man $5,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. You ought to pay it to him.

Mr. POU. We felt that, sitting for the remainder of his days in darkness, maimed for life, helpless, and poor, the committee ought not to be forced to follow the rule laid down in this act and pay this man only $365. Why, his doctors' bills amounted to more than that. And I am here to-day to take the position that the Government ought to pay every one of these men that were injured without any fault on his part. [Applause.] We are passing personal liability acts; we are passing all sorts of acts making the public-service corporations in this country liable in case of injury; and I stand with President Roosevelt when he took the position that everybody who was injured, even if it was an accident only, ought to be allowed some compensation. I do not approve of the doctrine that the workingman ought only to be paid in cases where there is negligence on the part of the defendant. In the case of a pure accident, I say the workingman ought to be paid. So it was the committee in its efforts to do justice by these people decided in all these cases where it appeared there was no negligence on the part of the employee, that we would allow him remuneration. In many cases it is but a pittance. And there are not many more of these claims, so far as I can ascertain. We have taken about $75,000 and distributed it among some 40 or 50 people. I firmly believe that no Member who votes for the appropriation of this money will ever feel any regret for his action hereafter, because all these cases are meritorious—every one of them. I think in almost every case every member of the committee voted for them. I am glad to say there is no politics in our committee room. We leave politics on the outside. Every member of the committee has done his utmost. I pay tribute to the gentlemen of the minority of the committee when I say they have been very diligent in their efforts to sift these claims and do what is just and right.

Now, just one other matter, and then I shall conclude. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has had something to say with respect to these claims for heavy-gun fire. Now, I will state to the committee that we knew nothing about these claims when we first took up this work. We found some five or six bills of that character. This estimate had been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Secretary of the Treasury wrote to the Speaker of the House some two weeks ago and requested that these claims be taken from the Committee on Military Affairs and sent to the Committee on Claims. Now, just about that time, after this bill was already made up, we had knowledge that there were two hundred and twenty and odd of these claims.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman not have knowledge at the time when he printed it twice in the report on this bill? Did he not have knowledge then of those claims?

Mr. POU. In the report on this bill?

Mr. MANN. The report on this bill. That estimate is printed twice in the report on this bill, on pages 45 and following.

Mr. POU. About the time of the printing of the report we got information that these two hundred and twenty and odd claims had been referred to our committee.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but whoever had charge of these claims got that statement from the department. They must have had knowledge of it.

Mr. POU. I stated that we got notice from the War Department about April 18, about two weeks ago. Now, as I said before——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The other bills were not before our committee at that time. I understand they were not.

Mr. POU. Which bills?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These bills for the two or three.

Mr. POU. No; they were not before our committee at all.

Mr. MANN. There is no bill on the subject. There is an estimate and statement from the War Department.

Mr. POU. That is true.

Mr. MANN. It is printed in this report twice.

Mr. POU. I say, if we had been put in full possession of all the facts as we are now we would not have inserted these two or three items in this bill. We have referred the entire matter to one of the subcommittees, and that subcommittee is hard at work upon the subject now. I can not undertake to say what that subcommittee is going to do, but I imagine that a bill will be reported out, and that all these items will be included in it, and that the House will have an opportunity to pass it if we get another day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with this explanation, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a few words in the hope of being able to make clear how unjustifiable some of the criticisms are upon this bill. Even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], unless he has at some time served upon the Committee on Claims, has no conception of the difficulties under which the Committee on Claims labors, notwithstanding all of his knowledge of the affairs of this House, and I wish now to pay him the tribute of saying that I believe no one else has so full and complete knowledge of the workings of the Government and of matters before the House as he has. The committee is compelled, Mr. Chairman, literally to make bricks without straw. The committee is supposed to undertake, and does undertake and endeavor to the best of its ability, to render compensation to parties who have just claims against this Government; and yet in nearly every case it is without adequate and complete information, in order that we might do justice to the cases.

Mr. AUSTIN. What does the gentleman think about a proposition to send all these cases to the Court of Claims?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would welcome some kind of a proposition, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee—some kind of a bill whereby there can be a proper hearing upon these matters and these parties accorded adequate compensation. But, inevitably, when this committee comes to the House it is charged, as now by the gentleman from Tennessee, with being hard-hearted. The committee is convinced that in many cases we have come far short of doing full justice and giving these claimants what they ought to have. In fact that is probably true in almost every case. And then we are met with a charge from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that we have not imposed a hard-and-fast rule, a rule which, as stated by him, and which I wish to state to this House, would do injustice in nearly every case.

The rule that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to have this committee enforce is this, that if a man is injured in his big toe and can not work for a year he shall receive a year's salary. If he receives some injury by which he lies languishing in bed for months and months, racked with pain in every part of his body, he would receive a year's salary.

Mr. MANN. If the man's brains were in his big toe, that might be true; but that is not considered in my proposition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman's remark is more sarcastic than accurate.

Mr. MANN. That is in conformity with the gentleman's remark.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have stated to the House just what the gentleman from Illinois was contending for. The statute passed by the House, to which the gentleman wishes the committee to conform, makes exactly that kind of a provision—that if a man is injured so that he can not work for a year through the loss of a finger or a toe, or whatever it may be, he gets a year's salary. If he is injured so as to lose a leg or an arm or both eyes, he gets a year's salary. If his death is caused, his heirs get a year's salary.

That is just exactly what the law is at present with reference to the parties injured in hazardous employment under the Panama Canal Commission, and it is the rule for which the gentleman from Illinois contends.

Mr. KENDALL. That is not the rule that this committee observed, though, is it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee have not observed that entirely. The committee have thought they ought not to observe any rule that was so reeking with injustice as this rule is; and I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], with his large heart, will stand by the committee in this respect.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe in this bill you allow $1,900 to a Missouri man who lost his right hand.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I think not.

Mr. BORLAND. That is not the same bill. Now, I want to say to the gentleman about that that Mr. Cole had his hand taken off down there at work on the Panama Canal. We asked for $5,000 for that. He was a skillful workman and lost his hand. Yet I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it is better to give these people immediate relief if we can, because that man is suffering for his money, and I am not here to ask $5,000 for him and refuse to take $2,000, when I know by a telegram from him to-day that he needs the $2,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does not the gentleman think he ought to join with me now and try to get $5,000 for him?

Mr. BORLAND. But the man is in need of immediate relief, and because of that fact I am willing to take the amount which they have recommended.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the gentleman not to surrender when the fight has just commenced.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee have sought, in some very exceptional cases, to make a deviation from this rule.

Mr. BORLAND. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] suggests, if this man had been hurt after the law relating to the Panama Canal was passed, he would have received a year's pay, and it is proposed now to give him what the law would have given him, and he is willing to take that.

Mr. KENDALL. That ought not to control the committee in awarding a larger measure of damages in these other cases.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, no. He did not come under the general law, because his case happened before that, and for the sake of getting immediate relief I am willing to see him get what the committee have reported.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to call attention to the Armour case, which has been criticized by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as showing inconsistency in this report. Here are the circumstances in that case. Mr. Armour was keeper of a lighthouse. Some person was detained at the lighthouse during a storm, and he thought it necessary to take that man to the shore. He took the man to the shore, and after he got there he discovered that the storm had increased. The waves were rolling mountain high, and yet he believed that it was his duty to get back to that lighthouse. He feared that his wife, who was alone there, would not be able to keep the light going, and that the mariners at sea who were relying on that light in their endeavors to make the port would eventually find their way upon the rocks instead of into the harbor. So this man took his life in his hands in the performance of his duty, with a bravery equal to that of a soldier leading to the charge a forlorn hope, and started back in the attempt to return to that lighthouse. He failed to reach the lighthouse and lost his life.

At one time when this bill was before our committee I objected, but I have since thought that this furnishes an exceptional case, and I will say, also, that widow to whom this money will go kept that light going. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] to state how long.

Mr. LEVY. She herself kept it going all night—attended to the light all night herself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was for a longer time than that.

Mr. LEVY. Until they came to her relief.

Mr. BUTLER. Has not she a claim pending somewhere?

Mr. LEVY. Oh, no.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman does not claim that the fact which he has stated ought to increase the amount of her claim?

Mr. LEVY. It was most difficult to keep the light burning.

Mr. POU. With the gentleman's permission, I will state that this lady was there for several nights absolutely alone. That fact can only be taken into consideration by way of showing that she is worthy to receive this money.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was she made her husband's successor?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I think not. I do not think she could properly attend to the light.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the committee did the proper thing in that case. Does the gentleman think the committee did the just thing in the case of Annie T. Jackson, whose husband was fireman on a Government tug? On account of a defect in the boiler there was an explosion, and he lost his life. She made a claim for $15,000, and the committee report $420. That will be found on page 41 of the report. Is it fair and just to give $5,000 to the lighthouse keeper's widow and only $420 to the fireman's wife?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This amount of $5,000 was awarded as a reward for the heroism and example displayed by that lighthouse keeper in his endeavor to do his duty. It was something more than a mere claim for damages that the committee were passing on at that time.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman will not overlook the fact that the lighthouse keeper went ashore to take one of the employees who had gone to fix the light while on an inspection tour and was returning to the shore in the performance of his duty.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am glad the gentleman spoke of that. Now, it is true that there are probably very few of these cases in which we have awarded as much as the claimants ought to have.

Mr. AUSTIN. This fireman was in danger every day. He was doing a hazardous work in firing the boiler where he was.

Mr. KENDALL. Do I understand my colleague to say that in one case—the lighthouse keeper who lost his life—the committee made an award of $5,000, and in another case, as appears on page 4, where the keeper lost his life in an arduous occupation, the committee only recommends $420?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a statement entirely disconnected with the facts surrounding the claims.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to say that if the Committee on Claims is recommending propositions like this that I have suggested, where they make such vast discriminations and discrepancies in reimbursement, they are doing more to establish a flat rate, as claimed by the gentleman from Illinois, than anything I can think of.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In answer to what the gentleman says, if the House thinks acts of heroism that set a worthy example to every American ought to be passed over, I have nothing to say. I anticipated the argument made by my colleague and the argument that is made by the gentleman from Illinois. Let them make them if they see fit; I do not think it ought to be the rule. I confess it appealed to me when the matter was discussed before the full committee.

Mr. KENDALL. I want the gentleman to understand that I am not complaining of the amount that has been allowed the lighthouse keeper's widow. It is not excessive. My complaint is of the amount allowed to the employee of the tug—that it is grossly inadequate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say this in regard to that particular item: I happened to be absent when the Annie Jackson case was taken up. I think it is one of the few cases that was considered when I was absent. I did not go into that particular claim, and I can not explain it. I presume that some member of the committee can tell exactly why that was put at that amount.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I will say that in the case of Annie Jackson that was one of the early cases reported by the committee. At that time, as I recollect, the committee was endeavoring to follow the rule as laid down in the Government compensation act, which provided for one year's pay, and the report was made in favor of Annie Jackson in pursuance of that rule.

Afterwards, later on, the case of the lighthouse keeper came up, and then the amount recommended, if I am correct, was increased by the action of the committee, thereby making a clear departure from the conduct of the committee as it started out, endeavoring to allow only one year's pay in accordance with the Government's compensation act.

I will say further in regard to that that after this large amount was allowed I stated myself to the author of the bill—the Annie Jackson case having been reported—that if he would, when it came into the House, offer an amendment, the committee would be glad to respond to an increase in the amount. But several of the cases that were reported in the first instance were by reason of the fact that they started in to allow one year's pay in accordance with the Government's compensation act. That is how the Annie Jackson case came to be reported for a much lower sum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware that the committee never intended in any case to award anything more than that except in exceptional cases.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will say that in the lighthouse keeper's case it was acted upon subsequently and was deemed an exceptional case, and the report of the subcommittee was increased by the action of the general committee and demurred to in part by some of the individual members of the committee.

As far as I recall, in starting out the committee was practically a unit in pursuing the rule of allowing only one year's pay, following the law in the compensation act, and they afterwards departed from it when extreme cases came up. Very quickly after that the discrepancy between the lighthouse keeper's case and the Annie Jackson case was seen and noticed, but the Annie Jackson case had already been reported and was not changed, and so it is here before the House.

As far as I am concerned, I have been very much interested in the criticism by the gentleman from Tennessee, criticism going to the acts of this committee no more than it goes to the action of the committee two years ago, when the omnibus bill was first reported; when in the House, as I understand from the history of it, the amounts were increased and then the bill failed.

The bill comes from the committee in the same condition that the bill did two years ago, and it is here subject to amendment by the House if it sees fit to amend it; but it is a question for its consideration whether the present committee should have in the consideration of these bills responded to the thought of the gentleman from Tennessee and reported large sums instead of the amounts that they have reported.

Now, responding to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa, I will not now interrupt the gentleman longer, but will continue my remarks in my own time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a few words as to the difficulties under which the committee labors. We had our choice to accept the ironclad rule which the gentleman from Illinois thinks ought to be followed by the committee, and we were confronted on the other side by the fact that a large number of persons injured since the passage of the bill would only get a certain amount in any event, and we did not wish to award parties more in cases occurring before the passage of the act than they would receive under the passage of the act.

And then, beyond and above all that, we had no facilities for taking evidence and making complete hearings in order that we could ascertain as to what amount we thought ought to be paid to the respective claimants.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Does the Committee on Claims intend to report any other bill at the present session?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Perhaps the Chairman can better answer that than I.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the gentleman will allow, the committee is still at work. It has reported a second omnibus bill, and it will have a meeting on next Monday, and it is the intention of the committee to continue to report bills.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, what we ought to have, and what these gentlemen who criticize the committee ought to do, is to have a bill brought forward that would enable proper hearings to be had on these cases in order that persons who are injured might be compensated in the proper manner.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that he ought not to be sensitive? There are two things in this country I would not do—one is to work for my Government and the other is to serve on that committee. I had an experience once on it, and that leads me to suggest to the gentleman that he ought not to be too sensitive. It is the hardest place to serve in I ever occupied. [Applause.] I never was able to please anybody after two years of hard labor, and I suggest to the gentleman that he ought not to be sensitive. I think the committee have done their work the best they could.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his statement of the situation, but I believe I have carried a smile here as much as most gentlemen have during this discussion.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat? On page 4 of this bill——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Which bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Twenty-three thousand four hundred and fifty-one, top of page 4, the committee recommends $1,500 to Hartman for the loss of his left arm, $438 to Older for injury to his left leg, $420 to Annie Jackson for the loss of her husband, and the next item is to pay $5,000 to Ingraham for damages to his property at Fort Baldwin, Me., by heavy-gun firing. Take these three items right along the line of fairness and justice, $1,500 for the loss of an arm, $438 for an injury to a leg, and $420 for the loss of a life.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will refer my genial friend from Tennessee to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has laid down the rule which justifies these allowances and has contended for it here.

Mr. KENDALL. I will ask the gentleman if the allowance to which the gentleman from Tennessee has referred represents one year's salary for the claimant?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They do, as I now remember.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then you give a man who has lost a finger in the way of a year's salary what you do to a widow who lost a husband's life. One is killed and the other injured, and the pay is the same.

Mr. KENDALL. You might put it as an extreme illustration that the committee recommended $1,500 for the loss of an arm and only $420 for the loss of a life.

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will permit me, I simply wish to suggest in regard to the Older claim that his injury occurred in April, 1907, and the claimant is still incapable of doing work.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is just one other matter I wish to mention before I am through. There are a large number of circumstances connected with these different claims, which we took into consideration, which have not been and can not be set forth to the House in detail, which influenced the committee in their findings.

Mr. MANN. They ought to be in the report.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, just a word so as to state my views about this question. I want to say I am inclined to be largely in accord with the views as expressed by the gentleman from Illinois, and while I feel that the committee is not subject to any special criticism, as far as I am concerned I am not objecting. These are amounts to be paid by the Government for claims against the Government, and I think, in any consideration of these claims, that the committee was justified in following the rule laid down in the compensation act and that I was opposed, as a rule, to granting large sums of money. But while we take up one claim at a time, the committee would not be absolutely consistent and no two claims bearing comparatively the same merit would be reported for the same amount, as a rule. Some peculiar circumstances might come up that would tend to enlarge the claim at one time, or it might come from a different committee. What has been said in this general debate here on this omnibus bill has not been lost upon the House and, as I am informed, it is the same kind of a debate which took place two years ago, and the criticism does not go so much to the action of that committee, whether it be this committee or the committee two years ago, as it does go against the law; and upon that question Members of this House may have different views. We had the deliberate judgment of the House that passed the act of 1908 that they should be allowed one year's pay if presented within one year after the injury. If they did not present it within that time, the limitation had run; then those whose claims came up afterwards stood in a much better attitude toward the laws than the claims of those who came within the limitations held by the law. But I think the committee was more justified in following that rule than they were in following the idea of allowing large amounts, such amounts as would be obtained in similar cases in a court for damages against a corporation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Can the gentleman tell the committee whether by this workmen's compensation bill that has passed the Senate if we are not fixing the amount there in excess of the amount that is in the law governing the Government's liability?

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman means the recent bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. The recent bill which passed the Senate and is now here in the House. Now, Congress is attempting by legislation to force the railroad companies and all other corporations to pay their employees a larger sum of money for the loss of a limb or life than is fixed in what is known as the Government liability act?

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to say that is my understanding, but I have not examined the bill as it passed the Senate yet. I may be in accord with the gentleman from Tennessee with the idea the Government ought to pass a more liberal law, but it has not done it up to this time, and the committee in supporting and passing upon these claims was simply following the law as laid down and the rule as laid down in the law.

Mr. KENDALL. I was about to suggest to the gentleman the committee has not always observed that rule in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is what I said.

Mr. KENDALL. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, who, I am sure, is familiar with all the facts in regard to the items of this bill, that they are not all presented under that rule, and I suppose the Armour item, on page 2, line 13, is one of them, the $5,000 allowance.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think the committee very shortly got away from that rule and, examining the particular facts in each case, they often responded to the peculiar facts in each case, and made reports in larger amounts.

Mr. KENDALL. But presentments appear in the same bill from the committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand; but they all came in separate bills in the first instance, and then in separate reports from the subcommittees, and this is a grouping of the bills passed upon by the general committee after they had been reported by the several committees. And they were not reported by any one committee, nor were all of them considered at any one time.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that these cases that have been placed in this bill at a higher rate than the others are particularly hard cases?

Mr. KENDALL. That is, in the judgment of the subcommittee.

Mr. DICKINSON. That was the thought of the committee, and further than that, after having allowed large amounts in cases that subsequently came before the committee, it was the judgment, at least, of some of the committee that some of the cases that had been reported for small amounts ought to be raised. And I am in accord to-day and now with the suggestion made that in the case of Annie T. Jackson the amount ought to be raised. True, the facts in that case have not been fully brought before this Committee of the Whole. It is the case, I believe, in which a laborer had been temporarily employed for a day or two, but the suggestion was made, as I stated, to the author of the bill that when it came up for consideration on the floor of the House—and I so stated to him, because it was reported by me—the committee would agree to the amendment enlarging the amount of it.

But this criticism of the bill is valuable. It is valuable because it is a criticism of the law; it is a criticism of the bill two years ago; it is a criticism of the action of the committee two years ago. And I am disposed to be friendly to a more liberal law to be passed by Congress than the present law. So far as the members of the committee are concerned, I am not at all sensitive. I am glad to hear the criticism made of the law or of the bill by reason of the law, or any part of it, either from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but the committee itself is not subject to criticism.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Take this item of Annie T. Jackson, $420; it reveals the fact, does it not, that on the United States tugs the Government pays firemen the munificent salary of $35 a month?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not on the committee.

Mr. COOPER. And is this amount one year's salary?

Mr. FOSTER. I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the gentleman will permit me to answer, that is one year's salary—the same amount that would have been allowed if it had been paid within the time prescribed under the Government compensation act.

Mr. COOPER. I only wish to say here by way of a parenthetical remark, that for the Government of the United States to pay the widow of a fireman, killed while in the employ of the United States Government, $420, is an insult to the widow.

Mr. FOSTER. I fully agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that $420 is an unusually small amount to pay for the death of any person who works for the Government. I am a firm believer in the proper compensation by the Government for injury or death incurred while in the employ of the Government when not due to their own gross negligence.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If this fireman had been killed prior to the law of 1908, this widow would have $420 without question. Is there any reason for paying an amount larger because the death happened to occur before 1908?

Mr. FOSTER. I think my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct, so far as his statement of the case is concerned. But I think, regardless of the law that was passed in 1908, it is entirely too low a compensation for men who lose their lives or who are injured while in the service of the Government, and we ought to change that law. And if the gentleman will call to mind, when that law was passed in 1908 it was passed under suspension of the rules, when there was no opportunity given to anyone to amend the law, and it was taken as the best that could be had at that particular time. And, if he will recall, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] made some remarks upon that bill under the 20-minute debate allotted to each side and called attention to the fact that that bill was not in the proper form in which to pass, but that the bill ought to be taken up and considered section by section, so that we might have an opportunity to amend it and put it in proper shape so that it would give ample compensation for Government employees.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will also call to mind that the only way to pass the bill at all was under suspension, and that we reversed a former policy of the Government that had existed for more than a hundred years, to pay nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman from Illinois is correct about it, that this would give employees in hazardous occupations something which they formerly did not get except through a bill in Congress, and you see how hard it is to get claim bills through the House——

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr MANN] to say, and the other gentleman [Mr. FOSTER] to acquiesce in the statement, that prior to the statute of 1908 it had been the uniform policy of the United States Government not to pay anything.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], my colleague, did not say that, and I did not mean the gentleman to infer such was the case; but I said they did not provide anything only by presenting a claim to Congress and getting it through here, and many times they were unable to secure any compensation at all. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin, from his long service, will recall that that is true.

Mr. COOPER. I will say to the gentleman that I recall very distinctly that a certain Senator from west of the Mississippi River succeeded in getting through a claim, if I remember the amount, of $8,000.

Mr. MANN. I think it was $10,000. It was so exceptional that everybody remembers it.

Mr. FOSTER. There may have been a few cases gotten through, but cases that were obscure never received anything.

Mr. COOPER. What I think has been considered is: Whether the Government of the United States was negligent or the person injured guilty of contributory negligence. This particular law of 1908 limits compensation for injury to the yearly wages only.

Mr. FOSTER. What I wanted to say was that prior to the law of 1908 there was nothing on the statute books that gave an employee anything whatever.

Mr. AUSTIN. When the Ford disaster occurred here and a number of men were killed, the Government reimbursed their families, I think, by giving them $5,000.

Mr. MANN. That caused as much hysteria as the loss of the Titanic.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] that I believe as much as he does in the proper compensation for the employees of the Government who lose their lives or get injured in the service. I want to say this, further, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], that I fully believe that I would agree with him that this Government ought to pass a proper compensation act. I do not believe that it is right for a corporation to cut a man's leg or arm off and then leave him crippled and unable to earn a living, and to go upon the charity of the world. Neither do I believe that a man engaged in hazardous occupations for the Government should lose his leg or his arm, or be injured in some way, and he and his family be turned out upon the charity of the world. And if he loses his life I believe it is as right for the Government to pay the sum as it is for any corporation, and I am in favor of such legislation and would be glad to help pass it. [Applause.]

There was one thing that struck me as peculiar in this report, and that was the case referred to on page 34, the claim of D. M. Rowland, father of Robert Blaine Rowland, a seaman of the United States Navy, who was killed while in the performance of his duty on January 31, 1906, by being struck by a bullet from one of the Morris tube rifles on the U. S. S. Cincinnati while engaged in target practice in Manila Harbor.

I want to call the attention of the committee to this report—not the report of the committee, but the report to the Navy Department—which is a very peculiar thing to me. Here was an officer who had neglected to take the proper precaution of putting a bullet catcher in front of the Morris tube in target practice, and the man lost his life as a result. Then a court-martial was had in the Navy, which decided that the officer should be reprimanded for neglecting his duty in such a way as to cause the loss of the life of a man in the Navy. Then it seemed as though the reprimand was not administered, because there was going to be another court-martial. They held another court-martial and finally considered that the punishment should be administered, or that was all they proposed to do, and the officer received his reprimand.

It occurs now that in cases where United States Navy officers in the discharge of their duty fail to take proper precautions and an enlisted man loses his life in consequence, the Government is called upon to pay $1,000 damages. This accident did not result in consequence of any fault of the man himself, but through the negligence of his commanding officer, the man in charge of the vessel, whose duty it was to take these precautions; and it seems strange that that officer should be permitted to go with merely a reprimand.

Mr. AUSTIN. What page of the bill is that case on?

Mr. FOSTER. On page 34.

Mr. AUSTIN. I mean the page of the bill. That is page 34 in the report.

Mr. MANN. Page 3 of the bill

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, the case to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is referring is one that ought peculiarly to have addressed itself to the sympathies and the sensibilities of the Committee on Claims. I am somewhat familiar with the facts. Young Rowland was a lad living in the second district of Iowa. He entered the naval service, as stated in the report, and at the time he was killed was engaged in convoying his superior officer to the ship Cincinnati, in the discharge of his duty, under the command of those having supervision over his movements. Through what must be termed the inexcusable negligence of the officer in charge of those engaged in target practice, and without the remotest negligence on his own part, he was killed.

Now, here is what I submit ought to have appealed to the sympathies and the sensibilities of the committee: If these awards are to be made for sentimental reasons, as in the case of the lighthouse keeper, which has been discussed——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield me five minutes?

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman take the floor in his own right.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL] will be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KENDALL. This young man was killed on the 31st day of January. His parents live in Iowa. His old father was a veteran of the Civil War and his mother is a most estimable woman. The boy was in the habit of writing to his mother every Sunday while he was in the Philippine service, and his letters required about five weeks to come from the Far East to his home at Marengo, Iowa. He was killed, as I say, on the 31st of January. On the 2d day of February a cablegram was delivered to his parents informing them of the tragedy, and for five weeks thereafter the letters that had been written by the boy during his lifetime kept coming to the bereaved mother. Now, no one can exaggerate the anguish that must have overwhelmed that poor old lady as each message reached her, and yet the compensation proposed by the committee here is only $1,000.

Mr. MANN. Would not the same thing have occurred if the young man had been killed in battle?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes; certainly. That is why I suggest that it is dangerous for the committee to surrender to considerations of sentiment in one case unless they are to control in all cases. A death is a death, and the estate of a man who dies, as in the case of the lighthouse keeper, is not entitled to one cent more than the estate of a man who is killed as was young Rowland.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the sailor had been killed in battle his wife or his dependent mother would have had a pension, would she not?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would there have been any distinction between a young man being killed in battle and killed in the way in which young Rowland was killed?

Mr. KENDALL. I think not. This young man was killed while in the faithful discharge of his duty without any negligence whatever of his own.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing. As a matter of fact, does any one here know whether his dependent parents are entitled to a pension?

Mr. KENDALL. I am inclined to think that they are not dependent, in the strict interpretation of the word. I do not think they were wholly dependent.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KENDALL. I did not observe that my colleague was here. He can no doubt furnish more specific information. I yield to him.

Mr. PEPPER. I am familiar with the facts of the case, although the facts were originally brought to the attention of the House by my predecessor, Mr. Dawson, who had the claim pending before Congress for some years. The parents of this young man are at the present time in needy circumstances. The father at one time was rather well to do, but in the last few years, as I understand, he has become reduced in circumstances. In my judgment, this $1,000 is a very inadequate compensation, based upon any ordinary rule of compensation.

Mr. MANN. Is not the father entitled to a pension?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not think so, under the present pension laws.

Mr. MANN. He would be if he was a dependent parent, and I would infer that he was a dependent parent, because the boy was sending home to him $15 each month.

Mr. PEPPER. The proof of dependency under the pension laws is so strict that I do not believe this man could bring himself within the strict terms of the law.

Mr. MANN. I guess the reason why a pension has not been granted is that the mother is not a dependent mother.

Mr. PEPPER. Under the provisions of the pension law, as I understand, the dependent parent has to be practically helpless and have no income of any kind. Of course, that is not the case with respect to the parents of this young man; but as my colleague [Mr. KENDALL] has stated, this is a case that certainly appeals to every man who believes that the Government ought to make some adequate compensation on account of the willful and almost criminal negligence, as you might say, of one of its officers.

Mr. MANN. I do not agree with the gentleman as to the criminal negligence of one of the officers. The report is here.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what it says.

Mr. MANN. The report speaks for itself. If the boy had been killed after May 14, 1908, the father and mother might have received, if he had designated them, six months' salary. He did not so designate them, and now the gentleman proposes that because he did not designate them we should pay several times the amount.

Mr. PEPPER. If there is any way of doing that, I am in favor of it.

Mr. MANN. In this particular case the gentleman is in favor of it.

Mr. PEPPER. I am in favor of paying the honest obligations of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Everybody is in favor of paying the honest obligations of the Government, but that is not the question here.

Mr. PEPPER. If we have enacted a law that does not take care of those obligations, to my mind that is no excuse for our failing to do our duty in a case of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. KENDALL. I directed attention to that case, not in the hope of inducing the committee to allow an amendment increasing the amount of recovery, but to illustrate how inequitable it is to make fish of one and flesh of another. There ought to be some intelligent method of determining the amounts to be awarded in these respective cases.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that a fixed provision ought to be made above which the committee might not go or below which the committee might not go, but I believe each case ought to be accorded careful consideration and then determined upon its own individual merits. I suppose it is the theory of the committee that the liability of the Government in some amount is assumed, otherwise there would be no recovery permitted at all. Now, that being true, what ought the allowance recovery to be in each particular case? Here is a man 25 years of age, with an expectancy of 30 years, in robust health and of good earning capacity. Here is another man working by his side, perhaps 60 years of age, infirm in health, with no expectancy as compared with that of the first man to whom I have referred. I think it would be an absurdity to say that where each of these men loses his life without negligence on his part, but as a result of the negligence of the Government, the families should be compensated in identical amounts. That, it seems to me, violates every principle of equity and justice.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the claim is presented under the law within one year after the accident, then the amount is fixed and is paid without coming to Congress, is it not?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. If it is presented more than a year after the accident, then it comes before Congress, and in that class of cases, where the claim is withheld for more than one year, they would get a larger amount. In view of that fact, what ought the committee to do—ought it to establish some rule?

Mr. KENDALL. I am indulging in no criticism of the practice of the committee in following this law of 1908 to the extent that it can be followed, if that is to be the settled policy in the adjudication of these claims. I do not believe the provisions of that law of 1908 are at all adequate, and I think they ought to be enlarged to respond to the finer sense of justice which is coming to prevail in this country in the compensation of families for the loss of their supporters. [Applause.]

We are growing away from the old, rigid rules which have governed these questions in our country, and the day is not distant when there will not be a Commonwealth in this Republic which will recognize the old doctrines of contributory negligence or assumption of risk. I believe we are coming to a time when every injury will be compensated, whether it be the result of the negligence of the employer or not; even those inevitable accidents which constantly occur. All industrial injuries will some time be redressed, and the expense will be charged against the industry in which the injury was sustained.

Mr. RAKER. How much does the gentleman think this man's family ought to get?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Rowland's family?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not think $1,000 is adequate compensation at all in that case.

Mr. RAKER. What is the gentleman's idea of proper compensation in that case?

Mr. KENDALL. I do not know; but I say that, in my opinion, it is a reproach to this Government to go to a widow like Mrs. Jackson here, whose husband died in the discharge of his duty as a result of the negligence of the Government, and tender to her the paltry sum of $420 in full satisfaction of that injury.

Mr. MANN. There is no negligence shown in that case.

Mr. KENDALL. That was the case of an explosion, I believe?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I know it has been a principle of law that the mere occurrence of an accident is not evidence of negligence; but here was a Government steam boiler that exploded and killed a man.

Mr. AUSTIN. And the Government had inspectors to examine those boilers.

Mr. KENDALL. The Government had inspectors to examine those boilers, I assume. And I venture to say that if the exact facts could be uncovered somebody was negligent in the performance of his duty, because it rarely occurs that a boiler explodes when it has been carefully and properly inspected.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KENDALL. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That, again, just illustrates one of the difficulties under which the committee labored. There was nothing really to show the committee but what this man himself might have had something to do with that explosion.

Mr. KENDALL. If the committee entertained any doubt about the negligence of the deceased, I suppose that doubt is removed by the fact that this provision is reported for his family. So we may assume that the committee conceded that the Government was liable to his estate. Otherwise it would not have made any recommendation for the benefit of the family.

Mr. AUSTIN. Read what the Judge Advocate General says about it.

Mr. KENDALL. The Judge Advocate General says, as supplied by our friend from Tennessee, that the injury was not due to any misconduct or negligence on the part of the deceased.

That is the conclusion of the Judge Advocate General after a careful survey of all the facts and a scrutinous examination of all the evidence.

Mr. BUTLER. What does he say about the negligence of the Government—anything?

Mr. RUSSELL. He is silent.

Mr. KENDALL. I have read all he said on the subject of negligence—

> It appears from the report of the Judge Advocate General that the injury was not due to any misconduct or negligence on the part of the deceased.

It goes on further to say that if it had occurred prior to May 30, 1908, his widow would have received $420.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to read on—what they say that he said.

Mr. KENDALL. I omitted to read that because I knew that the gentleman from Illinois was entirely familiar with the case.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman ought to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. KENDALL. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman how are you going to get these men paid?

Mr. KENDALL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will assist, we will do something toward paying some of them this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the report says:

> It appears from the report of the Judge Advocate General that the injury was not due to any misconduct or negligence on the part of the deceased, and that had the act of May 30, 1908, providing compensation for injuries received by certain employees been in force at the time of the above accident, his widow would have been entitled to one year's pay, amounting to $420, and your committee deems the claim meritorious and recommends that the bill for $420 be approved.

What I am complaining about now is that this committee having charge of this important legislation is not justified in reporting the meager amount of $420 to one family, whose support has been taken from it, and $5,000 to another family, which has suffered a similar injury.

Mr. LEVY. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that there is no law for this other widow at all.

Mr. KENDALL. Under what law is this $420 allowance made?

Mr. LEVY. There is no law covering her case, but that is what she would have received under the general compensation act.

Mr. MANN. If the Annie Jackson case had occurred after May 30, 1908, the law would have provided a payment to her of $420, whereas the law would not have provided anything in the other case. Therefore they give $5,000 in a case where the law provided nothing and $420 in a case where the law would have paid $420 except for the date of the injury.

Mr. LEVY. You have to follow the law.

Mr. KENDALL. What law did the committee follow in making the award of $5,000?

Mr. LEVY. The law that we are making to-day; there is no other law for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no law for either case.

Mr. MANN. But there would have been a law if the Jackson case had occurred a few days later.

Mr. KENDALL. We all agree that the compensation act is not liberal enough. Was the gentleman from New York on the subcommittee that considered these cases?

Mr. LEVY. I was on the $5,000 case.

Mr. KENDALL. I wish the gentleman had been on the other one. What reason does the gentleman give for allowing $5,000 in one case and $420 in the other?

Mr. LEVY. They were different cases. This one came before me and was an extraordinary case. I thought she was entitled to fair compensation. She was a poor widow and she kept the lights going all through that long dark night just as her husband had always done.

Mr. KENDALL. But this is a poor widow in the Jackson case, also.

Mr. LEVY. But I am speaking of this particular case, where this woman rendered unusual service.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman is not making compensation to the widow in addition to compensating her for the loss of her husband.

Mr. LEVY. For her bravery and keeping the light burning all through the night, we thought that deserved special consideration.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not think the gentleman can be serious about that.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask, did not somebody put in a claim for the burning of the lights that night? I thought I saw something in the report in connection with that.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], a member of the committee who desires to address the committee briefly, that general debate be closed and that we proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], a member of the committee, that general debate be closed and that we proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman had better make the request after the gentleman from Illinois concludes, and for the present I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Claims has labored under some of the most adverse circumstances that I was ever placed in in all the born days of my life. [Laughter.] I thought that my little personal-injury experience which I had acquired down in my home district would somewhat equip me for this arduous duty, but I found myself as helpless as a child when confronted with such a great variety of circumstances surrounding the many claims that we were called upon to consider, with the importunities of learned gentlemen of long experience in this House, I found myself so bewildered that I was confirmed in the belief that the only sensible rule to be adopted and be governed by in the consideration of all of these cases was that of equity and justice. [Applause.]

It was thought by a number of gentlemen on the committee that the law which was passed in 1908 ought to govern the action of the committee in the consideration of all of these personal-injury cases. We divided ourselves into subcommittees, to each of which an allotment of claims was assigned by the chairman of the committee. I understand that some of these subcommittees adopted the provisions of the law of 1908 as their rule in making allowances for personal injuries to employees while working in hazardous employments in the service of the Government. Guided by this rule, a few cases were reported to the committee, with allowance fixed at one year's salary at the rate of wages received by the claimant at the time of his injury, and the committee ratified the recommendations of the subcommittee.

As a member of that committee I did not agree to that standard of measurement, because of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that I did not regard the law as it now stands as an equitable measure. [Applause.] I deny the proposition that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] enunciated a little while ago when he said that whatever sums we allow to these poor unfortunate cripples, and widows whose husbands lost their lives while engaged in hazardous employments, was a gift from the United States. Again, Mr. Chairman, I say that I deny the proposition, because the men who have been injured are laboring men who stood on the firing line of hazardous employment in order that the wheels of this Government might roll on forever in the interest and for the good of the American people and for mankind. When the Government has an important piece of machinery to become impaired or to break, the cost of mending or replacing it is borne by the Government, whatever the sum may be. Men get out of repair and break the same as machinery, and whenever any part of the governmental agencies are impaired, whether machinery or men, it ought to be the duty and the province of this Government to give to it that kind of relief that the circumstances surrounding the individual case demands, and that is the rule which I adopted in considering these claims. Mr. Chairman, after the committee had proceeded for some time upon the line of allowing an individual who had been injured in the line of a hazardous employment a year's salary as compensation in full satisfaction of his claim, we then departed from that rule and formed ourselves into a jury for the purpose of determining the facts in each case and making an equitable allowance for the injury.

Now, we have been criticized here for our action, and, Mr. Chairman, justly so, from the standpoint of measuring every case with the same yardstick. No one would think of measuring all men's clothes with the same yardstick. It would look funny to see a 6-foot man dressed in a 5-foot man's trousers. It would be no less ridiculous to see a man with the loss of a leg or an arm dressed in the judgment of the man with a bruised heel or a sore toe. One yardstick is not enough for the measurement of the various cases. It takes a yardstick for each individual case, and that is what we adopted. Mr. Chairman, there is a discrepancy between the amounts allowed. For instance, the $400 in the Jackson case and $5,000 in the lighthouse case, both allowances to widows for the death of their husbands, but one of these cases was measured by the yardstick of the law of 1908, while we were working with but one yardstick. I am perfectly willing to concede that Mrs. Jackson ought to have more than $400, and the other was measured by the yardstick of equity and justice, which demanded a fair consideration of the woman's rights, and that she should be cared for by the Government because her husband lost his life in a most hazardous undertaking. As I recall, that was the case of the keeper of a lighthouse who in the discharge of his duty was attempting to return to the lighthouse through a storm, out across the billows, and lost his life. His wife, a woman like Barbara Frietchie, waving the Stars and Stripes from her attic window as Stonewall Jackson entered Frederick town, stood bravely at her post and did her duty nobly. You may call it sentiment, or whatever you please, but there is in the makeup of men and in the milk of human kindness in the souls of men a disposition to measure a case according to its merits. [Applause.]

And that is what we did in this case. You may criticize all you please, but I wish we could put one of these critics in there as a member of that Committee on Claims and let him stand the test, the crucial test, of going through the evidence and the besieging of Congressmen on behalf of cripples and weeping widows, orphan children, and aged, helpless parents. Letters and petitions in each case piled up in stacks, and finally confronted with a report from the department of government recommending the allowance of a sum often fixed by it. I would like to see what kind of a man he is when he gets through with that ordeal. I am sure he would be anything else but a critic. My distinguished friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is one of the strongest critics in this case. He wants every man to be perfect. Talmage once said the man who never committed a big blunder has not yet been born; if he had it would have killed him. Now, I never saw a perfect man in my life, and I have had my doubts about any man who pretends to be perfect. Why, he is not a perfect man by any means. [Laughter.] At the close of the last session of Congress he accredited Æsop with the authorship of the Woodcutter. Æsop died centuries before the Woodcutter was written. Now, let him criticize all he pleases because we have refused to be governed in our actions by an unfair law which he had a hand in passing—an inequitable law, one which gives the poor $300-a-year laborer only $300 if he loses a leg, and gives $5,000 for the loss of a toe to a standing-collared, red-necktied fellow who receives a $5,000 salary for strutting around twisting his mustache. I would not be guilty of voting for a law of that character, and if I ever get an opportunity to cast a vote to change its terms I would that my vote were a legion so that I might see a majority piled mountain high to destroy its unequal and unjust terms, which are now imposed upon the extreme, needy laboring men of this country. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

They may say he did not make a speech, but I say, Mr. Chairman, his remarks went to the very essence of this question and kissed justice, whereas other men, the critics, went wild of the mark. My distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is one of the wildest shooting men on the floor of the House in his criticism of this bill. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume the time of the committee, but I could not, Mr. Chairman, preserve my respect for the laboring men of my district and of this country—laboring men who go down into the bowels of the earth to dig coal in dark and dangerous caverns to furnish heat for dwellings and motor power for machinery; for the farmers who are toiling during the long summer days, in the sweat of their faces, to satisfy the hunger of man and beast alike; for the common laborer of this country, whose long hours of toil furnishes more than 90,000,000 people with food, raiment, and shelter, if I did not stand here in the defense of their rights [applause]; and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I have begged of this committee to give me a short time that I might speak a few stammering sentences in their behalf. And I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the time will come when every man who is injured on the public works of the United States will not only get one year's salary, but that the United States in its greatness and in its wisdom will rise to a high plane of equity and justice, and through and at the hands of a righteous Congress give to these employees a fair consideration for the injuries which they have sustained in trying to do our work and the work of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate now close, and we proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that general debate now close, and proceed with the reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Just a moment. Mr. Chairman, the Government compensation act became a law May 30, 1908, and those Members in this House who are serving their first term in this House of course have no responsibility for the passage of that act. This was the first distinct step which the Government ever undertook by legislation to acknowledge liability for injury of its employees. But at this session of Congress we have passed through the House a bill extending that compensation act, with its limited liability, to the Forest Service, and another bill extending it to the Bureau of Mines and Mining, and no gentleman on the floor, be he new or old in Congress, can escape the responsibility for the unanimous consent of the passage of those two amendatory acts without a word proposing to increase the liability of the Government or a word in condemnation of the act as it stood. My distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] was a member of the State Legislature of Illinois for many years, and I blush to say that that State does not have upon its statute books any law like our compensation act providing any liability whatever for State employees injured in the State service.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of the gentleman [Mr. MANN], but I desire to call his attention to the fact that two years ago, in a special session, as I recall, the legislature of Illinois, did pass a general compensatory act, and that act is now on the statute books of the State of Illinois. While I was a member of that legislature I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that we helped to perfect one of the best mining laws of any State in the Union. Until a set or gang of designing fellows got hold of it during last session of the legislature it stood among the best of any of this country, but they modified it so that the miners of the State of Illinois lost more than they had gained in 20 years. I was not a party to that law, but I added my influence as a humble citizen down in the southern part of Illinois, aye, down in Egypt, if you please, for the purpose of trying to get a wholesome law which would protect the miners and the laboring people of the State of Illinois. Can the gentleman who has just taken his seat say that much for himself?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] that general debate on this bill be closed? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That $39,603.98 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay certain employees of the United States Government for personal injuries received while in discharge of their duties, without any fault on their part, and to pay certain other claims for damages to, and loss of private property by the various departments of the Government, as hereinafter stated, the same being in full, and the receipt of the same being taken in each case as full and final release and discharge of the respective claims, namely:

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims if we may have an understanding about the total amount carried in this bill. We will return to it in the event that there are any changes made in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object to any understanding about it.

Mr. POU. So far as I have any power to agree, I am willing to do it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose there should be any change, we should want to return to this item.

Mr. MANN. I am not willing to consent to any unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. AUSTIN. I can get along probably without the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman, but the gentleman knows how, without being told how, to do it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what amount he is willing to insert in here as an amendment—that he will accept or agree to?

Mr. POU. I will state to the gentleman that I can not agree to any increase.

Mr. AUSTIN. This was a case of a post-office employee in the New York City office who lost his life there on account of a defective elevator, as I understand it, and died five days after the accident occurred.

Mr. MANN. He died from delirium tremens. The report says:

Ruptured kidney, interior hemorrhage, and delirium tremens.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does that account for the elevator being out of order?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that accounts for the amount.

Mr. POU. The report shows that he lost his life without any negligence on his part, but I do not think it is a case in which there ought to be an increase.

Mr. BOWMAN. I call attention to the report, on page 14. It says that he did not at the time seem to have sustained any serious injury, and declined assistance to his home. Several days after a person who represented himself to be a friend of Clerk Riley reported that Clerk Riley had died in the Fordham Hospital at 11.45 o'clock that morning. There does not seem to be enough evidence to connect the accident with his death.

Mr. FOSTER. While delirium tremens might have been a contributing cause of his death, yet he did have, according to this report, a ruptured kidney, which in itself would be sufficient to produce his death.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] permit me to ask him a question as an expert medical practitioner?

Mr. FOSTER. With that understanding, I could not answer.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not delirium tremens always the result of drinking whisky, or can it come from other causes?

Mr. FOSTER. We get a condition similar to that from drugs, such as morphine. But whisky is the usual cause of it. The report shows that this man says here that he had a ruptured kidney, or internal hemorrhage, and I will say that was a pretty serious condition without any delirium tremens.

Mr. POU. I call the attention of the committee to the recommendation of the Postmaster General on page 13. He says:

The department believes that this claim is a meritorious one.

That report of the Postmaster General has really much to do with the making of this report.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I suggest there is nothing before the committee calling for this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,500 to Elizabeth Riley, widow of Edward M. Riley, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties in the United States post office in the city of New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "one thousand dollars" and insert "five thousand dollars," so that it will read:

To pay $5,000 to Elizabeth Riley, widow of Edward M. Riley, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties in the United States post office in the city of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "one thousand five hundred dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five thousand dollars."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, now I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], what there is in the testimony of this case to justify the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in stating that this man came to his death owing to delirium tremens or excessive drinking?

Mr. POU. On page 14 the postmaster of the city of New York makes this statement, that he had a ruptured kidney, with interior hemorrhage and delirium tremens. Now, it is just possible that the man, after he was injured, had taken to drink and got himself into this condition, though, of course, this is not probable. There was no evidence before the committee that he was an habitual drinker. He was in the service of the Government, and the Postmaster General over his signature says this is a meritorious case. Now, upon those facts the committee acted.

Mr. MANN. Just to be perfectly fair about it, this man was injured on the 6th day of February and went home not knowing that he was seriously injured. On the 8th day of February he went to the hospital and was received in the hospital, and on the 11th day of February he died. When they concluded what was the trouble that statement was made, that he had an injured or ruptured kidney and internal hemorrhage and delirium tremens.

Now, while the report does not contain fully the evidence connecting the illness or injury with the accident, still I think, with the report of the Post Office Department and everything that is published here, that it is quite evident that his injury was in fact caused by the accident. Whether the accident was caused by the man's being under the influence of liquor or not is another proposition. But the man died and he left a lot of children.

Mr. POU. I take it that if this man was drunk at the time he was injured that fact would have been disclosed, and the Postmaster General never would have made the recommendation he did make under the circumstances.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not fair to presume that under the circumstances the man's injury was so great that he was perfectly dazed at the time and did not know his condition, just like the case of the little girl that was shot over here in Virginia when they killed the judge. They asked her whether she was injured or not, and she said "No," and she went on home and within an hour they found her shot through the body. And yet she did not know she was injured. It might be a case of that kind. It seems from the facts that have been produced that the man was dazed and did not know he was injured.

Mr. AUSTIN. According to the report, this is the case in which Edwin M. Riley received injuries in the discharge of his duties which caused his death five days after the receipt of the injuries. This accident occurred, or his death occurred, "from no negligence on the part of the said Riley." Now, in view of that statement in the report, are we justified in bringing into this case at all the idea that this man's accident or death was the result of excessive drinking?

Mr. POU. I did not say that at all. I say there was no evidence to show that he was drinking at the time. The presumption is that he was not.

Mr. AUSTIN. And he came to his death through no fault of his own. He left a wife and seven children, and they are all under 16 years of age. And we are going to pay to that widow and seven children $1,500.

Mr. CULLOP. Where do you find any proof of the statement in this report that his kidney was injured in this accident, or that it was because of the internal hemorrhage that he had, except the report from the hospital, which shows that he had a ruptured kidney, with internal hemorrhage, and delirium tremens? Now, there is not a thing to show that the first of these two injuries named was brought about at all in the accident that he had in the elevator. He went home and declined assistance, and died four days and one hour after the accident. Now, upon what do you predicate that he lost his life through the accident?

Mr. AUSTIN. Here is what I do predicate it on: On the statement of the gentleman having this bill in charge, and the statement of the Postmaster General, who says that Edwin M. Riley, formerly a clerk at $1,000 in the post office at New York, died February 11, 1908, as the result of injuries received while in the performance of duty on February 6, 1908. There is the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I take it that there is no evidence at all in this report or this record to show that this death was produced by, or was the result of, that accident in the elevator. You have just as much right to assume, from anything that appears from this report, that this death was the result of delirium tremens, and that he received some other shock which produced the other two injuries named in the report furnished from the hospital It nowhere shows it was the result of the accident in the elevator.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOP. In a moment. Nor does it further appear that in the investigation of this claim there was any inquiry made at all about his temperate or intemperate habits. It nowhere appears in this report or anything that I have seen or had pointed out that any inquiry upon that subject was made at all during the investigation, but it was taken for granted it seems from the proof that was furnished, although ex parte, as it was, that this injury in all probability produced that result.

Now, while we are legislating and appropriating money to pay for these injuries we should act justly and fairly

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CULLOP. In one moment. Is it proper and right to the other people of the United States that we should jump at conclusions and let sentiment or sympathy determine the result of our action? I take it that it is not. And for one I assure the committee I shall not do so, and I should regret to know that others would be willing to do so. The entire country is interested in these proceedings, and we should not permit sympathy, fear, or prejudice to control our deliberation. Whatever is done in this case or in any of the cases reported here should be done from the standpoint of administering justice, and not to reward or punish any person.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman says there is nothing in the report that shows that the death of this man was the result of the accident. If the gentleman had looked a little further, on page 14, he would have seen the report of the postmaster, made to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor after an investigation of the accident. Item 7 of this report shows that he was—

Injured in accident, as reported, on February 8, 1908.

And in item 9—

Died as the result of such injury on February 11, 1908, at Fordham Hospital.

Mr. CULLOP. That is merely a conclusion. No facts are reported upon which that conclusion of the postmaster could be based. It is the mere statement of a conclusion on his part, doubtless an inference drawn from the report made to him from the hospital, which, in my judgment, is a very violent inference. But, on the contrary, the report of the authorities in charge of the hospital clearly contradicts this conclusion, and they are the only facts shown to have been reported to him.

How he could arrive at such a conclusion in the face of the facts, I am at a loss to understand.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. The committee have made a report upon this bill, and I presume they have heard the evidence and based their conclusion on that evidence. I want to read a sentence from the report of the committee on this matter.

This is a case in which Edward M. Riley, an employee of the United States post office in the city of New York, received injuries in the discharge of his duties which caused his death five days after the injuries were received.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the question of the gentleman?

Mr. RAKER. Is not that the conclusion of the committee that they drew from the evidence presented?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not know that it is. Let me call your attention to this part of this report:

To obtain the exact cause of Mr. Riley's death I communicated with the Fordham Hospital, and in reply they informed me that he "was admitted to this hospital on February 8, 1908, and died on February 11, 1908. He had a ruptured kidney, with interior hemorrhage, and delirium tremens."

Where is there any other syllable of proof furnished? That is signed by the postmaster. Now who could draw the inference, from that statement of the postmaster, that this man died from the injuries that he received in this elevator? This is the statement of the postmaster, from which the conclusion that the gentleman refers to was drawn, and the facts upon which that conclusion was based do not sustain the conclusion, but on the contrary refutes it. Why ignore the best evidence, which was the report made by the hospital, and assume in the face of it the contrary? This one single circumstance standing alone clearly disproves the conclusion of the postmaster in this matter, and shows how unreliable it is. There was warrant to conclude he died from causes other than the elevator injury, but there is no proof that that injury was the cause of his death.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I just wanted to ask the gentleman what he thinks would probably be the effect upon a man of a ruptured kidney and internal hemorrhage resulting therefrom?

Mr. CULLOP. That would depend on how serious it was. That does not prove that he sustained such injuries on the top of the lift in the elevator. Nothing connects those injuries with the accident.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The proof shows that he was carried up on the lift and that he fell.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; and there is no proof that he received serious injury from it or the injuries described.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the opinion of the committee on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not to be presumed that the committee had other evidence than that, when they state in their report that the man died from these injuries?

Mr. CULLOP. But do they not show that they got the information upon which they based their report through the report from the hospital to the postmaster, and does not that report fail to show that he died from injuries received in the elevator?

That is the fact, and no one connects either of these injuries with the accident in the elevator. If they did, it would be different, but they do not connect either the ruptured kidney or the internal hemorrhage with the elevator accident or as having any connection whatever with it. Certainly if that accident did not produce it, it would not create liability on the part of the Government. They do not connect the delirium tremens with the accident. Other causes produced that condition.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not likely that the accident contributed to the delirium tremens.

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly not, and it is just as likely that the use of intoxicants aggravated the other two injuries as much as his fall in the elevator. The violence of the fall is not shown to have been sufficient to produce either, and it may have been something else that did it; some other injury that he may have received. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, for the reason it is not shown that either the fall of the elevator produced or was the proximate cause of the death of the party, and for this reason it does not appear to my mind that the Government in this case should respond in damages.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to take a minute to state what I believe to be the facts in this case. Here was a man who was injured by this elevator.

Mr. BOWMAN. It does not say that he was injured seriously.

Mr. FOSTER. He was injured.

Mr. BOWMAN. What evidence is there of that?

Mr. FOSTER. I take it that the statement here of the postmaster is evidence of that, and the statement of his wife, which is printed in the report of this case two years ago.

Mr. BOWMAN. I do not think there is any evidence to show that he was injured.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. When the evidence shows that the man was carried up to the ceiling of the lobby, from which point he fell, and then he was found to have a ruptured kidney, is there not a presumption that such a fall was sufficient to produce the ruptured kidney?

Mr. FOSTER. This man seems to have been injured, but, as stated, not sufficiently so that he required any assistance in going to his home; but the facts seem to be that after going to his home he became worse, and two days later he was taken to Fordham Hospital. Then, after being there from the 8th until the 11th, he died. I assume that in accordance with the best judgment of the surgeon an operation was performed and the ruptured kidney found to exist. It is likely, too, after his death a post-mortem was had and another examination of him was made. Now, it is more than likely that this injury produced the rupture of his kidney. There was some hemorrhage, but not sufficient to cause death within a short time.

Mr. BUTLER. The excessive use of alcohol would not produce that hemorrhage?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it would not.

Mr. MANN. One drop led to another, perhaps.

Mr. FOSTER. The condition of alcoholism might retard his recovery and was an element to be considered in this case, but the report shows that the man had a ruptured kidney, and I suppose the hospital authorities did not know of their own knowledge how he got it. They simply stated those facts, and their judgment was that the trouble of the kidney was caused by violence of some kind. The previous history of the man being injured would lead them to infer that the injury had caused it.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will allow me, would not the fact of the ruptured kidney cause a good deal of pain and suffering?

Mr. FOSTER. He probably had some, and probably inflammation began there, but of course I do not know how extensive it was.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose he was injured so that he was dazed, might he not have got to his home without any assistance?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes; that is not an unusual thing. People are injured in a way that appears at the time to be not of much consequence, and yet in the course of a few days they are dead. Every Member can call to mind a case of that kind which he has seen or of which he has heard.

Mr. CARTER. That was the case of the young man that was struck with a baseball a few days ago.

Mr. RAKER. Do not some physicians—I do not refer to my distinguished friend from Illinois—prescribe liquor, and if it was used extensively in the room when no nurse was present, might he not get delirium tremens in two days?

Mr. FOSTER. No; that is not correct. Delirium tremens does not come in that way.

Mr. CULLOP. Delirium tremens comes from a long and continued use of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say in reference to this case that the facts reported show that he must have been a drinker. He might not have been drunk at the time he was injured. A man can have delirium tremens and not be drunk all the time, but he would have to be a chronic drinker to have such a trouble. The fact that he used liquor would be an element in the case, but in my judgment there was sufficient evidence here to show that the man was injured seriously enough to cause his death whether he was addicted to the drink habit or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "fifteen hundred" and insert the words "two thousand," so that it will read, "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "fifteen hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that this is the amount fixed by law for employees in the postal service. This man, while not a postal clerk, was in the postal service in connection with his duties in that post office.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean to say that the law fixes $2,000 compensation for the loss of life in the postal service outside of railway mail clerks?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what I understand the Postmaster General says or recommends.

Mr. RAKER. That is what he wants; that is a recommendation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, that is what we voted the other day.

Mr. MANN. That is in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. AUSTIN. What did we carry in the Post Office appropriation bill the other day?

Mr. MANN For the three sea postal clerks who lost their lives on the Titanic, $2,000.

We had an item in the Post Office bill for postal clerks, under the provision of railway mail clerks, $2,000, and we went back and applied that to the three sea postal class clerks who lost their lives on the Titanic.

Mr. CULLOP. It did not apply to the sea service, and so we put in that provision to make it equal with the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I ask that the same amount be fixed in this case that was fixed for the sea postal clerks. In this case the widow was left with seven children, the youngest 4 years of age and all under 16 years of age.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN] there were 2 ayes and 36 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not raise the point of order of no quorum in this case for the reason that a member of the committee stated that they had some doubt as to how this man lost his life.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $698.99 to Richard W. Clifford for permanent injuries to his leg, received at the United States Arsenal at Springfield, Mass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 14 and 15, the words "six hundred and ninety-eight dollars and ninety-nine cents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and eighty-five dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "six hundred and ninety-eight dollars and ninety-nine cents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and eighty-five dollars."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the bill of $698 I think is one year's pay. I believe that is the way they arrive at it—$2.23 a day. The department, in reporting on this bill, says that this man had through his injury lost 45 days' pay, amounting to $100, and the hospital and medical expenses amounted to $85, and the entire loss was about $185.

The report would seem to indicate that the man was injured so that he could not work thereafter very satisfactorily, and the department also said that during the year following the injury he was absent from the armory less than six days on account of illness, which does not seem to indicate that he had any great loss on account of it.

The department further says that in the judgment of the Judge Advocate General this case is a meritorious one to the extent of the loss sustained by the complainant, amounting as above stated to $185.

Here is a man who incurs a slight injury which causes his absence from work 45 days with a loss of $100, and they pay him that and his hospital and medical expenses, which is not usual, of $85 more.

Mr. POU. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee accepts his amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman how he arrives at the amount that they strike out of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. One year's services.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a little of that report. I am not in favor of allowing an injured man to be cut down entirely as this amendment does. The report says:

Physicians and an ambulance were called and he was taken to the Mercy Hospital, his name being checked off the pay roll as the ambulance passed out of the gates of the armory grounds. The commandant, Col. S. E. Blunt, subsequently gave $10 of his own funds for the payment of the physicians and the ambulance called.

The wound gave much trouble, and a number of bone splinters had to be removed, and for several weeks Clifford was in the hospital. He returned to work on December 23. He has had trouble with his leg continually since then and has been much reduced in earning capacity. He has lost some time by illness, especially one long period of typhoid fever, which was partially ascribed to his weakened constitution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this man was injured——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman ought to read the next paragraph referring to the hospital bill. Put that in, too.

Mr. FOWLER. I supposed the gentleman from Illinois read that. I so understood that he did, but I am calling the attention of the committee to an injured leg from which pieces of bone were taken out and a leg which has continually given this man trouble, and to allow him simply for the time he lost——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I simply suggested to the gentleman, and he did not catch the force of my suggestion, that he add $64 hospital bill and $26 medical attendance, which almost amounts to what the gentleman from Illinois proposes to give him by this amendment, and in addition to that he had typhoid fever and a splintered bone, making a permanent injury.

Mr. FOWLER. I included that.

I am not, Mr. Chairman, talking about giving him compensation for what outlay he was compelled to make in and about his recovery, but I am talking about the permanency of his injury. The man who never had a permanent injury does not know how to sympathize with a man who has. That man who has never gone through life dragging a lame leg from his work to his home does not know the hardships which are entailed upon that poor man. Here is a laborer, a man dependent upon his labor for the support of himself and his family, with a broken leg, with bones taken out and that leg continually causing him trouble ever since. Now, Mr. Chairman, of course this amount is nothing to me personally, but I do say, Mr. Chairman, that it is unfair to the injured man to cut the compensation, as the gentleman from Michigan well says, to an amount at or about that which he has expended in endeavoring to be cured of his injury. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his amendment to this bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield? I want to call his attention——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois who last spoke referred to this as a permanent disability and the report shows it was not. This is one of the few items upon which the full committee disagreed at the time. I voted in favor of the amount, in accordance with that now advocated by the minority leader, and propose to support it at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 30, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $5,000 to Rose B. Armour, widow of Samuel A. Armour, who lost his life in the discharge of his duty at Sperry Light, in the harbor of New Haven, Conn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman makes that motion I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 4 and strike out the word "permanent."

Mr. MANN. That is in line 8.

Mr. POU. In line 15, so as to strike out the word "permanent," page 2, line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 2, line 15, and strike out the word "permanent." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is an item to pay the widow of a lighthouse keeper $5,000. Five thousand dollars to this woman will undoubtedly be some help to her, but after all very little compensation for the loss of her husband. This man was in the Lighthouse Service, not so dangerous a service as the Life-Saving Service. If he had been in the Life-Saving Service at the time this accident occurred and lost his life his widow would have received one year's pay. Since that time we have amended the law as to the Life-Saving Service and provided for two years' pay in case of loss of life. Those men are compelled to do their work in time of danger. Now, here is a lighthouse keeper who, believing that he should go from the shore to the lighthouse station, lost his life in that attempt, and there will be no compensation under the general compensation act because the lighthouse keepers were not included in that as hazardous employment. Upon what basis can the committee defend an appropriation of $5,000 to a widow of a lighthouse keeper who lost his life in a special case when for a more hazardous service under the general law we make provision for a smaller amount? It is impossible to fairly and justly legislate in Congress as a matter of special favoritism. I shall not move to amend the amount, because with all kindness to the gentlemen who are here this afternoon I appreciate the fact through years of experience with claims that most, if not all, of the gentlemen here—nine-tenths of them, at least—have claims on the Claims Calendar, and they stick together. But let me warn the Committee on Claims and the House that when they attempt to legislate in special cases as a mere matter of favoritism their bills have a rocky road to travel before they are signed by the President and become the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I think this special case deserves to go in the RECORD as part of my remarks and I desire to insert in the RECORD the report of the committee in regard to this item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This is a case in which Samuel A. Armour, keeper of the Sperry Lighthouse, off the port of New Haven, Conn., in the discharge of his duties, on January 8, 1907, in a small boat, had carried ashore one Walter Gill, who had been at the station repairing the fog-signal engines. The said Samuel A. Armour in attempting to return to his post through a howling wind and raging sea was drowned, and his body was not recovered until several weeks after. According to the evidence submitted, Capt. Armour realized that the trip back to his post would be a perilous one, but did not regard his own safety, as his duty required him to be back in charge of his lights, which were especially needed in such a storm. He lost his life in public service, but all through the long, dark night Mrs. Rose B. Armour, his wife and the claimant under H. R. 7224, kept the lights burning just as her husband had always done. She was alone in the lighthouse and did her duty. The Hon. Oscar S. Straus, Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, under date of February 4, 1908, heartily indorsed the bill for $10,000. Your committee, recognizing the peril of official duty performed in time of peace, believe that the dependent family should receive governmental assistance in the same degree as is based on our present pension laws, and we therefore heartily recommend that a bill carrying the sum of $5,000 for the relief of Rose B. Armour do pass.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment; page 2, line 18, strike out the word "five" where it occurs and substitute therefor the word "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were—ayes 16, noes 21.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty Members are present——

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $52.50 to Albert W. Phelps for permanent loss of time and injuries received in the United States armory at Springfield, Mass.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 3, line 23, insert after the word "permanent" the words "loss of time and."

Mr. AUSTIN. What was the character of the injuries that the committee valued at $52.50?

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that is all that is asked for.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to know what it was. If you are valuing a human life at $420, that was probably the loss of a leg.

Mr. MANN. He was knocked down by a belt and his head cut in two places.

Mr. LEVY. I think he was away only one day.

Mr. POU. He was knocked down and as a consequence was out from May 13, 1908, to June 24, 1908.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $500 to Raymond R. Ridenour for injury to his hand while in the discharge of his duty on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This man lost his thumb and forefinger, which are not very nice things to lose.

Mr. BUTLER. They are pretty useful, especially when you have got to wind your watch at night.

Mr. MANN. Well, most people have another thumb and forefinger. What is the basis on which you pay him $500? This man had no serious injury He lost no serious amount of time.

Mr. WILLIS. Perhaps I can give the gentleman some information. It is not my bill, I will say. It was introduced by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR], but he is necessarily absent.

Mr. MANN. Though he may be absent he is still present, because he has three items in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I know he has. He is very active in behalf of his constituents.

Mr. MANN. That is as many probably as any three here together have.

Mr. BUTLER. I wonder how he gets them reported.

Mr. WILLIS. I have here a statement from Mr. Ridenour, the beneficiary under this bill, that may throw a little light on the subject. He was hurt in the shops at Gorgona, and in a letter he makes this statement concerning the injury, somewhat similar to the statement that appears in the committee report:

I was hurt in Gorgona shops on the 17th day of November, 1906. It happened one Saturday while I was cleaning my machine. The oiler neglected to oil the loose pulley on the countershaft, causing it to stick and start up without warning, catching my thumb and forefinger in gears, mashing them entirely off.

Here is a part of the statement which, to some extent, will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois:

Although I worked several months on the Isthmus after my injury I have not been able to secure work at my trade and have been forced to seek other employment at less wages. Also, I am unable to pass any physical examinations for railroad or other work where an examination is necessary.

In other words, this man is a machinist, and the injury which he has received, the loss of the thumb and forefinger of the left hand, incapacitates him for that work, and he finds he is unable to pass an examination for railroad work. And while I am not a member of the committee, I presume the committee took that into consideration, namely, that it was a permanent injury to this man and incapacitated him for the performance of the duties of his trade.

Mr. MANN. And yet if he had received this injury after May 30, 1908, he would have received and taken without question one month's pay. But because he did not receive his injury until after May 30, 1908, but received it in the latter part of 1906, it is proposed to give him several months' pay. Now, upon what claim of justice can that be based?

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman think an allowance of $500 for the loss of thumb and forefinger for a man whose trade is that of machinist an unreasonable allowance?

Mr. MANN. There is no compensation sufficient for a man who loses one of his members, if that is what the gentleman asks. But there is a provision of general law, which now remains in the statute books, for compensation to employees on the Panama Canal, fixing the rate of compensation. I have tried to have that enlarged. It has not yet been done. But so long as it remains there, no one can bring any bills for amounts larger for people who have suffered since May 30, 1908. Now you propose, as a matter of comity, to extend the provisions of that act back to May 30, 1908, and to double or treble the compensation because it occurred prior to May, 1908, whereas if it had occurred after that there would be no question about the compensation.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman evidently has not listened to his colleague, because his colleague from Illinois stated a number of times that in the deliberations of the committee, reference was had not only to the law, but to the equity in the case. Now, here is a man who is permanently disabled that can not do the work he has learned to do. He is a machinist, and if he earns a living he has got to learn some other trade. He is incapacitated, and, as I recall the statement of my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR], it was to this effect, that he had personal knowledge that this man had sought to get employment in railroad work and had failed because of his injury. So that this is an illustration of the application of well-recognized principles of justice and equity—not the letter of the law but the spirit of the law shall rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows it is not possible for this House to go on this sort of basis of equity in these cases.

Mr. WILLIS. I was following the statement of the gentleman's colleague, a member of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is a matter of opinion. The gentleman here would propose to take a similar case to those that have occurred since May 30, 1908, and there are plenty of them, and increase the compensation.

There have been many people injured on the Panama Canal work since May 30, 1908, who have taken the compensation allowed by the compensation act. Has anyone introduced a bill to enlarge that amount in any particular case? I guess not; but you propose to treat cases happening before 1908 on a different basis from those that have happened later and to pay a larger amount. I do not believe anybody can justify it.

Mr. WILLIS. How does the gentleman make his estimate? He made a statement of what would be received under the present law.

Mr. MANN. I said the man would receive one month's pay, at the rate of 65 cents an hour, but I did not estimate the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I would like to have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent to proceed one minute longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that while recognizing the fact that no doubt the gentleman from Illinois has stated technically the letter of the law, here is a case that ought to appeal to the humanity of this House. Here is a man who is a machinist, a hard-working laboring man, and without any fault of his own, while at his post of duty, he received this permanent injury. It is not just a little disability that can be cured, but he has lost the thumb and forefinger of his left hand.

Now, then, as a machinist, obviously, he can not work at his trade. He is disqualified for that, and as a railroad man, although he has had experience in that work, he is also disqualified for that. It seems to me this allowance of $500 is not unreasonable; in fact, it ought to be much larger.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I have been reading the report on this matter—the report of the committee—and seeking the statement that this man was unable to do any work in the line that he followed for years, and there is nothing in it to that effect.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman did not understand me correctly. I have read from the man's letter addressed to my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR]; and also my colleague, as I recollect it, had a personal interview with this man, in which he stated that he had endeavored to get work, and because of this accident he was unable to do so.

Mr. RAKER. What was his business? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. WILLIS. He was a machinist and was permanently injured while working in the great railroad shops at Gorgona.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment:

On page 3, line 5, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert the words "one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 5, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert the words "one hundred."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, what has become of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois on the preceding claim? That has not been acted upon, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a pro forma amendment. That was withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I would do anything——

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, I want to ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODDENBERY. On page 3, line 5, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 5, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have sought to be reasonable and conservative in these various amendments that have been offered here in the committee, but it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that amendment is utterly unfair and in its terms ridiculous. Here is a laboring man, a man that works not simply with his head, but works with his hands; and, at his post of duty, without any fault of his own whatsoever, but because somebody else neglected his duty, because another employee had neglected the performance of his duty, and neglected properly to oil the shafting, the pulley sticks, and the man loses his thumb and forefinger on his left hand.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is perfectly absurd to say to this American laboring man who was injured, and permanently injured—not temporarily injured, but, I repeat, permanently injured—and so injured as to disqualify him for the performance of the work at his trade, namely, that of a skilled machinist; I say it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is almost ridiculous for this Congress to say to this man that he is to receive for such a loss as that—for dismemberment, for an injury that disqualifies him for his work—the pitiful, paltry sum of $175. This man is asking for help simply because he has been disqualified for work. He is a hard-working man, and wants to work; and yet by the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia you say to this man, who has lost his thumb and forefinger of his left hand, so that he can not work as a machinist any longer—you propose, if you adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, that he shall have only $175. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that that is parsimonious, unfair, and unpatriotic. I do not believe that this House intends to do such an unfair and unreasonable thing as that. Are you willing to say that the hand of an American workingman is worth only $175? I am not.

Now I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD].

Mr. REDFIELD. I happen to have employed a great many men of this kind myself, and I want to say that $175 would not more than represent what this man would lose every four months as long as he lives by the difference in wages for which he would have to work all his life long on account of his injury.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that I have as much sympathy in my nature as the average Member of Congress or as the average man, and misfortune and suffering always appeal to my sympathies. But the United States Government is not liable, and never has been liable, to pay its employees anything on account of injuries received in its service. The rule of respondeat superior never was intended to apply to the Government of the United States. But Congress, in reference to those engaged in dangerous work in the Government service, has modified that universal rule of law so as to compensate in a certain degree those who are injured while engaged in such employment. It has discarded the rule against liability applied to all governments, city, State, county, and national, on that subject, and has said it will pay a certain amount, in some cases one year's wages or two years' wages, or the wages lost during the time the employee is disabled from work. So that it does not do, nor is it the proper spirit, I think, to undertake to charge up a liability against the United States as you would against the ordinary employer under the law of master and servant. Whatever is paid is a pure bounty that the United States confers upon those engaged in its service, because it was the right of the Government to say whether it would pay anything or not. It is a pure gratuity which we are giving to these people. I think it is proper that we should give it to them. But there is no legal obligation resting upon the Government of the United States to pay for injuries. It is a mere gift.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question? I think he asked me a few when I was on the floor.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; and the gentleman declined to answer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT. Go ahead.

Mr. AUSTIN. Do you believe in passing a law by Congress which will force the corporations of this country to pay their employees for the loss of life or limb by accident during such employment?

Mr. BARTLETT. I believe every sovereignty that has the duty to enact laws should do away with the old, brutal, common-law rule of fellow servant and inaugurate a law that wherever an employee is injured and has not contributed to that injury the employer should be made to pay for it. My State has for nearly a hundred years had such a law on its statute books. I voted for the employers' liability law, which fixed a liability upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce, but I do not propose to vote for the bill which the Senate has passed and sent to this House, known as the employees' compensation law, which destroys the right of railroad employees to obtain compensation under the present employers' liability act and fixes compensation at very inadequate rates.

Mr. AUSTIN. If it is right and just to compel corporations to pay their employees for injuries which result from accident, why should not the Government apply the same kind of a rule to its own service?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because the Government is engaged in a different kind of business. The Government of the United States is not the same kind of employer as a railroad.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is operating a railroad on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. BARTLETT. Temporarily, yes; and I hope it will soon go out of the buisness of operating a railroad on the Isthmus of Panama, or in any other portion of the country. I do not think it is the business of the Government to operate railroads.

Mr. AUSTIN. But there are a number of places, in arsenals and in other places where machinery is employed, where the liability of the employee to injury is as great as it is in the service of any private corporation.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have provided a law for the compensation of employees so injured, and if there is any particular case that appeals to the generosity of the Government Congress can take care of such a case; but here in this bill we are undertaking to pay people according to a certain well-defined policy of the Government, now established, and if the gentleman wants to change the law let him introduce a bill and ask to have it passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like two minutes more to call attention to this particular case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, the $175 proposed in the amendment will not compensate the man for the loss of his finger and thumb, nor will $500, the amount reported by the committee, because when a man sues in court he has a right to recover for the pain and suffering and for the mutilation of his person. That compensation is exacted of the employer on account of the negligence of himself or his agent.

This man was absent from his work 23½ days. It does not appear that he is unable to do work now. He has simply suffered the mutilation—the loss of his finger and his thumb. In my judgment it is not proper to put upon the Government of the United States the same rule of compensation, in the way of compensating for pain and suffering and for mutilation of the person, that you put upon the private employer, like a railroad or manufacturing corporation. I think this amendment ought to pass.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, it is beneath the dignity of the United States to offer $175 to a man who has lost one of his hands. [Applause.] If we are going to give him anything at all, we ought not to insult the intelligence of a mechanic. We ought not to say to him that we will offer him $175 for one-half of his capacity. For that reason I propose to vote against this amendment. We are not setting precedents now. There will be very few of these cases coming up, because the statute of 1908 covers most of them. I shall never vote for an amendment that will offer only $175 to a mechanic whose hand has lost its cunning as the result of an accident. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment and in favor of the bill as it stands, giving him at least $500.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the committee, but I do want to say one word. If we recognize any liability and place this amount at $175, we have not considered the injury or the damage done to this man. If you give him anything, you ought to at least put it somewhere near the amount that he is entitled to. Just stop and think, gentlemen; there is no question of precedent here. The man has lost his thumb and the forefinger of his left hand. He is a mechanic, and you say to him that the loss of that part of his hand is worth $175 to his future capability of earning a livelihood. You are acting as jurors in this case for this man. In any court of the land, would you think of bringing in a verdict of $175 for the loss of a man's earning capacity?

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. If you were sitting as a juror, there would have to be some cause for the liability before you would render a verdict, would there not?

Mr. RAKER. Clearly.

Mr. CULLOP. In the report, if the gentleman has read it, he will see that this man was sent to the hospital for treatment immediately after the accident occurred, and made no statement. "Was accident due to negligence of injured person, or whom? No one."

Now, if you sat on a jury with that as the evidence, you would not return a verdict for the plaintiff. If you did, you would do it in violation of law and the instructions of any court that would instruct a jury upon that question.

Mr. RAKER. But when you vote to give this man $175 you vote that he was not negligent. You fix the price of the loss of a thumb and a finger at $175, conceding that there was no negligence on his part when the injury was done. You must concede that before you can pay him a cent.

Why, I saw a jury in the city of San Francisco render a verdict of $1,000 for a man that had the third finger of his right hand bent back. He was an Italian and claimed that he was unable to do the work in the future. I thought the verdict was just. He was reaching up to oil the machine and the belt slipped and brought his hand back in this way, and the jury gave him, as I say, $1,000.

Conceding that there was no negligence on the part of this man, the point I want to present to the House is that if you give him a cent you must necessarily find that there was no negligence on his part when you award him any amount of damages.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on that point a Chicago jury rendered a verdict of $5,000 for the loss of a little finger.

Mr. RAKER. And I want to say, in addition to that, here is a mechanic who must necessarily use his forefinger and thumb of the left hand if he becomes efficient. You are taking from that man the very thing that is necessary for him to earn a competency thereafter. It seems to me that it is trifling. It seems to me that it is saying to the laboring man, a man that is a mechanic, "we concede that you were not negligent. We have conceded that you are not in the wrong. We say to you that the loss of a thumb and a finger of the left hand of a mechanic is only worth $175."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,500 to the heirs of Charles E. Stump, who lost his life from injuries received while in discharge of his duties on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman if this is a year's pay, and what business he was engaged in at the time of the injury?

Mr. MANN. He was a railroad conductor, and this is a year's pay.

Mr. POU. Under the act of May 30, 1908, a year's compensation would be given him. We based the report on that fact.

Mr. AUSTIN. How much of a family did he leave?

Mr. MANN. He was married and left a widow.

Mr. POU. He left a widow.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert the words "five thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8, strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five thousand."

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert the words "three thousand," the amount that the committee voted for the widow of the lighthouse keeper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three thousand."

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,500 to Charles T. Hanson for injuries to his right foot while in the employ of the War Department in the Quartermaster's Department, at Boston, Mass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 16, strike out the words "injuries to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "loss of," so that it will read: "loss of his right foot."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this case the claimant, Charles T. Hanson, was a deck hand on one of the boats of the Quartermaster's Department at Boston. He is said to have received injuries which necessitated the amputation of his right foot. The bill carries $1,500 for him. That, of course, is not based on the compensation of a year's salary. The very next case carries $1,500, although in the report it is printed $730. I do not know whose error that is; whether the amount is increased or not.

Mr. REDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. REDFIELD. The error is my own. The bill was introduced in ignorance of the man's financial losses, and it was introduced only on the basis of one year's pay. I have received a statement of Attorney General Bonaparte, which I have here, although it is not a part of the record, from which it appears that the man suffered actually the loss of $322 in addition to a reduction of his rating for one year and eight months. In consideration of those facts, in addition to his having lost his foot, the committee saw fit to put him on a level with the other man.

Mr. MANN. In the case before the committee a deck hand is to be paid $1,500 for the loss of a right foot. He was employed at the rate of $45 a month, and since the loss of his foot he has been placed in the classified service and his pay increased to $60 a month. Now, upon what basis does the committee arrive at its conclusion? If the law had been applicable he would have received one year's pay, at $45 a month. He lost his foot, not through the negligence of the Government, and then the committee proposes to pay him $1,500, although the loss of his right foot has given him a Government job at $60, an increase of $15 a month more than he was getting before, and a permanent place in the classified service. In the next case, referred to by the gentleman from New York, a bill was introduced for $730, one year's pay, and the bill reported to the House now carries $1,500. Why, they have gone crazy on the subject of compensation. Gentlemen want to pay two or three times as much compensation in special cases, because Members of Congress introduce bills and chase after the committee, than the law would allow, and if the law allowed it in these cases no one would introduce a bill. The committee has not endeavored to report cases that are covered by the general law, yet they propose to pay two or three times as much to men whose accidents occurred before the law took place, one of whom obtained a better job and a permanent life job from the Government because of his accident.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 3, line 15, strike out the words "one thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, strike out the words "one thousand."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. So far as $1,500 being a compensation for the loss of a limb, as measured by the standard usually obtaining in our courts, it is wholly inadequate. The same statement would apply to all of these cases. Distinguished gentlemen oppose amendments to reduce these claims, as stated by them, on the idea that the Government can not afford to be niggardly. Gentlemen can not insist on the Government paying the same measure of damage as corporations and then ask us to pass this bill. What the Government should pay and the corporation should pay is measured by different standards. I offer this amendment, which proposes to give to this man $500 on account of the loss of his leg. It is not full compensation, neither is $1,500, by the standard of measuring damages by courts and juries. It is to be observed that this claimant was getting about $45 a month at the time of his injury and he is now getting from the Government $60 a month, with a permanent job.

Mr. POU. If the gentleman will permit, does the gentleman think a man ought to be made subject to a penalty because in his maimed condition he has equipped himself to do good service and work?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Not at all.

Mr. POU. That seems to be the contention of the gentleman.

Mr. RODDENBERY. He is now drawing $60 a month. The matter was reported on by the War Department, and you will find on page 32 of the report a full statement of the case. The Judge Advocate General writes:

The claim is believed to be meritorious for a proper measure of relief, but it is believed the amount paid should be adjusted to the requirements of the permanent law.

Now, if this claim were adjudicated upon under the act of 1908, which is the permanent law, he would get about $500.

Mr. BARTLETT. Five hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. RODDENBERY. And under general law that would be all he would get, even if he had lost the leg and had no artificial limb and had no employment. Other injured employees of the Government are compensated under the general law. There is no reason why favoritism should be shown in this or any case by special legislation. Now, to the justice of this case. This man has employment. He received his injury prior to 1908, and under present law he is entitled to nothing at all, nor was he at the date of injury. I can not perceive the justice or the equity in incorporating in an omnibus bill a special act for one man, giving him $1,500 for the loss of a limb, when if injury had happened in 1909 or any year afterwards under existing law he would be entitled to but $540.

This claimant received his injury in 1905, and at that time there was no legal recognition of such claims for payment. In view of both the law and facts, neither sound reason nor wise policy justifies the committee to antedate the enactment of the general law and specialize by giving this individual $1,500, while others similarly situated, except as to time, are allowed but $500. To me such action appears wholly without defense on the basis of justice, on the basis of common sense, on the basis of fairness, or any basis or any standard, legal or moral, that can be set up. The gentleman from California, I believe, stated that to offer a man $175 for loss of a thumb was beneath the dignity of the United States. Measured by that standard, $420 which was voted for in the bill a few moments ago to a widow for the loss of her husband is beneath the dignity of the United States, yet it is in accord with the existing law that the Congress has passed for such cases and by which we are bound.

This claimant has no general legal status whatever entitling him to any sum. The amendment I propose gives him the same compensation as the law gives all others. It is the amount persons with like injury can lawfully claim, although such persons may be wholly disabled and without employment. Why, then, should this claimant have more than other unfortunates, especially in view of the admitted facts in the record showing that this claimant is now and for more than five years has been continually drawing a salary from the Government of $60 per month? Others for loss of leg are allowed one-third as much and are not so fortunate as to have permanent Government employment at fair monthly salary. I submit the amendment to the wisdom of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 20.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-two gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 23451) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property, and had found itself without a quorum, whereupon he ordered the roll to be called, and reported the list of absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and thirty-one Members are present—a quorum.

During the roll call the following occurred:

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the call on a vote on this amendment?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the roll call can not be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken.

After the roll call:

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates as Speaker pro tempore for to-morrow the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

BILLS ON PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] will take the chair.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 23451) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. BOURNE, and Mr. SIMMONS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12013. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Corsicana, Tex., certain land for alley purposes;

H. R. 13774. An act providing for the sale of the old post-office property at Providence, R. I., by public auction;

H. R. 22301. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Uvalde, Tex., a certain strip of land;

H. R. 22343. An act to require supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, to submit their annual reports at the end of each fiscal year; and

H. R. 22731. An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend Oreille River, Wash.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1. An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROWN, for six days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. HELM, for two weeks, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, May 12, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Elizabeth River, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 750); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an appropriation claim of Arnott's Docks for damages by collision with U. S. steel dredge Navesink on February 2, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 751); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20684) providing for the sale of the Lemhi School and Agency plant and lands on the former Lemhi Reservation, in the State of Idaho, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 691), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PATTEN of New York, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred sundry bills, reported in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc., accompanied by a report (No. 692), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20501) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange, or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 694), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24227) to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to grant additional authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out certain provisions of the public-building acts, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 695), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 693), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22756) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Scott, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, May 12, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. SIMS].

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Love! O Life! our faith and sight
Thy presence maketh one;
As through transfigured clouds of white
We trace the noonday sun.

So, to our mortal eyes subdued,
Flesh-veiled, but not concealed,
We know in Thee the fatherhood
And heart of God revealed.

Blessed faith, hope, and love which Thou hast woven into the tissues of our being, which holds us close to Thee in joys or sorrows, in life or death. We know that the body dies but the spirit which animated it lives in some higher realm where its longings, hopes, and aspirations will be fulfilled. "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead and living." We thank Thee for the strong, pure, noble, brave character possessed by the Member in whose memory we are assembled. Quick to perceive, strong in action, whether on the field of battle or in the quiet, peaceful pursuits of life, he fulfilled to a conspicuous degree the expectations of those who called him to service in State or Nation.

His work well done, the angel of death bore him to a higher service. The work of a true man lives after him, for nothing pure, nothing sublime can perish. Comfort, we beseech Thee, his colleagues and friends and the dear wife who kept close to his side and shared his joys and sorrows, victories and defeats; and bring her in Thine own time to dwell with him in love forever. And Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Journal was approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GORDON.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 535.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON GORDON, late a Member of this House from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I knew Gen. GORDON well. We both came into the Sixtieth Congress, having been elected in 1906. I boarded with him at the same hotel and sat with him and his good wife at the same table during the first session of that Congress. I was associated with him for four years in the Committee on Military Affairs, and perhaps knew him as well and as intimately as any Member outside of his own State.

As a preliminary, allow me to say that the war in which Gen. GORDON was engaged was the most remarkable war in all history. There is nothing to compare with it in intensity and desperation. It was the longest enduring war of modern times, and the fiercest and bloodiest battles in all history were fought during the four years of its continuance. During the war of the American Revolution, which lasted for 7 years, only 7 battles were fought per year. But 49 battles were fought during the entire war. In the Civil War over 2,000 battles were fought, and in 882 battles more men were killed and wounded than in the bloodiest battle of the American Revolution—the Battle of the Brandywine.

There is another peculiarity about the Civil War that attaches to no other war: It was the only war in all history where the soldiers on both sides sang patriotic and heroic songs on the march and around the bivouac fires at night. During the whole of the war of the American Revolution, lasting seven years, there was not a patriotic song written. The nearest they came to it was Yankee Doodle, the words of which are silly and without patriotic import, but the music was well adapted to the fife and drum.

In the War of 1812 there was not a patriotic song written or sung by our soldiers. The Star Spangled Banner, by Francis Scott Key, in 1814, was written near the close of the war. He was on a British man-of-war and saw the bombardment of Fort Henry at night and saw through the night that "our flag was still there." This grand national anthem was set to music and first sung by a Scotch actor, Ferdinand Durand, in a Baltimore theater. The music of the Star Spangled Banner was from "Anacreon in Heaven," a melody written by John Stafford Smith, of London, England, in 1773. But in our Civil War, on both sides of the battle line, over 100 war songs were inspired that were sung by our soldiers. One of the grandest lyrics of the war on the southern side was written by James R. Randall, of Maryland. He was but a stripling boy, almost, when he wrote it, although he had graduated in a Maryland college and was at the time a professor of a Louisiana college. He wrote that poetic gem to induce his State to secede from the Union. I first heard that song down on the Holstein River, in east Tennessee, about 20 miles south of Knoxville. It was our first day in from over the Cumberland Mountains and I was ordered to place a picket line around our camp from right to left, resting on the river.

Just as I was placing the picket line upon the left, by the road that ran along the river, I heard a sweet voice singing:

The despot's heel is on thy shore, Maryland!
His touch is at thy temple door, Maryland!
Avenge the patriotic gore
That flecked the streets of Baltimore,
And be the battle queen of yore,
Oh, Maryland, my Maryland!

I had not heard a woman's voice in song for over a year. I looked down into the thicket and caught a glimpse of a cottage by the river side and saw a girl at a piano. Just then there was a picket shot on the line, and I heard the clang of a saber, followed by the rattling of hoofs. The captain of a small force of Confederate scouts galloped out into the darkness. The song stopped at a semicolon, and I never heard the last of it until our camp was at Salisbury, N. C., after the war was over, and I never knew who wrote it until then.

Another song, one of the most thrilling dramatic poems of the entire war, was by Father Ryan, of Mobile, Ala., who was the chaplain of an Alabama regiment. He wrote that poem the day after Lee's surrender. He was upon a bed of sickness and racked with fever, but he wrote that saddest of all the war lyrics in a single hour. I saw it first in a newspaper printed at Salisbury on old brown paper, the only paper the Confederates had, at the close of the war. It was claimed by half a dozen song writers of the South. I never knew who wrote it until I purchased a copy of Father Ryan's poems, published in Baltimore 20 years after the war. I quote from memory a stanza from that song:

Furl that banner, for its weary;
Round its staff 'tis drooping dreary.
Furl it, fold it, it is best,
For there's not a man to wave it,
And there's no one left to lave it
In the blood which heroes gave it.
Furl it, hide it, let it rest!

Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON was the peer of any officer who ever drew a sword along a battle line. He was in the midst of the fray at Missionary Ridge and the two days' terrible combat at Chickamauga. He was in all that 110 days' campaign of constant skirmish and battle from Rocky Pace Mountain to Atlanta, including 20 desperate battles.

Franklin was Gen. GORDON'S last battle, and Franklin was the fiercest, the bloodiest, and the most signal battle of the entire war. The war histories tell us more of Nashville, a 2 days' battle 15 days later, but Nashville was a dress parade compared with Franklin. I was at the front in both battles. Gen. GORDON was a brigadier general in command of a brigade at Franklin, and he was abreast of the front line of bayonets in that mad, wild, desperate charge. He was wounded and captured on the Federal breastworks. In the books of war the place for a brigadier general is in the center and rear of his brigade, but Gen. GORDON was a chivalric knight with flaming sword leading that line of gleaming bayonets.

In Col. Wilson J. Vance's war history I find the following paragraph on the Battle of Franklin:

There was greater loss, greater sacrifice, and more bloody fighting on the part of old Frank Cheatham's men on that beautiful Wednesday eve, November 30, 1864, than took place on any field of the Crimean War. While 37 per cent of Lord Cardigan's 673 men were killed or wounded in the memorable charge of the 600 at Balaklava, more than half of Gen. Cleburn's and Brown's divisions were left dead or wounded in the fields and gardens of that little Tennessee town.

That brilliant Tennessee journalist and poet and historian, John Trotwood Moore, in his new book, entitled "The Bishop of Cotton Town," gives a chapter on the Battle of Franklin. John Trotwood Moore was there. He was too young a half century ago for a soldier, but from a hill overlooking the lovely valley where the cold steel of the Blue and the Gray clashed for six terrible hours he saw this historic conflict, the most desperate of all the centuries.

And of all the descriptions of that contest from the Confederate side his depiction is the most realistic and dramatic. Let me quote from John Trotwood Moore on the opening of the battle:

There stands to-day, as it stood then, in front of the town of Franklin, on the highest point of the ridge, a large linden tree, now showing the effects of age. It was half past 3 in the afternoon of November 30, 1864, when Gen. Hood rode unattended to that tree, threw the stump of the leg that was shot off at Chickamauga over the pommel of his saddle, drew out his field glass, and sat looking across the valley at the position of the enemy. It was the silence that always precedes a great battle. Presently the silence was broken by the soft strains of music which floated up from the town below. It was the Federal band playing "Just before the battle, mother." The men in gray on the hill and the men in blue in the valley below listened. There were tears in many eyes, as the pathetic words were well remembered—

"Just before the battle, mother,
I am thinking most of you."

I was at Franklin, on the Union side, and I saw and heard it all from an advanced position near the center of the Federal line. I saw and heard it all—all that a soldier can see and hear amid the glare, the thunderous roar, the stifling battle smoke, the yells of the victors, the agonizing groans of the wounded and dying. I remember the scene just before the battle, as described by John Trotwood Moore; I see it now as I saw it then—a lovely valley basking in the mellow glory of November sunshine. I see the little town of Franklin, quiet yet restless, just inside the circle of the Federal lines. These lines extended from river to river. There were orchards and meadows and gardens and meandering brooks that shone in the sunlight like threads of silver. There were patches of woodland in the rich foliage of the autumn leaves, in scarlet, gold, and green, tinged with the early frosts to gladden and glorify their fall.

What a pathetic picture to soothe the homesick heart of the tired soldier, sick of war and its ghastly carnage. Here was Gen. Pat. Cleburne, the soldier whose brigade of stalwart veterans had, in the retreat from Chickamauga, checked the whole Federal Army at Ringgold Gap. Gen. Cleburne expressed a wish that should he die in battle it should be in this lovely valley. It was a prophetic wish, for only five hours later he and 13 other general field officers yielded up their lives around the bloody battle lines of Franklin. I shall not attempt to tell of the awful struggle at Franklin, only to give some battle memories that came into my life on that terrible afternoon.

I was speaking of Gen. Hood, the commanding general, who sat on his horse under the linden tree taking a survey of the Federal lines. Suddenly he closed his field glasses, wheeled his horse, and rode back to Gen. Stewart, with the command, "General, we will charge the Federal line of battle in front." Stewart formed his corps on the right. Gen. Cheatham formed his corps on the left. A cannon on the ridge sounded the signal for the charge. With bayonets fixed, the heavy columns, all veterans, marched with a steady and even tread down the slope. The fiercest and bloodiest battle of the centuries was on. Gen. Forrest's cavalry on the extreme right rested on the Harpeth River.

In 1874 a southern soldier, who was in that battle line with Gen. Cleburne, wrote a valuable article on this marvelous charge in the Southern Magazine, then edited by Gen. Basil Duke, of Louisville. I quote a paragraph:

The hottest part of the line was a black-locust thicket just at the right of the Columbia Pike.

This is correct; I was at that part of the line. I have a distinct recollection of that locust thicket, and I can see now, as I saw then, that waving line of shining bayonets as it rushed to the works with that defiant rebel yell, and the mad and murderous conflict that followed. On the left of my command the Federal lines gave way. Gen. Cleburne was abreast of that charging line. He fell just at the left of my regiment. John Trotwood Moore, in depicting this furious charge, says:

As they rushed on the Federal line of battle a gray figure on a chestnut horse rode diagonally across the front of the charging column. The horse went down within 50 yards of the breastworks. The rider arose, waved his sword, and led his men on foot to the ramparts, then his brave form staggered and fell against the Federal line, pierced with minie balls. His corps was swept back under a terrific fire of musketry, nearly one-half either killed or wounded.

A few yards on the Confederate right Gen. GORDON, who was also abreast of the charging line, fell, just under the fresh earth of the breastworks. He was wounded and captured, as he refused to fall back. Near this spot Gen. Adams also fell. He stood upon the parapet and was fatally shot, his horse falling across the breastworks. My old friend, Gen. Jack Casement, of Ohio, was commanding a Union brigade where Gen. Adams fell. Deeply touched with his splendid courage, Gen. Casement had cotton brought from the old ginhouse and placed under the dying soldier's head. "You are too brave a man to die," said Casement, "and I wish I could save you." Gen. Carter fell mortally wounded before reaching the Federal battle line. Gen. Stahl reached the ditch; he stood on the bodies of the dead and gave commands and rallied his men.

Not a hundred yards away lay Gen. Granbury, dead. He died leading the brave Texans to the works. A minute more and Gen. Carter and Gen. Stahl fell, both mortally wounded. Twelve Confederate generals were either dead or wounded; colonels were commanding divisions, captains were commanding brigades. More generals were killed in that six hours' struggle in front of that little Tennessee town than were killed in the two days' fight at Chickamauga, or the three days' fight at Gettysburg, where three times as many soldiers were in the hell of battle.

The struggle closed at midnight—

Wrote Gen. Hood—

when the enemy, under orders, fell back on Nashville.

There were 47 Union dead, beside the wounded, in the little front yard of the Carter House alone, and they lay around the breastworks from river to river. Outside the breastworks in a wider line from river to river—a wider and thicker line—lay the Confederate dead. Amid the smoke and grime of battle, and under the dun clouds of battle smoke almost hiding the stars, the Blue and the Gray lines looked the same. I stood upon the parapet just before midnight and saw all that could be seen. I saw and heard all that my eyes could see, or my rent soul could contemplate in such an awful environment.

It was a spectacle to appall the stoutest heart. A Nashville poet wrote:

Ten thousand men, when the warfare was o'er,
Lay on the battlefield crimsoned in gore.

The wounded, shivering in the chilled November air; the heart-rending cries of the desperately wounded, and the prayers of the dying, filled me with an anguish that no language can describe. From that hour to this I have hated war. I was colonel, commanding the One hundred and eleventh Ohio, just to the right of the old cotton gin, and just in front of that grove of black locusts, described by John Trotwood Moore. Early in the fight Col. Lowrey, of the One hundred and seventh Illinois, was killed, which left me the ranking officer of the battle line of the brigade, which I commanded to the end of the struggle.

The well-known war correspondent Loomis, "writing" of this battle field, said:

I have seen many battle fields, but never saw evidences of so terrible a conflict as I saw in front of the position of the One hundred and eleventh Ohio Infantry. I counted 12 locust trees in one cluster that were almost shot off with musket balls. How men could be prevailed upon to charge and recharge against such a wall of fire, I can not understand.

The Nashville Times of December 3, three days after the battle, printed the following editorial:

The One hundred and eleventh Ohio Infantry, Col. SHERWOOD commanding, was exposed to the shock of the fierce charges at Franklin, and stood firm with signal valor. Its losses were very severe. Of its officers, Lieuts. Bennett and Curtis were killed, Maj. McCord was severely wounded, Capts. Southworth and Dowling were very severely wounded, also Lieuts. Baker, Beery, and Kintigh.

In officers and men my regiment suffered more fatalities than any regiment in the Union Army. Franklin was Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON'S last battle. It was his last of over 30 battles, and in every one he was always at the front.

As a soldier Gen. GORDON was the peer of any officer who wore the gray or who ever drew a sword along a battle line.

As a bronzed and grizzled old soldier who fought on the other side, I esteem it an honor to be called upon to-day to pay my humble tribute to Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON, of heroic memory. None knew him well but to love him; none knew his record of civic achievements but to praise. In the beautiful cemetery at Memphis all that is mortal of our honored friend sleeps well. Every recurring year, with the birth of the glowing May, gentle hands will scatter the choicest flowers over his grave in grateful recognition of his wholesome Christian life and in honor of his name and fame. And above the green sod where our hero sleeps the snowy magnolia will diffuse a sweeter balm, and the wild passion flower, winding its sweet tendrils above the waving grasses, will gather tears beneath the stars and shed them in the sunlight.

On Memorial Day in 1867 a patriotic group of splendid southern women, at Columbus, Miss., scattered flowers upon the graves of Confederate and Union soldiers alike. This was the inspiration for one of the finest poetic gems in the literature of patriotism. It is entitled "The Blue and the Gray," by Francis Miles Finch. I quote the last stanza:

No more shall the war cry sever
Or the winding rivers be red.
They banish our anger forever,
When they laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day—
Under the roses the Blue,
Under the lilies the Gray.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to have known Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON personally but a little more than two years prior to his death, in August, 1911. I first met him when I entered Congress, in March, 1909, at which time he was just beginning his second term as the Representative from the tenth congressional district of Tennessee, but, while I had known him for so short a time, it is a source of peculiar pride and great gratification to me that we became warm personal friends. He was my good friend, a fact which he demonstrated in more than one instance, and I loved him dearly for his many noble qualities of mind and soul.

Others have spoken and will speak, Mr. Speaker, of his activities and his accomplishments in life, of his long and highly honorable career in varied fields of endeavor and of usefulness to the community in which he lived, to his State, his beloved Southland, and his country. It is not my purpose, therefore, to do more than to briefly refer to the record of his life and his achievements. Its history shows that he was always gentle and kind, loyal and brave, faithful and true, whether as a private citizen, the superintendent of schools, charged with the responsible task of educating the youth of his splendid home city, the soldier and the general leading his troops in the very thickest of the fray on the field of battle, or as a national lawmaker commissioned by his people to represent them in the Halls of Congress.

Gen. GORDON lived a long and useful life. He held at various times many important positions of honor and responsibility. He filled all of them with credit and distinction to himself and with entire satisfaction to those whom he served. He was very fond of referring to his service as superintendent of the city schools of Memphis, and was particularly proud of the friendship shown him by his former pupils, many of whom had reached the age of manhood and womanhood when he was first elected to Congress. The daily association and intimate relationship existing between schoolmaster and pupil affords the very best opportunity for forming a just and accurate estimate of each other's character. The young mind is not swayed by motives of jealousy, prejudice, or personal interest, and while it is swift to detect a weakness it is equally quick to observe and give proper credit to the firm and strong character, and the impressions thus formed last throughout a lifetime. The pupils of the city schools of Memphis during Gen. GORDON'S service as superintendent had every opportunity to know Gen. GORDON, and they loved him for his kindly and generous nature, his fidelity of purpose, his lofty character, and his sterling worth. I have heard him say, with evident pride, that his election to this body was due, in a large measure, to their personal friendship and devotion.

But, Mr. Speaker, of all the positions held by him, he was by far most proud of the position of commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans, a position to which he had been twice elected by his old comrades in arms, and which he held at the time of his death. He had enlisted in the Confederate Army as a private; he had endured the privations and shared all of the dangers of the Confederate soldier; step by step he had risen in rank until, by reason of his courage and gallantry on many a battle field, he was made a brigadier general in the service; and it would have been strange indeed if he had not considered his election as commander in chief of the Confederate Veterans by his old comrades the crowning honor and glory of his life. And, Mr. Speaker, his election was a just tribute to the man and the soldier. It was an honor well deserved, for he had shared the perils of the Confederate soldier and bared his breast to the storm of bullets in nearly every battle of the Georgia and Tennessee campaigns, including Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peachtree Creek, Atlanta, and at Franklin, where he led his men charging across the parapets of the Federal troops and into the very jaws of death.

Gen. GORDON was fond of talking about the events of the Civil War, but the modesty of the man was such that he rarely referred to his own personal experiences, unless specifically asked to do so. Some time before his death I was present at a dinner at the home of Secretary of War Dickinson, when our host asked him to relate the part which he played in the fierce conflict at Franklin, the bloodiest battle of the Civil War. I recall how embarrassed he seemed and how loath he was to speak of himself. I remember that he passed over his own heroic conduct in a few words, but dwelt at length on the heroism shown by his men, not forgetting to pay a generous tribute to the courage and gallantry of their antagonists.

He firmly believed in the righteousness of the cause for which he and his brave brethren of the South fought. He never surrendered his convictions that he and they were right. But there was no bitterness in his heart, nor did any feeling of disappointment linger in his breast. He cheerfully accepted the arbitrament of arms as the decree of God and loved the flag which is at once the protection and the hope of our reunited and common country. He believed that the South was misunderstood. He felt that history, as written, does not fully and faithfully record the events leading up to and the causes which brought about the War between the States, and he feared that future generations might misinterpret the true motives and purposes of the southern people and their leaders in withdrawing from the Union. In speaking of this to me, a short while before his death, he told me that he had for some time been gathering data and materials, and that he was contemplating retiring from Congress at the end of his term, in order to devote the last years of his life to writing a school history which would treat of the events that brought about the war from the standpoint of the South and would place before the young southern generations of the future the true motives which actuated their forefathers.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is truly said that "man proposes but God disposes." Gen. GORDON was not to be permitted to do this work in behalf of his beloved Southland as he had planned. Even as he talked of it the shadow of death was hovering over him, and it was but a few short months until he passed over the river, where he "rests under the shade" with Stonewall Jackson and the long line of heroes on both sides of that great war.

One of the most striking characteristics of Gen. GORDON'S life was his intense devotion to duty. I will always believe that this high sense of duty hastened his end. For nearly a year prior to his death his health was poor, and at times he was barely able to attend to his official duties. Representing a district having a combined city and country population, his work was always heavy, and notwithstanding his failing health and enfeebled condition, night after night found him at his desk attending to his correspondence and the other manifold duties which his position devolved upon him. It was this sense of duty, as well as the pleasure of renewing associations with his old comrades, which carried him, in his enfeebled state of health, to the Confederate reunion at Little Rock in May, 1911,

He became critically ill while there, but as soon as he was able to travel he journeyed back to Washington, where during the sweltering days of June and July he remained at his post of duty, despite the entreaties of friends that he go to some health resort and try to recuperate his fast-failing strength. But he remained until sheer weakness forced him to leave, and it was but a few days thereafter when his colleagues learned that he had quietly passed away in his home at Memphis in the arms of his gentle and grief-stricken wife and surrounded by the friends he loved. On the occasion of his funeral many thousands of men, women, and children lined the streets along which passed the funeral cortege, in which the chief place of honor was given to the beloved survivors of those who wore the gray. Thousands followed the remains to Elmwood Cemetery, and there amid the luxuriant foliage and under nature's green covering the statesman, the soldier, and the citizen was laid away to rest until the final summons on resurrection morn.

Who will deny, Mr. Speaker, that a life such as Gen. GORDON lived has its recompense, not only in this world but also in the great beyond? To those who were privileged to know him his life will serve as a shining example of all that is true and noble. The immortelles of memory, which fade not in a day like the flower culled from the garden, will cluster around his kind deeds and noble life until memory itself is no more. The growing plants, the budding trees, the blossoming flowers, and all creation tell us that the knightly soul of our departed friend and colleague is somewhere and somehow reaping the rich rewards of a well-spent life.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to detail the life work of our lamented colleague, Gen. GEORGE WASHINGTON GORDON. Those who knew him longer and better are qualified to perform that service in a much abler manner than I. My acquaintanceship with him began after his election to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Sixtieth Congress. He became a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and it was as a member of that committee that I learned to know and recognize his splendid abilities as a legislator and to respect and esteem him highly as a man.

He had been a soldier himself and had earned distinguished honors in the Confederate Army. Like all truly brave and generous men, he never bore malice toward a valiant foe. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House he was frequently called upon to pass upon questions affecting men who had fought against him in the giant struggle between the States. In passing upon those questions he was always fair, just, broad-minded. There was nothing that savored of partisanship in his entire make-up. He was on all occasions and at all times the courtly, courteous gentleman; one of that dignified, polished type whom we love to designate as a gentleman of the old school. He was ever ready and willing to perform his whole duty with unswerving devotion to his immediate constituency, his State, and his country. The even-poised balance of justice was constantly his standard of righteousness in all his dealings with his fellow men.

The world is always better for the lives of such men as Gen. GORDON, for the force of good example at all times has a beneficial effect on all mankind. That his friends and neighbors loved, honored, and esteemed him in his lifetime and revered his memory in death was made abundantly manifest on the day of his interment. Thousands of his fellow citizens followed the funeral cortege to the beautiful Elmwood Cemetery in Memphis, where all that was mortal of him sleeps the sleep everlasting. Still other thousands lined the streets through which the solemn procession wended its way. Northern veterans vied with southern veterans in paying their last sad tribute of affection to this quiet, kindly friend and neighbor—this modest yet steadfast tribune of the people. The grief was universal. There was scarcely a dry eye in all that multitude, and as though the heavens themselves had become affected by the genuine sorrow of those who knew and loved him best the gentle raindrops fell upon his grave as the casket in which he was laid to rest was forever covered up from mortal ken.

Mr. Speaker, our lamented colleague has solved the great mystery of life and death. Himself a grand commander of men on this terrestial globe, he has gone before the Celestial Grand Commander of the Universe and all is well with him, while to his bereaved family we say, "Be comforted, for surely ye will meet him again in the great hereafter."

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to pay a brief tribute to the memory of Gen. GORDON, for whom I entertained great respect and esteem.

At an early age he enlisted in the Confederate Army and made a record of gallantry on a dozen bloody battlefields of the Army of Tennessee. Entering the army as a private, he was promoted several times, and at the end of the war he was brigadier general.

He fought at Chickamauga, Murfreesboro, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peachtree Creek, Atlanta, and Franklin. He was captured at Franklin, where his men were the first of the Confederate Army to reach the parapet of the Federal works and pierce the enemy's line, and he was within those lines when made a prisoner.

He took a very prominent part in that great battle. In describing it afterwards he said: "The booming of cannon, the bursting of bombs, the rattle of musketry, the shrieking of shells, the whizzing of bullets, the shouting of hosts, and the falling of men in their struggle for victory, all made a scene of surpassing terror and awful grandeur."

The war ended, he returned home to take up the duties of life. He bowed to the decree of war, probably feeling—

So be it then! We may not say
Whether this thing be worst or best,
But God knows, let it rest.
Yea, let it rest, and in our place
Let each do well some worthy deed
Whereof the sickly world has some need.
So much, no more, our hands can do.
So much, then, let us do, and wait,
Though bitter be the heart's debate.

I doubt not that his life has been an inspiration, a benediction, to many a youth who knew him and came in contact with him.

He was of the class who concern themselves with benefiting rather than condemning.

He was one of those who do right with compelling insistence and are not even afraid that they may do wrong—a malady none too seldom found among those who are not sure of their approaches, who distrust themselves and stand with reluctant feet, holding action in subjection, on the very threshold of duty.

He was a success because he followed principle through light and darkness.

He had an intense "love for justice and hatred of iniquity."

He was a disciple of wisdom, and loved humanity, his country, and his God.

He was not a mere moralizing moralist, who dreams or deals in abstractions and mourns because the world is not better, but he was an acting, potential moralist who improved and purified the concrete activities of life.

He was human and probably made mistakes, but, if so—

He erred, and was sorry; but never drew
A trusting heart from the pure and true.
When friends look back from the years to be,
God grant they may say such things of me.

He maintained at all times that dignity that is indicative of the trained soldier.

He always bore himself as becomes the high-minded, courteous southern gentleman of the old school. Kindness was the fruit, courtesy the flower of his character. From these cordial sentiments "spring blossoms and flowers of spiritual beauty that are captivating ornaments to the person and exhale an atmosphere of refinement and tenderness wherein the harsher self is soothed into disinterestedness and devotion."

He has passed from us; but he had done a large labor and it was done in full manhood and good faith. May we profit by his life and emulate his example.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Speaker, when I entered the first session of the Sixtieth Congress in February, 1908, I found Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON representing the tenth district of Tennessee. He had entered Congress at the beginning of the session while I came in to fill a vacancy in February.

Boarding at the same hotel, I soon became acquainted with him. He was a reserved man, very quiet, but of a social disposition. He was a very hard worker and much devoted to the interests of the people of his district and of the Southland. He was faithful in attendance on the sessions of the House, and then worked late at night attending to his correspondence and in the preparation of his work for the next day. He was very popular in his home town. I attended his funeral at Memphis, and I think I never saw such universal respect as was paid to him by all classes of people. Business was almost universally suspended and silence seemed to pervade the city, which bespoke the genuine feeling of sorrow as evidenced by his friends and neighbors.

At the time of Gen. GORDON'S death he was the commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans, an organization of veteran soldiers. He had been many times reelected. His comrades evinced such loyalty to his memory, such respect for his many virtues as belonged only to the brave and courageous.

Gen. GORDON attained the rank of major general, I think, in the Confederate Army; was wounded in battle; taken prisoner at Franklin; and was not released until after the close of the war in 1865. But unmindful of the misfortunes of war, he set the example and went to work manfully to build up the waste places. How well he and his comrades succeeded in doing this is evidenced by the prosperity of the South to-day. No section of the country, notwithstanding the fearful destruction of war, has builded up more rapidly than the South.

Gen. GORDON will be missed. His family will miss him at the fireside when the shades of evening gather around. His colleagues in Congress will miss his quiet, gentle influence on the passage of bills for the benefit of his section and for the benefit of the country.

When a good man dies,
Whose nobleness succeeds
To bless the many needs
And cheer the heart that bleeds
With high, unselfish deeds;
We can not count the cost,
Nor reckon what we've lost,
When a good man dies.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, peculiar interest attaches to the memory of our departed friend, for the last of the Confederate brigadiers left Congress when GEORGE W. GORDON joined his comrades who wore the gray in the great struggle of 50 years ago. His death ends an epoch.

The coming of the Confederate brigadier to the Congress of the United States in 1873 made a political sensation. It was the beginning of a new chapter in the history of our country and was the first outward and visible sign of the restoration of the Union, to accomplish which the most prodigal expenditure of blood and treasure known to the annals of government had been made. The war was over, and the readmission of the Southern States to a share in government was actually begun.

The restoration of government in the South to those best qualified to administer it brought the ex-Confederate forward. It was the most natural and reasonable thing in the world that men who had been leaders in war would, because they possessed the quality of leadership, be also the captains of a political movement that demanded the same sort of wisdom, patience, and courage.

No man from the South has ever had cause to blush for their appearance in this Hall or for their conduct while here.

This is hardly an appropriate occasion for historical review; but just to show the reason for the appearance in Congress of such men as Gen. GORDON, I will mention one or two things in connection with the affairs of the South. Promptly after the close of the War between the States came reconstruction, a horror that we would like to forget; then reenfranchisement, for which we were and are grateful; and then, the way being opened by the restoration of citizenship to the whites of the South, the Confederate brigadier made his appearance in this or the other Chamber.

Why should they not have come? They had been gallant and loyal men in arms; they were honest and frank in politics. Their worth had been proven in the crucible of war, and of course their people trusted them. The protest against their appearance as Senators and Representatives, made as part of the play of partisan politics, went unheeded, at least in the South, and their records have justified the confidence that was given them.

If one will look over the directories of the Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, and Fortieth Congresses, he will find after the names of certain States the word "vacant." In the Fortieth Congress, in some instances, the word "vacant" had been replaced with the names of strangers. I forbear to say more than that one will look in vain in the list of southern Representatives and Senators of that period for the names of citizens of the Commonwealths that they claimed to represent who were in any way associated with their history in purer and happier days.

Not until the Forty-first Congress had convened was there even nominally a full representation in Congress from those States that were the Southern Confederacy. It was in the Forty-third Congress, elected in 1872, the real people of the South being again in possession of their local and State governments, that the man who had risked his life for and with them made his appearance in Washington as Representative in one house or the other. Their names are nearly all found on the South's roll of honor. Their lives make the proudest chapters in our history of the last 50 years.

There were, among others, Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, a great statesman; John B. Gordon, the soldier whose natural ability supplied the lack of training and made him an eminent commander; and Norwood and Ransom. These were soon followed by Reagan, Mills, Maxey, Culberson, and other distinguished figures of the Southern Confederacy from Texas. Virginia and Alabama, so rich in those jewels that made Cornelia a boaster, sent their best, as everyone will admit who had the privilege of knowing Morgan, Pettus, and Daniel. There was Lamar, of Mississippi, who was a great figure in the actual shock of battle and who also won proud eminence as legislator, academician, and jurist. There was Cockrell, whose dash and gallantry as a soldier was hardly suspected by his colleagues, who only knew him as a persistent, painstaking Senator. Then there were Vance, of North Carolina, of cheerful and blessed memory; Butler, of South Carolina; Harris, of Tennessee, in whom high character and perfect courtesy were so well combined; Walthall—the knightly Walthall—of Mississippi; and Bate, of Tennessee, the hero of two wars. An estimate of their characters may be confidently left to the impartial writer of history. The whispers of slander did not disturb them. There was no suspicion of dishonesty, no taint of graft, attaching to them. They may not all have been great statesmen, but they were never excelled in the essential traits of manliness. They were brave, honest, truthful, courteous, and gentle. What more can one ask or expect?

My own career in Congress is not a very long one, but it takes me back to a personal acquaintance with a few of the Confederate brigadiers who were then in service. When I came I found here Morgan and Pettus, of Alabama, both of whom wrote their names so large in the affairs of the country that many generations will come and go before they are effaced; McEnery, of Louisiana, major general in the Confederacy and later so signally honored by his State; Walthall, Catchings, and Hooker, of Mississippi; Mills, of Texas; Daniel, of Virginia; and Bate, of Tennessee. It was indeed a privilege and pleasure to know these heroes of a great war who did not whine in adversity or declaim against fate.

Our dear friend whose memory we are now honoring was a worthy successor to the great men that I have just referred to. The high standard they made he measured up to. The traditions they left were not dimmed or dishonored in his person and service. As a soldier his career was without blemish; as a citizen he was repeatedly and persistently honored by his people, and when he died his neighbors at home and here were sincere mourners.

He put nothing into his brief and modest biography for the Directory that was not essential, and one can only get a hint of his exciting and picturesque life by reading it.

It appears that he had military training; that when the War between the States came he was made drillmaster of the Eleventh Tennessee Infantry, and that with that organization he went into the service of the Confederacy. He was gradually promoted from the grade of captain up to and including that of brigadier general. This we learn from the brief biographical sketch in the Directory, but we do not learn there that each promotion was earned by gallant and meritorious service on the field of battle, nor that he had the star of a general officer on his shoulder before his beard had fully grown. He missed no engagements in which his regiment had a part unless in hospital with wounds or in prison.

I remember that on one occasion the Committee on Military Affairs was hearing some citizens of Tennessee who wanted a park made of the Franklin battle field. They knew of the fight there only by tradition, and the account they gave of it, while interesting, as the story of one of the bloodiest engagements of the whole Civil War must be, differed little from the written descriptions accessible to every committeeman.

It was suggested by some one that Gen. GORDON had been in that battle, and he was asked to tell the story. He did so. With modesty and with scant reference to his own part in it he told us of the Battle of Franklin. His story was simple and graphic. He did not exaggerate the courage of his own side or disparage that of the enemy. But no member of the committee who heard his description of that great fight between their countrymen will ever forget it or him. Few of them knew that the modest—almost shrinkingly modest—gentleman who sat with them from day to day, engaged in the discharge of commonplace duties, was one of the heroes of a great war. They knew him as a man of extreme courtesy and winning gentleness of manner. They knew he was no swashbuckler; they did not know he was a paladin.

One had only to meet GEORGE W. GORDON to respect him. To know him was to love him.

Gen. GORDON was an earnest supporter of the movement for world-wide peace through arbitration. I have heard him plead eloquently for arbitration. He knew from hard experience the unreason of war. As a statesman and Christian he appreciated the advantages of peace. He was invariably found on the side of right and justice, and he leant toward mercy always.

It is not likely that ever again will a Confederate brigadier be seen or heard in the American Congress. It is gratifying to every southern man to know that the last Confederate GORDON was a credit to the first; that the standard of honesty and honor, if they be distinguishable, set up by his comrades who preceded him was maintained to the end. Peace to his ashes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Gen. GEORGE WASHINGTON GORDON was limited to less than three years, and yet so deep was the impression this strong, brave, gentle character made upon me during this brief period that I am unwilling to let this occasion pass without bringing here just a few words of affectionate regard for him.

Though I was born in the same State where he lived and did his life's work, it was not my good fortune to meet or know him until the beginning of the Sixty-first Congress. The fact of my birthplace being in Tennessee soon brought me to know all the Representatives of that State, and as Gen. GORDON and myself were assigned to membership on the same great committee of this House the opportunity for closer acquaintance and friendship was presented. It is cause for genuine satisfaction to me that the opportunity was improved.

Naturally much of our conversation turned upon the stirring times of the Civil War. It was my lot to be born after that unhappy strife had ended, but in a region whose people had suffered much loss of life and property and whose lands had been devastated by the armies of both sides to the conflict impartially. Hence from my earliest youth I had been thrilled by much of the story from my parents and other older friends who had lived through that period. Gen. GORDON had not only lived through those times but had been a prominent and potent participant. It was, therefore, a rare treat for me to hear him on this subject. His well-known and unusual modesty made it somewhat difficult to draw him out, especially as to the part he played in the struggle. Once in a while, however, when only a few members of the committee happened to be together informally, he could be induced to unbosom himself. I shall never forget his vivid description of the Battle of Franklin, to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has just referred. As he described that awful scene of carnage and death the intervening years seemed to fade out, and it was as if we were actually living through it. We could see the brigade commanded by Gen. GORDON as it charged the Federal breastworks, the bullets hailing and the onrushing lines of his brave men thinning until the survivors reached the very ditch in front of the earthworks. They had literally fought to the last ditch, and there he and a few of his men, within a rifle's length of the enemy, were overwhelmed and captured.

Knowing his extreme gentleness of manner and sweetness of character, it was sometimes difficult to think of him as a valiant warrior, but those of us who were fortunate enough to hear his description of the Battle of Franklin will never doubt his presence on that bloody field nor the gallant part he played there.

Just one other point in Gen. GORDON's character, quite in accord with what has already been said, was his magnanimity toward Union soldiers. The Committee on Military Affairs has to consider an endless number of bills for the relief of soldiers from the consequences of actual or technical violations of military law, orders, and regulations. Whenever there was reasonable doubt as to whether actual blame rested upon a soldier, Gen. GORDON's voice was always for leniency, and more especially so if the record of the soldier for long service and brave conduct proved to be good. Such generosity to a one-time foe, while not unusual among those who really fought the battles of that great war, is as beautiful as it is inspiring.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not on this occasion attempt to outline the life and career of Gen. GORDON or to call attention even to notable and heroic events connected with his life, although there were so many. The annals of the times furnish a history of his career. I come only to pay my tribute of love and respect to his memory and to voice my sorrow that he is no more. My acquaintance with him began with the assembling of the Sixtieth Congress, and I was in close contact with him from that period until the end came to him. As my knowledge of the man became more and more intimate from day to day my admiration and reverence for him grew step by step. With steady purpose and an unfaltering adherence to his convictions he pursued the even tenor of his way without hesitation. He was inspired always with a sublime faith and intense conviction, and his course never wavered in his adherence to his faith and conviction of right. With ready will and determined purpose he met every duty, and no influence was strong enough, and no fear of effect upon his personal and political fortune strong enough, to cause him to falter. With a courage that was sublime, he met every issue and discharged every duty. His record as a soldier is one of which a nation can be proud. His spirit was as gentle and as kind as the dove, and his courage in war was strong as that of the lion. In the discharge of his duties as a civilian and as a public official he possessed the same high courage and indomitable will to stand for and to advocate the righteous cause. He was an aggressive foe to political corruption in every form, and he did not hesitate to take upon himself the responsibility of antagonizing evil practices of every kind and to openly and steadfastly fight to suppress every effort to corrupt or demoralize the political practices of his day and time. I have seen him cast votes as a Member of this House that required great courage, and he always had that courage to cast his vote according to his conviction of the right.

It might be said that he was a type of the old school, but in no sense did he linger amid the ruins of the past or did he pine for departed institutions. At the end of the Civil War, when the South—

> Dropped from her nerveless grasp the shattered spear,
> Closed her bright eye and curbed her high career—

he accepted the decree of battle and met living issues with his face set toward the future, determined in every condition to work and to labor for the interest of his people and the success of the right. He kept abreast of the times and with a willing hand was ready to do his part in every struggle that involved the interest of his country and the elevation of his people.

The honors conferred upon him by the survivors of that cause to which he devoted his service and his life in his younger days attest how much his comrades honored and loved him. The positions of honor and trust to which he was assigned by his people in his latter years bespeak the trust they placed in him. Those who knew him believed in him and loved him, and his public record bears high evidence that their trust and affection was not misplaced. As a Member of this House he commanded the absolute confidence of all, and his death is mourned in affectionate remembrance.

I was a member of the funeral party that conducted his remains to his beloved State and home, and as the funeral procession passed along the streets of Memphis the streets were filled for miles with mourning and weeping friends and constituents. It was a tribute that spoke unmistakably of the love his people bore him.

In his case "the hand of the Reaper took the ear that was hoary," still the harvest might have been delayed but for his indefatigable energy and perseverance in laboring for his constituents. Few Members of the House devoted so many hours each day to the service of their people, and, no doubt, he would have been spared longer but for his unremitting toil. But his life was complete, his work well done, and the harvest was ready. It has been said that "He lives longest who does most good deeds," and, measured by this standard, his career reached a limit among the longest. It is a priceless treasure to have known such a man, and a blessing to a country to have the service of such a one, and a jewel in Tennessee's crown of glory that he was one of her sons.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, during the past four years Tennessee has lost three of its great public men who were Members of Congress, namely, Hon. Walter P. Brownlow, of Jonesboro, who died July 8, 1910; Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON, of Memphis, who died the 9th day of August, 1911; and Senator Robert L. Taylor, of Nashville, who died March 31, 1912. The people of the State, regardless of political affiliations, loved, trusted, and honored these three men. This was not only proven by their long and continuous public service, but there was still stronger evidence of it when the people paid their last loving tribute to them. These three men rendered great and invaluable service to the people of Tennessee, who will ever love and cherish their memories. They were very much alike in make-up and in disposition. They were kind, generous, tender, and genial. They were devoted to the interests of the "Volunteer State." They were unceasing in their efforts to advance and promote the interests of its people. I doubt if any man or woman ever appealed in vain to a single one of these men for a kindness or a favor. They made the world better by having lived in it. They marked out and led careers of goodness and usefulness that it would be well for those of their colleagues left behind to endeavor to follow and to imitate. In Tennessee there were many tear-dimmed eyes, many aching hearts in every county, every city, every hamlet, and away out in the country upon the farms when these three men passed into the great beyond. I met Gen. GORDON, to whose memory we are to-day paying a just and deserving tribute, for the first time upon the organization of the Sixty-first Congress, and our last parting was at the White House on the occasion of President Taft's twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, where he was accompanied by his devoted wife. He had only a short time before returned from the encampment of the Confederate veterans at Little Rock. That long, hot, and tedious journey to far away Arkansas to once more meet and mingle with his old comrades—those who had fought and suffered with him through that long, tragic Civil War; those whom he dearly loved—seemed to completely exhaust his strength and vitality. I recall how tired and weary he looked, and in a few days he was away in the mountains of east Tennessee engaged in his last great fight—the fight for renewed health and life. But the waiting messenger would brook no delay, and he journeyed o'er the pleasant pathway that God had blazed for him to the stars. Gen. GORDON was a true son of Tennessee. He was an honest, just, and good man; a modest, generous, and brave soldier; a kind, loving, and thoughtful husband; and a worthy, industrious, faithful, and efficient public servant.

As the Representative of the southern district which contained more Union people and furnished the largest number of soldiers to the Union or Federal Army than any district south of Mason and Dixon line, I profoundly and sorrowfully regret Gen. GORDON's going.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, when the soul of Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON weighed anchor and sailed serenely out through the mists and shadows into the vast unknown, it was the passing of as brave and chivalrous a spirit as the generations in this Republic have produced. He was mourned and praised throughout the land, and more particularly in those great and gallant Commonwealths to which in the heyday of his life he dedicated himself and for which in battle after battle he struggled with well-nigh reckless abandon. The story of his life is one of decency, of dignity, and of eminent success.

He was born in Giles County, Tenn., October 5, 1836, and was reared chiefly in Mississippi and Texas. In 1859 he graduated from the Western Military Institute, at Nashville, Tenn., an institution at whose head was Bushrod Johnson, a graduate of West Point Military Academy. He had previously received a collegiate education of a high character, but his military training was that which he was first to need, for within less than two years from the time of his graduation the great War of Secession was on. His services were promptly offered to his native State, and he was assigned as drillmaster to the Eleventh Tennessee Infantry Regiment, which had just been organized and was in a camp of instruction at Camp Cheatham, in Robertson County, Tenn. After several weeks of assiduous drill at this point the regiment was transferred to eastern Tennessee. Here Capt. Woodward, of Company I—an Humphreys County, Tenn., company—having resigned, GORDON was elected as captain, in which capacity he served from August 1, 1861, until May 27, 1862, when he was promoted to be lieutenant colonel of the regiment. In November, 1862, he was promoted to be colonel, and August, 1864, he was appointed brigadier general. He assumed command of Vaughn's brigade, Cheatham's corps, Army of Tennessee, and served as such until he was captured, November 30, 1864, at the bloody battle of Franklin, Tenn.

After his capture there he was held as a prisoner of war, most of the time at Fort Warren, Mass., from which place he was released July 24, 1865.

Such is a brief outline of his military record. To fill in this outline and give in detail the record of his services, his struggles, and privations, his bold and magnificent deportment, would be a story as thrilling as that of the knights of old around whom so much of romance and tragedy has been woven. He was in the battles of Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain, all save one of Hood and Sherman's battles around Atlanta and at Jonesboro, Ga., and that at Franklin, as well as innumerable skirmishes. He was thrice wounded, once dangerously, and thrice captured, being twice exchanged. His various promotions were the result not of political influence, but of distinct merit proven in the battle line. He was modest and brave and generous, a knightly man of a knightly land.

Those of us who were privileged to hear him tell his war reminiscences will recall his vividness of style and force of utterance and will also remember with what modesty he referred to his own part in the strife. Gentleness and modesty are characteristics of the brave. It was particularly interesting to hear him tell the story of the awful Battle of Franklin, where there was sustained a percentage of loss on the Confederate side, if I remember correctly, as great as if not greater than in any battle of the war, not excluding Gettysburg.

Gen. GORDON was a true soldier; military tactics and problems appealed to his mind, and his courageous spirit made the conflict a splendid concept to him, though he deplored with all his great heart its awful horrors.

After his release from prison he perfected himself as a lawyer and entered upon the practice in the city of Memphis. I do not know much of him as a lawyer, but it is my impression from what I have heard him say that, while the intellectual side of the law appealed to his mind, the practice was in some respects distasteful.

In 1883 the Legislature of Tennessee passed an act creating a railroad commission, and Gen. GORDON was appointed by Gov. Bate as one of the commissioners. His service upon this was in line with his high and honest character. The powers of the commission were not very great, but within the limit of those powers he rendered honest and efficient service.

In 1885 he was appointed to a position in the Interior Department of the Federal Government and served for four years with honor.

He then returned to Memphis and reengaged in the practice of law until 1892, when he was chosen superintendent of the city schools of Memphis. This was a congenial and delightful work. He brought to it a rich equipment of learning and executive ability, and for 15 years he administered this position with fidelity and to the eminent satisfaction of the people of that great city.

He acquired a plantation of considerable dimensions in the State of Mississippi and took great interest in agriculture, giving it a great deal of personal attention.

In 1906 he was elected as Representative in Congress from the tenth district of Tennessee; was reelected in 1908 and in 1910. He died at Memphis August 9, 1911, in the seventy-sixth year of his life. His service in this body was of the highest character. He was assigned at the beginning of his first term to the great and important Committee on Military Affairs and continued there until the end. His experience as a soldier gave him a practical equipment for this great work, and his industrious habits made him one of its most valuable members.

He was a man of the very highest civic ideals. He made one great speech upon this floor which it is a pity that every child in the Republic can not read. It dealt with the duties of the citizen in his relation to the Government; the duty of good men to participate in governmental affairs. It was saturated with the very highest quality of patriotism and was a most powerful plea and warning.

At the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans in 1910 Gen. GORDON was elected as their commander in chief, an honor which he prized perhaps more highly than any of the many that were paid him. He succeeded Gen. Clement A. Evans in that position. Gen. Evans died in July, 1911, and I remember that on the 4th of July I visited Gen. GORDON at his room in his hotel in this city when he was confined by the illness which led to his death, and found him sitting up in his bed preparing the order to be sent out announcing the death of his distinguished predecessor. It was one of Gen. GORDON's peculiarities that he never dictated to a stenographer. All letters he wrote himself in long hand and then turned them over to his secretary to copy on the typewriter. He said his mind would not work right dictating.

The order which he prepared on the death of Gen. Evans was a model of beautiful English, in the use of which Gen. GORDON was so very excellently gifted.

On the 5th of July he arose from his sick bed, over the protest of his physician, and went to the White House to see the President about the appointment of a young gentleman from his district to the Naval Academy, a young Jewish lad in whom he was especially interested.

This was, I think, probably his last official act. He left that evening or the next for Tate Springs, Tenn., where he remained until about three days before his death, when, realizing that the end was near, he asked to be carried to his beloved city to die. Arriving there on the 7th or 8th he grew gradually weaker and lapsed into unconsciousness. Late in the afternoon of the 9th he opened his eyes for an instant, and murmured, "Send other couriers, those may be killed," closed his eyes once more, and passed over to join Lee and Jackson and Forrest and all the long line of the Southland's distinguished and beloved dead.

He was a victim of fidelity to duty. He insisted upon attending the reunion of his comrades at Little Rock in May, 1911, when he was reelected as their commander in chief. He was then stricken and for several weeks was confined to his room. As soon as he felt at all able to make the trip he insisted upon returning to Washington, saying that his duties lay here. The intense heat of the city soon broke down his strength, which he could never recover.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, to insert here the tribute which was paid him when the news of his death reached this city, by another great and beloved Tennesseean, who has himself since passed into the mysterious land of shadows, the late Senator Robert L. Taylor. He said:

I have known Gen. GORDON ever since I was a boy, but I only became acquainted with him when I entered the Senate. Before then I only knew him as one of the South's bravest and knightliest soldiers of the Civil War. He never knew fear, either in battle or in peace. He never knew how to be false to his principles or to his people. He was as noble a man as ever lived or died. His death is a calamity to his State and to the South, but we can not bring him back to life again, for he has crossed over the river to rest with Stonewall Jackson "under the shade of the trees."

I loved him for his courage, for his honor, and for his loyalty to his people. He was one of the most industrious men in the Congress of the United States, and was always conscientious in the discharge of every duty. My heart goes out to his sweet wife, who graced Washington with her splendid accomplishments and her beautiful life. Peace to his ashes.

He was, sir, a great, good, clean-souled gentleman. He sought his country's honors that he might serve his country's good. As soldier, lawyer, administrator, educator, legislator he wrought well in this world of men. I shall close with the quotation with which he closed his tribute to Gen. Evans. I know of none better or more apropos:

Though his feet were in the dust, his eyes were on the stars.

[Mr. HULL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON was for many years my warm personal friend, and it gives me a melancholy but sincere pleasure to bear testimony on this occasion to his splendid worth as a man, his fine character as a citizen, his bearing as a soldier, and his conspicuous ability as a public servant.

He was born in Giles County, in the middle division of Tennessee, and spent his early life there in part and part in Texas. He was educated in the Western Military Academy in Nashville, from which institution he graduated in 1859. This institution gave a military training similar to that received at the National Military Academy at West Point. After graduation young GORDON took up civil engineering and was thus engaged when the Civil War broke out in 1861. In June, 1861, he enlisted in the service of the State of Tennessee and was drillmaster of the Eleventh Tennessee Infantry Regiment, but was soon transferred with other Tennessee troops to the military service of the Confederacy. He won promotion rapidly, becoming successively captain, lieutenant colonel, colonel, of this regiment, and in 1864 was made brigadier general, and served with that rank until the close of the war. Though captured three times and once dangerously wounded, Gen. GORDON participated in every engagement fought by his command except those at Nashville, Tenn., and at Bentonville, N. C., at which times he was a prisoner at Fort Warren, Mass., where he was held until August, 1865, several months after the war had closed. After his release from prison he studied law, was admitted to the bar, and practiced his profession until 1383, when he was appointed one of the railroad commissioners of Tennessee. In 1885 he was appointed to a position in the Interior Department under President Cleveland, and served during Cleveland's first term. He then returned to Memphis and practiced law until 1892, when he was elected superintendent of public schools of Memphis, which position he held until March 4, 1907, when he became a Member of this House.

He was first made a major general of United Confederate Veterans, and afterwards commander in chief of that organization, and remained in that position until he died.

He was elected to Congress three times by overwhelming majorities, and died during the extra session of 1911, on August 9 of that year.

Gen. GORDON was the last brigadier general of the Confederate States to serve in either branch of Congress. He was, in his service in this House, a connecting link between the old South and the new. In appearance, in manner, in personality, in demeanor he was essentially a Southern gentleman of the old school. In his devotion to his reunited country, in his zeal for its welfare, in his faith in its future, he represented the most progressive southern view and sentiment of to-day.

The most distinguished characteristics of Gen. GORDON's life were his devotion to duty and his great moral and physical courage.

He enlisted into the service of his State because he believed in State sovereignty. He fought for the Confederacy, of which his State became a part, because he believed its cause was just. His record in the war was the most distinguished. At the Battle of Franklin, Tenn., it is stated that he actually rode his horse over the breastworks, wildly cheering his command to follow, in his efforts to annihilate the enemy. He was a soldier all during the war. He never shirked, never faltered, and came out afterwards with a record no one could attack, and with a reputation that no one would think of attacking who had any views of his personal safety.

For in times of peace as well as in war the general was a fighter whenever he believed his cause was just. I recall an incident that shows both his physical and moral courage that happened at the close of his race for the primary nomination for Congress the first time he ran. His district was composed of the county of Shelby, in which the city of Memphis is, and the so-called country counties of Fayette, Tipton, and Hardeman. It was well understood that the country counties were largely for Gen. GORDON, but that Memphis was against him. There were four candidates in the first primary, and Gen. GORDON led by a slight plurality. I was at the time chairman of the committee, and the election was conceded by all the candidates to have been fair.

Under the rules of the primary, the two candidates receiving the largest number of votes were entitled to a run-off, to be held 10 days later. On the day of the first election, I was taken ill and was not allowed to read the papers and did not get out until the day before the election. I found, upon reading the papers, that Gen. GORDON had been beguiled into agreeing to a change in the election officers in the first 10 uptown wards. The plan was that the officers who had been appointed by me had been induced not to serve, and the general's opponents submitted the proposition to him to alternate the officers in these first 10 wards. As soon as I saw the list of these substituted officers I knew that it had been arranged to count the general out. I sent for him and so informed him, though up to that time I had not expected to vote for him, and being absolutely helpless in politics, he at first would not believe it. But soon he became alarmed and agreed to aid me in every way in having his friends on hand and seeing that the election was fair in the wards in which his opponents had chosen the officers. We secured perfect fairness in three of the wards, but in two of them the Gordon men were forcibly ejected from the wards, and between 500 and a thousand votes stolen. These fraudulent votes were not sufficient to change the result, as the general had won by a larger majority than this. Immediately all kinds of persuasion was begun to prevent an investigation and prosecution of those who had committed these election frauds, but the general stood his ground on this question of right, just precisely like he stood his ground in war. He was told by hundreds of politicians that if he undertook to prosecute the "ballot-box stuffers" that it would arouse opposition and probably encompass his defeat. He said that he would rather be defeated and prosecute those who had wronged the ballot box than to win by winking at the crime. He went with me before the grand jury and afterwards before the criminal court, and the men were convicted and duly sentenced and punished in jail. Since that time I do not believe it has ever been seriously charged that we have had an unfair election in the city of Memphis. Before that time charges of unfairness were rife at all elections. Thus he aided in accomplishing what I consider one of the greatest reforms that could have been accomplished for our people, namely, a belief in the purity of the ballot box and a practice in accordance therewith.

It was in this same election that some young fellow in one of the uptown wards said something disrespectful to the general as he came by, and before the young fellow knew what had happened to him the old general had landed him on his face and put him out of business. He did not carry that ward, but he had the respect of the man that he knocked down and all of his friends so long as he lived. Excited politicians were very careful in Memphis after that about the way they spoke of the general.

He was formerly connected with our public schools and accomplished a great work in connection therewith. He was an indefatigable worker. He was a highly educated and well-read man. He took a great pride in the schools, and he was in great demand on the lecture platform on all subjects pertaining to education.

But Gen. GORDON was essentially a product of the Civil War. The themes of that great struggle were the dominant themes of his life. Educational matters had a great interest for him; business affairs took up much of his time, for he was a man not slothful in business and accumulated quite a competency. Political affairs were also of great interest to him, and especially when he was a candidate for office, as was perfectly natural. Social affairs had a great attraction for him and he was popular in all matters of a social nature. Personal friendship was strong with him and he had many warm personal friends; but all of these things were even of a secondary consideration with him. The great strife between the States had for him ever a vital, strong, and passionate interest. He would postpone any educational matter, he would break any social engagement, he would stop any business transaction, he would even lay aside political endeavor in order to make a speech to any gathering of comrades at arms upon any question pertaining to the war. Yet, notwithstanding his great interest in that great struggle, he was not embittered by it. He believed in it and believed in it strong. I think he kept that belief until he died. Yet the belief and his devotion to it did not make for him unkind feelings toward those whom he had fought in that struggle. Quite the contrary. He had the highest admiration for the men who really did fight on the other side. When he came to Congress he sought out those on the other side that he knew had taken a noble part in the fight. He liked to be with them, he liked to recount experiences, and, I believe, next to his own family and comrades at arms, he loved those who had fought against him more than any other body or class of men in the world.

Gen. GORDON was the last brigadier general of the Confederate Army to serve in this House, and he served here with conspicuous ability and fidelity. He was never a timeserver, he was never a politician, but, rather, a straightforward, honest, sincere gentleman. And men on both sides knew always exactly where to place him. He knew no way that was not honorable. He knew no motive that was not honest. He knew no politics that were not straightforward politics. He knew no rule of conduct that was not honorable and just. It indeed may be said that he belonged to an age and generation that had passed away—to an era of our national life that is no more. It may be said that he belonged to a school of gentlemen with ideas and views that are now out of date. But, in my judgment, no man who knew him and knew his kind but must say that the world is the loser if it is progressed beyond the kind of man that Gen. GORDON was.

The great esteem in which Gen. GORDON was held was shown by the vast concourse that attended his funeral in Memphis. The entire city lined the streets along which the funeral procession passed. Flags were at half-mast; the schools turned out in a body.; Confederate and Federal veterans came from many States; and he was buried beneath a pyramid of flowers, shrouded in a Confederate flag. It was a great tribute to a great man.

I want to say it gives me great pleasure and it will give my people great pleasure to know that among those who have taken part in the exercises to-day, are not only those who were his comrades in this period of his life which meant most to him and to them, not only those of his own political faith, but that we have here many of those who fought against him in that memorable contest and those who opposed him politically. It is a great tribute to him and one which his family, his friends, and his State will greatly appreciate.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, those who have preceded me have so tenderly and so eloquently portrayed the noble attributes of the character of our late distinguished colleague, Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON, that I shall not detain the House long to add to what has been said. So beautifully have those who have preceded me spoken that I could not add materially to their tributes to his memory.

As the cycle of the years turn, one by one we drop out, one by one we lay down our labors and cease our toil. Time and time again we repeat in this Hall the sad service we are performing here to-day to pay a just tribute of respect and homage to the memory and to the faithful service of a colleague who has gone before. Gen. GORDON was a magnificent man, a man of splendid character. When I say magnificent, I do not mean dazzling, but I mean magnificent and splendid in the possession of those robust qualities and attributes of character that constitute and make up the real, genuine, substantial man, the man whose life work adds to the sum total of service in life, the man whose labors contribute to the happiness of the people, whose life is such that he draws himself to others and draws others to him, so that they can get together in those close relations; that as they touch elbows they can feel the touch of human sympathy, and as they clasp hands they can feel the throb of human kindness and human love that pulsates in the heart and makes the generous soul.

Gen. GORDON was a reticent man, a man of modest reserve. He did not thrust himself immodestly into affairs. He did not seek to advertise himself. He did not boast of his accomplishments. But with that becoming modesty, that reserve, that reticence that mark always the demeanor of the life of a true gentleman—a gentle man—Gen. GORDON moved with a quiet, dignified reserve that commanded the respect and the reverence of every man who loved nobility of character and admired high-mindedness of purpose.

Gen. GORDON was a brave man. He was brave morally, and that is the highest type of bravery—that courage that reenforces conduct, that courage that maintains convictions, that courage which supports character, that courage which marks the real, genuine man—the moral courage of belief and of conviction.

Gen. GORDON was a positive man. With all of his modesty, with all of his reserve, with all of his reticence, I do not think I ever knew a man of more positive convictions, a man who believed what he did believe with more firmness and with more substance. He was not afraid of his convictions. He did not seek to hide them. No bushel could conceal his beliefs or his convictions. Frank, open, positive in all the attributes of his character, he despised every element of cowardice and hypocrisy.

He was a man of great physical courage. I shall not attempt to recite or to rehearse the many honorable incidents in his career on the field of battle, both in facing physical danger and in bearing uncomplainingly the hardships of war. Others have told them far more eloquently, far more impressively, than I can hope or expect to do. But I dare say that in the annals of the Civil War there was no man who participated in it who gave a higher, a stronger, a nobler evidence and illustration of physical courage and undaunted bravery in the face of danger and death than Gen. GEORGE W. GORDON.

He was a lovable man in his quiet demeanor, in his unassuming character, in his gentleness. When you approached him, when you got near to him, when there was fellowship between you, I never knew a man who was more lovable in his character, more tender in his sympathies. He was a man of great compassion, because he had in him a genuine heart. His sympathies were as broad as humanity. He was not pent up and contracted and narrow in his views. His great heart was not prejudiced in ignorance, or in superstition, or in narrowness of conception. He was generous in his feelings toward individuals. He was generous in his conceptions and in his sympathies for humanity. Wherever there was a human being, Gen. GORDON was prepared to say, "He is a part of the brotherhood of man, under the fatherhood of God." Such was the concept of his human sympathy—broad, generous, liberal.

Gen. GORDON was a polite man, a courteous man. Mr. Speaker, I digress a moment to speak a word for politeness, one of the richest attributes of our character. I sometimes think that in these later days of stir and strife and struggle after business affairs, in the turmoil and tumult of the congestion of population, as our industries and businesses have multiplied and increased, individuals have ceased to have that care and attention and, I am almost tempted to say, that reverence and respect for this beautiful attribute of character which we call politeness, the dignified, courteous demeanor of deportment that so characterized and distinguished our ancestors. It marks the difference between the cultured gentleman and the unconcerned, careless individual. May I illustrate it by saying that an individual without politeness, without that courteousness of demeanor, may be a rough, uncouth diamond, but the polite man is the polished diamond. Gen. GORDON was a polished diamond. The attributes of his character were real gems.

Gen. GORDON was a patriotic man. He loved his country. On the field of battle, in the roar of musketry and the thunder of cannon, he proved his devotion to his country and his love of his people and his fidelity to duty as God gave him the power to see it and to know it. A man of his character could not be otherwise than a patriotic man, a man so broad in his concept of patriotism that no part of his country should be subject to bias or prejudice. He loved every section and every portion of this common land of ours. The flag that floated over this country was his flag and the patriotism that it symbolized was his patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, we often say that it is a good thing to be a great man. Just at this point I want to reverse that saying and to emphasize that it is a great thing to be a good man; a man whose life, whose character, whose heart, whose love, whose sympathies are such that they touch humanity, that they mix and mingle in the affairs of men, that they make lives happier, that add something to the betterment and the uplift of our civilization; such a man is a good man.

While it may be a good thing to be a great man, it is certainly true that it is a great thing to be a good man; and such can be said of Gen. GORDON. He was a man of a delicate and refined sense of honor.

But at last he laid off his armor. He ceased to march, he ceased to respond to the bugle call to duty in this life. Life's fitful fever over, he sleeps well. He has passed from among us, and I ask myself the question, Where shall we find him? We followed him to the open grave and deposited the mortal remains and covered them—earth to earth, dust to dust, ashes to ashes. Where is he? I may not be able to mark it on a chart, but I know that wherever the great Creator shall gather together the good, the pure, the noble, the brave, there we shall see and there we shall find Gen. GEORGE WASHINGTON GORDON.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave be granted to all who may desire to print remarks in the RECORD upon the life, character, and services of Gen. GORDON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that Members who desire may extend remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and services of Gen. GORDON. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, in accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted, the House (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, May 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.
